VOL. 25. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 2, 1879. NO. 1.

HAPPY NEW YEAR.

TENNYSON.

Ring out wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light:
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring happy bells across the snow:
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old;
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 25.—The board of medical experts attached to the Yellow Fever Commission have agreed upon the following plan of operations: Drs. Craft and Masher will visit the cities and towns on the Mississippi river between Cairo and New Orleans, Drs. Benias, Green and Clark go to Southern Louisiana, Dr. Milligant to the Gulf Coast, Drs. Cocran, Swearengen and Randle to the inland towns, Dr. Mitchell remains till the sub-committee at this point and will aid them in taking testimony of physicians and then Surgeon Woodward departed this afternoon for New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 28.—Advices from Port au Prince state it is reported that in Port de Paix the river changed its bed and crossed the town, overflowing the principal part of it and destroying many houses and lives. St. Louis Del Nord, located about three miles inland, is said to be entirely destroyed by the flood.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 30.—The Yellow Fever Relief Committee, of this city, has completed its report of contributions of this city to the sufferers in the South during the late epidemic. Total, exclusive of independent contributions of Catholic churches $89,776 98.

A Gazette special says: Rev. Dr. Gould, Female College, at Millersburg, Ky., burned this morning. The students lost their wardrobes.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, Dec. 24.—The steamship City of New York arrived this morning from Vera Cruz, bringing advices from the city of Mexico to the seventeenth instant. On the night of the fourteenth the train for Vera Cruz was attacked by a band of robbers five miles from Puebla. They killed the baggage master, wounded the conductor, and robbed the train of $6,000 in silver.

Justo Benitez, head of the Benitez faction, fell out with Diaz and resigned. The senate has granted Benitez a three months' leave of absence. He will visit Europe.

Congress adjourned on the twenty-seventh instant. The remainder of the session will be important, as many of the

The [illegible] duct for exports into the United Kingdom for the first ten months of this year [illegible] while the imports amounted to $1,556,000,000, [illegible] the value of the exports was made for [illegible]0,000,000. The balance of trade [illegible] the 1878 to the 1st of November [illegible] therefore against Great Britain [illegible] ge amount of $746,000,000. Such a result is a severe drain upon those sources of even a country whose wealth surpasses that of any [illegible]. kingdom of ancient or modern times. Added to this has been a [illegible] of failures continued through four years, and not yet concluded. Indeed, the magnitude of [illegible] involved in the failures [illegible] to be increasing. The volume of trade is greatly reduced, and manufacturing has fallen off to [illegible] or quite one-half of what it was. The result is general and long financial distress, producing great deal of alarm.

Good-Bye and Welcome.

DEAR DOCTOR: When I told our editor good-bye, as he left our Conference-room at Mobile, I did not think I would so soon have to say good-bye to our pastor of 1876, 1877 and 1878; but such is life with us Methodist folks. For three years R. B. Crawford has served faithfully, honestly and acceptably the church in Opelika. He leaves us as a pastor beloved, and fortunate is the community that has Bro. Crawford and his family in their midst.

While our church with reluctance parts with Bro. Crawford, we stand with open hands and hearts to receive his successor, Dr. A. S. Andrews, and, as we say good-bye to one, we say welcome to the other, invoking the blessings of Heaven upon each.

J. H. HARRIS.

Aged Authors.

The life of William Cullen Bryant, prolonged until he was nearly eighty-four, has directed attention to the fact—for it seems to be a fact—that the pursuit of literature is favorable to longevity. A contrary opinion, however, has widely prevailed, owing, no doubt, to the early death of poets like Chatterton, Keats, Kirke White, Byron and Musset. Our most distinguished authors are well on in years. Lowell is almost sixty; Parke Godwin is sixty-two; Holmes is close to sixty-nine; Whittier is seventy; Longfellow, seventy-one; Calvery George Henry, seventy-five; Emerson, seventy-five; George Ripley, seventy-six; Bancroft, seventy-eight; Herman Melville, nearly sixty; Shelton Mackenzie, seventy; Higginson, fifty-five; Parton, fifty-six; Walt Whitman, fifty-nine; Lydia Maria Child, sixty-six; Julia Ward Howe, fifty-nine; Harriet Beecher Stowe, sixty-six, not to mention Gail Hamilton, who is popularly supposed to be two hundred and fifteen. Among the literary Britains are John Ruskin, in his sixtieth year; Charles Reade, over sixty-four; Wilkie Collins, fifty-four; Robt. Browning, sixty-six; Tennyson, sixty-nine; Carlyle, eighty-three; George Eliot, fifty-eight; Coventry Patmore, sixty-five; James Martineaux, seventy-three; and George B. Lewes, sixty-one. While among the literary scientific men Darwin is sixty-nine; Huxley, sixty-three; Tyndall, fifty-eight; and Carpenter, fifty-six. At the head of French literature, sixty-six, is Victor Hugo, seventy-six; Jules Sandeau, sixty-seven; Arsene Houssaye, sixty-three; Emil Augier, fifty-eight; Cherbuliez, fifty-six; Feuillet, fifty-six; and most of the Frenchmen who have achieved a name are from fifty-five to sixty-three. Turgenieff, the Russian novelist, is sixty; Berthold Auerbach, the popular German author of "Village Tales of the Black Forest," is sixty-six. We might go on all over Europe, and show the preservative power of professional exercise in ink. Authors generally have lived far beyond the average in all countries, unless, as in the case of Byron and Musset, they have grossly abused themselves by excesses. As a rule in consequence of sedentary habits and extraordinary use of the brain, they do not have robust health; but they take care of such health as they have—indeed, they are obliged to, in order to accomplish their tasks. Their longevity springs from temperance and sobriety. Now-a-days men of great vanity and moderate talent are dissipated and profligate; but men of remarkable parts are likely to work hard and have good habits, without which, in truth, hard work is impossible.—New York Times.

Dr. Watkins read a memorial from Rev. J. J. Clark, setting forth certain grounds of complaint of maladministration in his case, upon the part of the Quarterly Conference of Brookhaven station, and praying for relief at the hands of the Annual Conference.

Pending the consideration of this matter, the hour having arrived, the Conference adjourned with the benediction.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Conference met at nine o'clock A. M. Bishop Keener in the chair. Religious exercises by H. H. Montgomery.

Minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

J. P. Drake passed, and elected to deacons orders.

Question 1 was taken up: Who are admitted on trial?

John A. Thomas was admitted.

The order of the day for ten o'clock being the report of the Committee on Memoirs, and the hour having arrived, this report was called for.

Bishop Keener introduced this solemn service by reading and singing hymn No. 670.

Dr. Watkins reported a memoir of Rev. B. Pipkin, which was adopted.

T. S. West reported verbally a memoir of James Shanks—a printed memorial had been furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and will be published in the general minutes.

J. T. Heard reported a memoir of Rev. W. Wadsworth, which was adopted.

The committee were instructed to prepare for the general minutes a memoir of Rev. D. A. J. Parker.

As the memoirs were severally reported, very appropriate and affecting remarks were made by W. E. M. Linfield, T. S. West, John A. Ellis, J. T. Heard and B. Jones.

The eighteenth question was taken up. Who are superannuated?

A. B. Stewart, J. G. Jones, W. Spillman, passed and continued in a superannuated relation.

The fourth question was taken up. Who are admitted into full connection?

C. A. Powell, B. F. Jones, T. C. Bradford, J. P. Drake, W. W. Simmons, B. S. Rayner and Inman W. Cooper, were called, and were addressed by the Bishop, as is customary, on the nature and importance of their holy vocation, and required to answer, in the presence of the Conference, the very searching questions propounded in the Discipline of the church; and, on motion, they were severally admitted into full connection.

The Conference then resumed the consideration of the application for appeal by J. J. Clark, on which the Conference adjourned yesterday.

After some discussion of the points of law involved, on motion, the appeal was entertained.

The Bishop appointed the following members of the Conference as a committee of nine to try this appeal, viz: B. Jones, chairman, John G. Jones, R. S. Woodward, H. H. Singleton, W. B. Lewis, T. B. Holloman, R. J. Jones, T. A. Johnston, J. Nicholson, R. Bradley.

Dr. Wilson, missionary secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, then addressed the Conference on the subject of missions.

W. T. Schell was recommended from Tranquil circuit for election to deacons orders in the local ministry, and was elected.

The report of H. F. Johnson, D. D., president of Whitworth College, at Brookhaven, was read and referred to the Committee on Education.

The Committee on Public Worship gave notice of a missionary mass meeting this evening at seven o'clock; Sunday morning at nine o'clock a Sunday-School mass meeting.

F. Ball was discontinued at his own request.

Bishop Keener reported the following ordinations on Sunday.

Traveling deacons: T. C. Bradford, B. S. Rayner, W. W. Simmons, Inman W. Cooper, B. F. Jones, J. Perry Drake.

Local deacons: Isaac L. Peebles, Charles J. Phillips, T. W. Adams, Newton M. Clark, John C. Williams, R. F. Flowers.

Traveling elders: B. Carradine, C. Neel.

Local elders: D. M. Rush.

The first question, Who are admitted on trial? was taken up.

Isaac L. Peebles, recommended from Madison circuit, was admitted.

Question 5 was taken up. Who are re-admitted?

T. W. Brown, George Bancroft, Lyman Carley, David Merchant.

Henry Moore and J. W. Adams were recommended, but not re-admitted.

J. A. Ellis, presiding elder of Meridian district, presented an application for the restoration of the parchments of W. J. Seale. On motion the Conference restored his parchments.

The committee to try the appeal of J. J. Clark reported as follows:

Resolved, That the grounds of appeal in the case of J. J. Clark are deemed insufficient, and the action of the Quarterly Conference of Brookhaven and Wesson be not reversed. Signed, B. Jones, chairman, John A. B. Jones, secretary.

The Committee on the Bible Cause made their report, accompanied with a resolution of co-operation with the Southwestern Bible Society, which was adopted.

Rev. J. A. Ivy, agent of the Southwestern Bible Society, addressed the Conference at length in behalf of the Bible cause.

Rev. J. S. Cooper, of the Cumberland Protestant Church, bearer of a memorial from New Hope Presbytery, of said church, on the subject of the profanation of the Sabbath, was introduced to the Conference, and addressed the Conference at length on the subject matter of the memorial. This memorial was, on motion, referred to the Committee on the State of the Church.

The Joint Board of Finance made their report, which was adopted, and the funds distributed to the several claimants on the Conference funds.

On motion of F. M. Featherston, the Conference authorized any presiding elder, in whose district J. W. Adams may reside, to employ him if his services should be desired.

The hour having arrived, after notices the Conference adjourned with the benediction by the Bishop.

AFTERNOON SESSION, MONDAY, DEC. 23, 1878.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment. Bishop Keener in the chair. Religious exercises by F. M. Williams.

Minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

The secretary of the Conference Missionary Society reported the nominations for a board of managers of the society for the ensuing year, which nominations were approved by the Conference. The board consists as follows: All the presiding elders, and the following ministers and laymen: C. B. Galloway, G. J. Bahin, W. H. Watkins, J. P. Stevens, J. J. Smiley, Irvin Miller, J. T. Heard, C. R. Renchoe, J. L. Forsythe, J. H. Thompson, G. F. Thompson, R. Babington, J. P. Drake and Palmer Smith.

The committee to whom was referred the matter of the date, or rather the age of the Mississippi Conference, made a report substantially, that there is a chronological mistake of three years in numbering the sessions of the Conference. The present session should be the sixty-sixth instead of the sixty-second. This report was adopted, and the correction ordered.

C. B. Galloway, chairman of the Committee on Sunday-Schools, presented the report of said committee, recommending the appointment of Rev. R. B. Downer as Sunday-school agent for the Conference. Adopted.

E. H. Mounger, chairman, presented and made a report from the Committee on Education (too lengthy for publication here.) The report recommends the reappointment of Rev. Dr. Andrews to the presidency of Centenary College, Rev. John A. B. Jones to Port Gibson Collegiate Academy, Rev. J. W. Adkisson, president of East Mississippi Female College, and Rev. J. S. West, as financial agent of said Institution; Rev. H. F. Johnson to the presidency of Whitworth College at Brookhaven, and also to act as agent for the endowment thereof. Favorable mention was also made of Woodville Female Seminary. By amendment the names of Revs. D. M. Rush and J. D. Wall were recommended for professorships in Centenary College. The report, as amended, was adopted.

Pending the consideration of this report, Dr. Watkins presented the names of the following persons as trustees for Woodville Female Seminary, and their election was confirmed, viz: H. S. Van Eaton, T. V. Nolan, R. M. McGehee, H. F. Simrall, Jr., and Scott McGehee.

Dr. Watkins was reappointed a committee of one to ascertain what interest the Conference has in this institution.

The Conference unanimously adopted Report No. — of the Committee on Itinerancy of the last General Conference, regulating the matter of lay representation in the General Conference.

The Committee on the State of the Church made their report, embracing appropriate resolutions: Recommending the appointment of a committee of three to confer with the North Mississippi Conference and New Hope Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, especially with reference to the profanation of the Sabbath. After sundry amendments, among others, striking out the resolution recommending a committee of conference on the subject of Sabbath profanation. The report was adopted.

The Conference, on motion, adjourned to meet again at seven o'clock P. M. Benediction by the Bishop.

MONDAY P. M.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Keener in the chair. Religious exercises by J. T. Heard. Minutes of afternoon session read and approved.

The name of D. A. Given was called, and his character passed, elder.

Resolution complimentary to Bro. T. Price, who retires to the Texas Conference, was unanimously adopted.

The committee to nominate committees of examination for the next four years made a report, which was adopted.

H. H. Montgomery, trustee of the Van Hoiten Bequest Fund, reported the sum of $50, as interest, collected for the past year, and that he had paid the same over to the joint board of finance.

R. Abby, chairman of the publishing interest, read a report from said committee, which was variously amended, and adopted; (too lengthy to print.)

On motion of H. F. Johnson, it was resolved, that we heartily approve the editorial management of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

On motion, the matter of publishing the minutes be committed to Dr. W. H. Watkins.

On motion, the action of Conference by which John A. Thomas was admitted on trial was reconsidered and his application withdrawn at his own request.

The Conference proceeded to chose the place of meeting of the next Conference, and the city of Meridian was unanimously chosen.

RESOLUTIONS OF THANKS.

1. Resolved, That the thanks of the Conference are due and most heartily tendered to the citizens of Hazlehurst, for their most bountiful hospitality, and that our prayers shall continually ascend for the blessing of God upon them.

2. That we gratefully acknowledge whatever courtesy has been extended to the members of the Conference by different railroad and steamboat lines throughout the State.

3. That we thank Messrs. Vance & Massengill, and Mr. Johnston, of the Copiahan office, for publishing daily the proceedings of the Conference.

4. That we acknowledge the courtesy of our Baptist and Presbyterian brethren of Hazlehurst, in granting us the use of their houses of worship during the session.

5. That these resolutions be published in the Copiahan.

The business of the Conference being concluded, the secretary read the minutes of the evening session, and, on motion, Conference adjourned for the reading out of the appointments of the preachers for the ensuing year.

THE YEAR OF RELEASE.

MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

When the bells rang their peal through the wintery air,
And startled the worshippers hushed as in prayer,
When the people turned gladly to friends who were near
And whispered, "God give you a happy new year,"
A flat went forth from God's chamber of peace,
"To some there is dawning the year of release."

They knew not the sign that was put on their brow
These happy ones soon to His presence to bow—
When the late light came in and lo! 'twas a new day
They saw not the messenger placed in the way
They said, "Will the toil and the sorrow increase?"
Nor dreamed they had entered their year of release.

With courage they patiently turned to their task,
For strength, not deliverance, dared they to ask;
They sighed as they took up their burdens again
O'ersorrow and weariness, sickness and pain,
Nor ventured to hope that their troubles would cease,
Or joy become theirs in this year of release.

Oh, could they but know what the new year will bring,
What glad songs of freedom and hope they would sing!
How willingly suffer and toil for awhile,
Thinking aye of their Lord and His welcoming smile;
And the patience of hope would grow strong and increase,
As they counted the days of their year of release.

For, e'er it has passed, the King's face they shall see,
And ever from sorrow and sighing be free;
The things that perished there shall all be made glad,
And the evil of sin never touch them again,
They will gain the bright country of pleasure and peace,
Thrice happy ones dying their year of release.

Who are they, thus dear to the end of their way,
While sad faces sing that wonderful day?
We know not, they know not, the Master alone
Sees who shall have rest in the joy of His throne
We may say while our spirits grow strong in His peace,
"It may be—it may be—a year of release."

Let us live with that hope in our hearts day by day,
We can bear that which passes so swiftly away;
There is work yet unfinished tasks yet to fulfil,
And lessons to learn of our Father's good will;
Let us spend, as for Him, the time shortly to cease,
And God make us meet for our year of release.

Christmas.

Day for retrospection, introspection and prospection! No other day in all the year is so suggestive of past, present and future. It seems a part of the eternal now rather than a portion of limited time. No other day recalls so vividly the joys and sorrows of the past, the realities of the present, or so distinctly promises the possibilities of the future, as does this day, observed as that on which Christ the Lord was born.

To the child it is the day of promise and "glad evangels." To the youth it is the day of roseate memories foretelling brighter things in the days that are to come. To us who have reached mid-age it is a day that is bitter-sweet, whose associations are of grief and gladness interwoven, like the meshes of a net. The mind is busy with the golden-winged hours of the "long ago," yet reaches out in hope and fear to pierce the vail that hides the future from our gaze. We think of the days when Santa Claus was to us a veritable being, borne hither and thither by the reindeer, to make glad the hearts of children. We had our fathers and mothers with us then; and we see once more their familiar faces, feel the soft touch of their loving hands, and hear again the sound of voices now stilled. Then we see the white hands folded, the bright eyes closed, and the forms borne away—only grass-covered graves and gravestones telling where the love ones await the resurrection morn. The alternate trials and triumphs of succeeding days crowd closely upon each other, and bring us to the present. We have taken the places of our parents, and have children of our own to make happy, bring up rightly, and lead to God. O dread, yet sweet responsibility!

And we plan and plan for each a bright future, dreaming dreams of love and pride, trusting that God will bless and guide the little feet over the rough ways and stony paths through every temptation, to a home in heaven. But doubts and fears arise. Temptations may be too strong, the pleasures of sin too alluring, the innocent may become the guilty, and the little feet may wander into miry paths, and the souls sink down, down, down! and be lost—lost to us and lost to God! Then our hearts cry out to God for help, for strength, for faith. We feel as never before how much we need His help in bringing our children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. He hears our cries, and sends us increase of faith. We commit the little ones to Him, renewing our vows to live in accordance with His will, and, as Christian parents, to do all in our power to lead the little ones in paths of peace. By and by our hearts become attuned to the song the angels sang while the shepherds were keeping watch by night, and we can sing: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men;" and the day closes a day of gladness for us and of gratitude to Him who so abundantly blesses.

Let Christmas be observed not with rioting and reveling, but as a day of joy and of holiness unto the Lord. Let it be so observed that your children will ever look back to it with pleasure, when the years shall bring their burdens of cares and heartaches.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR. The above was received too late for our last week's paper. It will do, however, to read at any time.

Bible Reading.

MR. EDITOR: The subject which heads the following brief article is one of vital interest, and should be considered only as its importance demands, as the advantages derived therefrom are of incalculable benefit to the reader. He who in uprightness of heart readeth to an honest purpose, and endeavors to lay hold of all those "exceeding great and precious promises" as set forth therein, "walketh in the way of righteousness, and in the pathway thereof there is no death." How great and justly will he the reward. The Bible is the book of God, and in the reading of it this should ever be borne in mind, and read for no other motive than that of learning holiness and becoming righteous. Nevertheless, there are those in these modern ages who read it for no other end than that of casting reproach upon it, to whom it would be far better had they never seen it. Woe unto them who have the advantages of light and improve not thereby. Verily, it will be more tolerable for the heathen in the day of judgment than for them. For to whom much is given much will be required; and surely much will be required of those who have access to this sacred volume; whether read to advantage or not, they will be responsible to Him "with whom we have to do." Of all reading, it is the most available, inasmuch as it relates to our present interest, and the improvement of which our future destiny must forever be determined. Therefore it is highly necessary that we be acquainted with the oracles committed to our care; and in order thereto it should be a daily duty, with prayer for divine assistance, from Him who alone can make us wise unto salvation. The reading of the Bible is a duty enjoined upon everybody, with peculiar reference to Christian people. Our Saviour saith: "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." A command of vast importance, and worthy of a most solemn consideration: Be not content with the mere reading of them, but search, yea, and profoundly consider them in which you are so deeply concerned, therein alone containeth the words and promises of eternal life. How glorious and sublime the sentiment! Indeed, a knowledge of these inspired productions is an exceeding precious attainment. But, alas! how few consider and properly appreciate them, how few know their momentous value! Hence it would be well for those who have them in possession to take admonition. Read your Bible. "It is not a vain thing; it is your life."

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent, instead of a complaint.

HENRY STRONG, another one of our little band of American emigrants, has passed away—he died at home, near St. Barbara, November 6th, 1878, in peace with God and man. His loss we shall long feel, for he was one of our very best citizens: a man of purest integrity and blameless life, respected and beloved by all who knew him: and though not a member of the church, he was a man of prayer, and a Christian in all the daily, practical duties of life. And he was sustained and comforted in his long continued sickness by a firm trust in God as his Friend and Saviour.

During the last four or five years of his life I had repeated conversations with him about his religious state, and my conclusion was the same each time: I believe he was a converted man and true Christian: yet I never found him ready to join the church; indeed he was not in all things in accord with any particular denomination, and hence he lived [illegible] his father had done before him. Yet I have reason to believe that at last he regretted that he had not at least been baptised.

I shall always remember with pleasure how generously he opened his house for preaching. When I first commenced preaching in the District of Santa Barbara, eight years ago, and how hospitably he fed nearly the whole congregation from month to month. To myself, and doubtless to many others, those were pleasant days.

Mr. Strong was a native of South Carolina, but his father emigrated to Mississippi when he was only four years old. There he grew up to manhood, and married Miss Rebecca S. F. Spencer in September, 1830, who died in blessed hope of immortal life in June, 1876. Henceforth he remained a widower, and his youngest daughter kept house for him the balance of his life, and in his old age nursed him and watched over his declining years with a patient, loving tenderness that never ceased until her loved and honored father was laid in the grave.

Mr. Strong resided for many years near Sokhaven, Miss., and was extensively and favorably known, and I am sure his old neighbors remember him with kindness. For their satisfaction I will say he had a comfortable home here, and died with his family around him.

Six weeks before his death his grandson-in-law, Mr. F. Bankston, died: he died in the early noon of life, with flattering prospects before him. But he was pious and useful, a member of the Baptist Church, and died trusting in God. [illegible] been taken from us whose loss would have [illegible] of our citizens could have been so much felt.

Our little company of American emigrants in Santo Paulo are passing away. True we have a healthful clime, a beautiful land and a fruitful soil, but death reigns here as in all other lands, and our American graveyard at the "Campo Pearle Church" is fast filling up. There are now nearly forty graves. But the love of the Saviour is as precious here as in our native land, and our sainted dead have realized, here in the land of the "Southern Cross," that

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are."

J. E. NEWMAN.

Limeira, Prov. Santo Paulo, Brazil, Nov. 9, 1878.

ROSA OLIVIA, daughter of Hon. Peter Kent and the late Mrs. Pernelia Womack, was born August 11, 1819, in St. Helena parish, La., and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the age of twelve years. She was married by Rev. Wm. Howell, to J. P. S. Thompson November 8, 1838, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus at her home in Anderson, Texas, July 6, 1878. Death ever brings sorrow and regret in its pathway, but in this instance one has been taken away from us that many thought could not be spared, but He who called her to Himself knew best. In her death a sad loss has transpired to her family, to friends and to the church, which no language can describe. She was noted for every domestic and social virtue, conspicuously for hospitality, generosity and kindness of heart. In all the relations of life, as daughter, sister, wife and mother, she was guided by the principles of a pure Christian, and in her life she cultivated and practiced all those virtues which ennoble and adorn the female character. Her religion was not of a speculative sentiment, but of a profound, moral principle, embodied in action. Her faith, alone with a mild and steady lustre corresponding with the purity of her life. She was earnest, hopeful and cheerful upon the subject of a future existence. Her sufferings were severe for some hours before she was released, but they were marked by calmness, patience and Christian resignation. She said to her husband: "I am dying," bade the children brought in: "Keep them together." She then earnestly implored God's blessing upon them, her husband, her children and her aged father, then gently breathed her life away in the full assurance of a blessed immortality.

SISTER.

MRS. ELIZA E. OLIVER, daughter of Dr. Joseph Marcy, was born in Newborn, North Carolina, in 1807, was converted at the age of fourteen years, but on account of the unsettled religious convictions of her father did not unite with the church until four years later, at which time she joined the Methodist Church, and lived an honored member of the same until the tenth of September, 1878, at which time she was called from the labors of the church below to the joys of the church above. She was twice married. The first time to Beasen Barrow, on the sixteenth of December, 1823, by whom she became the mother of twelve children, nine of whom were reared to man and womanhood, and eight of that number survive her; seven in Alabama and one in Texas. She removed in the early part of her married life from North Carolina to the State of Georgia, where the enterprising, laborious nature of her Christian womanhood began to find its first expression.

A member of the Alabama Conference of no ordinary ability, tells me that his first lessons in the division of words into syllables were received at her house, while waiting for his grits at her husband's mills. A few years later she removed to the state of Alabama and settled near Notasulga, Macon county, where they, with their large and interesting family, lived until 1859, when they, with their two youngest children, removed to Dale county, Ala. On the twenty-fifth of October, 1861, she was left a widow. In 1867 she was married to the Rev. John L. Oliver, with whom she lived until November, 1872, at which time she was again left a widow, remaining at the same home and near which she had buried her two husbands.

This venerable mother in Israel well deserves to be classed among the great and good of the earth. She was a lady of superior intelligence; of rare mental perception whose mind was capable of looking far into the future and successfully grappling with the most difficult questions involved in domestic, social or religious life.

But the most illustrious adornment of her life was her unconquerable faith in God. This, with more than ordinary lustre, and expressions in all the relations of life, as daughter, wife, mother, mistress, neighbor, friend.

During revivals she was very justly classed as the preacher's helper, in fact in Sabbath-schools, prayer meetings, or wherever there was work to do. Notwithstanding her modesty seemed to be the crowning grace of her Christian life, her head, hands, heart and means were always on the altar.

She was a great sufferer all through her life being frequently despaired of, but never was she heard to murmur or complain, but saying, amid the torturings of the pain, that it is all right, and just my blessed Master would have it. In her illness she called her weeping children, who chanced to be present at her death-bed side, and with consciousness never enthroned, took them by the hand, and with a mother's last kiss said: "My children don't indulge a fear for me—only try to live as I have lived, and meet me in my Father's kingdom."

"Now," said she to an affectionate grandaughter, "turn me over." This being done she rested her head on his breast and in my head and breathe my life out with you there, bless the Lord." Then closing her eyes and sealing her lips faithful servant of God, at the age of seventy-one, passed the bourne of the bright and fair.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 2, 1879.

ON THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

'Tis midnight—from the dark blue sky,
The stars which now look down on earth,
Have seen ten thousand centuries fly,
And give to countless changes birth.

And when the pyramids shall fall,
And, mouldering, mix as dust in air,
The dwellers on this altered ball
May still behold them glorious there.

Shine on! shine on! with you I tread
The march of ages, orbs of light!
A last eclipse may o'er you spread;
To me, to me, there comes no night.

O, what concerns it him, whose way
Lies upward to the immortal dead,
That a few hairs are turning gray,
Or one more year of life has fled?

Swift years, but teach me how to bear,
To feel, and act, with strength and skill,
To reason wisely, nobly dare,
And speed your coarses as ye will.

When life's meridian toils are done,
How calm, how rich the twilight glows!
The morning twilight of a sun,
That shines not here—on things below.

Let sorrow, sickness, death—the pain
To leave, or lose, wife, children, friends—
What then? Shall we not meet again,
Where parting comes not, sorrow ends?

The fondness of a parent's care,
The changeless trust that woman gives,
The smile of childhood—it is there,
That all we love in them still lives.

Press onward through each varying hour!
Let no weak fears thy course delay!
Immortal being, feel thy power!
Pursue thy bright and endless way.

Morocco.

BY HENRY DAY, ESQ.

The northern coast of Africa was once one of the strongholds of the false prophets, and from thence they threatened the liberty of Europe. They first broke up into independent powers, and now these have nearly run their race. Morocco is now a kingdom of about 230,000 square miles, or one-sixth larger than France. It extends along the Atlantic from the Straits southward from 700 to 800 miles, and along the Mediterranean from the Straits about 250 miles, and south from the Mediterranean about 500 miles, and reaches into the Desert. It is composed of mountainous ranges which run northeast from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean, with fertile intervening valleys, which are well watered by rivers which flow from the water-shed into the Atlantic and the Mediterranean on one side, and into the Desert, where they are swallowed up, on the other. One of these rivers—the Mulnya—is 400 miles long.

Fez, which is about 75 or 100 miles south of the Straits, is the capital, where the Emperor—or the Sultan, as they call him—resides. It is in a wide, fertile valley, between the parallel chains of mountains. Between these mountains the climate is delightful, scarcely ever falling below 50 degrees or rising above 90 degrees. The slopes of the mountains looking down on the Straits and facing the Atlantic are beautifully wooded and afford delightful winter residences for invalids from Europe and America, and summer residences for the inhabitants of Gibraltar and the southern coast of Spain. The mountains shield them from the hot winds of the Desert, and the cool breezes of the Atlantic preserve a salubrious temperature. There is a wide range of products, among which are wheat, barley, maize, rice, sugar-cane, figs, pomegranates, lemons, oranges, dates, cotton, tobacco and hemp.

"It is easy to see that such a country with such a climate and such a variety of products, is destined to sustain a large and civilized population, and in the near future it will be one of the most important parts of Africa. It would not surprise us to awake some morning and find that it had been annexed to England. They would then control both ends and the middle of the Mediterranean. Two-thirds of the entire trade of Morocco is now in the hands of British merchants. Caravans of camels from Soudan and southern Morocco may be seen filing into Tangiers—the only port of Morocco—loaded with drugs, red, yellow and green leather, wool, hides, cotton and tobacco; and they bear back cotton, linen and muslin goods, sugar and tea, even as far as Timbuctoo, all of which comes from England. Immense amounts of beef, eggs and poultry are taken to Gibraltar. The captain of the Gibraltar steamer told me that some days he carried across the Straits 500,000 eggs, and they cost in Tangiers 50 cents per 100, and oranges, we found, were 25 cents per 100. Beef was sold for 37 per 100 pounds. One hundred head of cattle were taken to Gibraltar on the steamer with us. They were brought alongside the steamer in a scow. A noose was put round their horns, which by a rope was fastened to a steam windlass on board the steamer. In one-half a minute the animal is raised by his horns into the air before he has time to struggle, and swung round over the steamer, and then let down into the hold.

The Sultan is supposed to be the owner of the soil, and it is rented out, as in Egypt, to tenants at a very low rental, and the land descends to the heir of the tenant, subject to the tenancy. The taxes are very light, but the revenue is raised chiefly from export and import duty. The Sultan owes a national debt incurred in the war with Spain, but he pays his interest. As he is an arbitrary prince, and his word is the law of the land, he has only to impose a tax on one or more of the twenty-nine districts, and the Governor must collect it.

Not only are there beautiful winter residences along the wooded slopes of the Straits, but the means of living are abundant and cheap, and the sports are excellent. There are here plenty of partridge, hare and rabbits, but the great sport is the boar hunt. We saw on Sunday morning a company of about 20 ladies and gentlemen, English and French, on horseback, leaving Tangiers for the hills about 10 miles distant. The hunters are allowed no weapon but a spear. From 50 to 100 men are employed to beat up the bush and drive the animals out into the open, when the sport commences by running down the boars. When he turns at bay he is an ugly customer, but the poor dogs and horses generally bear the brunt of the fight.

Tangiers ought to be and will be a great city. It is situated in the midst of the Straits, where passes the commerce of all nations, and where the commerce of northeastern Africa, even to the interior deserts, centers, and with a good climate. Here those seeking health may come, and here the artist may find a Moorish city full of quaint subjects for his pencil, and a country around full of all natural grandeur.—New York Observer.

Angelo's Statue of Moses.

Why did Michael Angelo put the horns on the head of his statue of Moses? The answer is found in a wrong translation by Jerome, from the Hebrew into the Latin Vulgate, which is the accepted Bible of the Roman Church. In our English version of the Bible three times in the book of Exodus, (chapter xxxiv, 29, 30, 35,) it is said that when Moses came down from the mount "his face shone;" and the common impression probably is that his face was all over radiant, as if rubbed with phosphorus in a dark night. The Hebrew language, however, like almost all of very early date, is in many respects what may be called an object language; that is, its terms are not so much abstract, as taken from and expressive of visible forms. And the Hebrew word here used is a word expressive of shape, and signifying both a horn and a pencil of light; for as the horn of the Oriental buffalo and a pencil of light were both conical in shape, the same word was used for each. It is the same word that is used in Habakkuk (chapter iii, 3 and 4,) where it is said: "God came from Teman, and the Holy One from Mount Paran; and his glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise; and his brightness was as the light; and he had horns coming out of his hand;" where the version should have been: "His very hands radiated light," had rays—pencils of light streaming forth from them."

Now Jerome, in translating the passage from the Hebrew of Exodus, made the Latin Vulgate say of Moses, as he came down from the mount, that his face or head was horned, or had horns on it, when he should have translated it: "His very face or head radiated light," sending forth its beams to the view of all Israel. In each of the three verses in Exodus the same word is used by Jerome in his version. In the twenty-ninth verse he makes it read: "When Moses came down from Mount Sinai he held the two tables of the law, and knew not that his face was horned;" in the thirtieth verse: "Aaron and the children of Israel, looking on the face of Moses, saw that it was horned;" and in the thirty-fifth verse: "They saw the face of Moses, and it was horned." And as the Vulgate was the Bible of the Roman Church, and the only version familiarly known to Michael Angelo, when he turned, as he naturally would, to the book of Exodus for a description of the appearance of Moses, and found that the verses we have quoted described him as horned, or having horns, then to be true to the language of Scripture, he put these horns on the head of his statue of the great lawgiver of Israel. So strangely may one wrong translation mystify and mislead to be interpreters as well as artists!—Rev. Tryon Edwards, in Sunday Afternoon.

A Palatial Residence.

At the conclusion of the meetings of the Presbyterian Synod of China, held in Hangchow, in May last, the members were invited to visit what is said to be the finest private residence in China, the home of the wealthy banker, Woo. A correspondent of the New York Observer writes:

Our large party was received with every mark of attention. Well-dressed attendants met us at the door and conducted us through the labyrinth of rooms, halls, courts, grottoes, gardens, etc. The buildings are spacious, and most lavishly ornamented with carving and paintings. The furniture is mostly of Chinese style and manufacture, and of the richest and rarest description. Every room contained one or two clocks, and in one room there were seven, all of the costliest and most curious styles. There is a beautiful bridge over a sheet of water, and in the middle of the bridge a pavilion elaborately carved and ornamented. Crossing the bridge we entered a series of artificial caves and grottoes, so true to nature that it was hard to believe that they had not been built by the Great Architect of the universe. Birds of rare and beautiful plumage were seen among the shrubbery, or hanging in cages under the pavilions, and the sounds of their songs and screams echoed among the rocks and trees. After we had been shown through the grounds the ladies were invited to the ladies' apartments, and the gentlemen to the reception hall, to be entertained by the gentlemanly proprietor. Mr. Woo is not in good health, and, added to this, has lately experienced a heavy affliction in the death of his brother. However, he met us with simple and unaffected hospitality. The hall was gorgeously furnished. Conspicuous were the golden tablets from the Emperor, conferring posthumous honors on Mr. Woo's parents. The walls of the rooms were of marble, and the furniture was inlaid with the most beautiful and curious specimens of the same stone.

After enjoying some fine flavored Hangchow tea, and a pleasant chat, we were invited into another court adjoining the ladies' apartments, where we met the ladies of our party, and Mr. Woo significantly called attention to the paintings about the galleries.

The story of Woo is thus briefly told: There was a Mandarin who had a bank, the management of which he left mostly to others. One day he received intelligence that his manager had run away. On going to the bank he found every one connected with it had fled, except one of the assistants. He asked him why he did not go too. The young man replied that he thought he could yet save the institution from ruin, if he had a chance. The Mandarin promised his support, and told him to do the best he could. He went to work, and showed unusual ability in the management of money matters. In course of time he became manager of many banks, and is now the millionaire of Hangchow, the Mr. Woo whose palatial residence we were permitted to visit. It is said to be the finest private residence in the empire, and only surpassed by the Emperor's palace in Peking.

Was The Moon Always Dead?

Now that astronomers have almost by unanimous consent accepted the doctrine of the development of our system, which involves the belief that the whole mass of each member of the system was formerly gaseous with intensity of heat, they can no longer doubt that the moon once had seas, and an atmosphere of considerable density. The moon has, in fact, passed through the same changes as our own earth, though not necessarily in the same exact way. She was once vaporous, as was our earth, though not at the same time, nor for so long a time. She was once glowing with intensity of heat, though this stage also must have continued for a much shorter time than the corresponding stage of our earth's history. Must we not conclude that after passing through that stage the moon was for the time a habitable world, as our earth is now? The great masses of vapor and of cloud which had girt our moon's whole globe, even as in the youth of our earth her seas enwrapped her in cloud-form, must at length have taken their place as seas upon her surface. The atmosphere which had supported those waters must at first have been dense by comparison with the present lunar atmosphere, perhaps even by comparison with the present atmosphere of our earth. Then the glowing surface of the moon gradually cooled, until at length the moon must have been a fit abode for life. But whether, when thus swept and garnished into fitness of habitation, the moon actually became an inhabited world, is a question which will be variously answered according to our views respecting the economy of nature in this respect. Those who hold that nature makes nothing in vain will need only to ask whether the support of life is the one sole purpose which a planet can subserve; if that should appear probable they would at once decide that the moon must during its habitable stage have been inhabited. Others who, looking around at the workings of nature as known to us, perceive, or think they perceive, that there is much which resembles waste in nature, will be less confident on this point. They may reason that as of many seeds which fall upon the ground scarce one subserves the one purpose for which seeds can be supposed to have been primarily intended, as many younglings among animals perish untimely, as even many races and types fail of their apparent primary purpose, so our moon, and possibly many such worlds, may never have subserved, and never come to subserve that one chief purpose for which the orbs peopling space can be supposed to have been formed, if purpose indeed reigns throughout the universe.—Cornhill Magazine.

Ingenious Antiquity.

The accuracy of scientific conclusions as to the great antiquity of man has received a serious shattering. In respect to the discoveries alleged to have been made in the famous Brixham Cave, Devonshire, England. It was asserted by some scientific men that the remains and the tools found in this cave proved beyond question that man was on the earth anterior to the existence of the cave-bear. But a later and more thorough examination of the cave discoveries, now placed in the Christy Museum, has been made, and the report presented to the Victoria Institute by N. Whiteley, honorary secretary of the Royal Institution of Cornwall. Among the blunders as to the facts, Mr. Whitely notices: 1. Naturalists now generally conclude that the skeleton found in the cave does not belong to the ancient cave bear, but to the modern brown bear. 2. That the tool said to be found was not close to the bear's leg, but twelve feet from it, and, further, that the tool cannot be found in the museum. 3. That cases and copies of a very perfect flint knife, which were sold widely over England as a copy of one from the cave, were really copies of one found in Ireland. 4. That pictures of tools, showing a chipping on the edges, and alluded to by scientific men as due to human hands, are, in fact, counterfeit, for the chipping cannot be found on the flints, nor in the original photograph of them. 5. That the "scraper tool" and the "rod of ivory" are not in the original list, nor to be found in the museum; and, finally, 6. That the "flint tools" in the cave are precisely like those which abound on Windmill Hill, above the cave, and which are conceded to be formations by the action of natural causes, and not human implements at all. Some of these may have been washed into the cave, and hence the "evidences" turn out to be a series of scientific mistakes, not to say blunders. Sir Charles Lyell, who used the remains of the Brixham Cave among his evidences in his "Antiquity of Man," has in a late edition quietly dropped these "proofs" as of no special help to his argument on that subject.—Sunday-School World.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

—That the Reformed Episcopal Church is steadily growing the reports made at the recent General Council, at Newark, N. J., plainly show. The parochial returns were not complete; but they reported 5,808 communicants, which was believed to be at least four thousand short of the whole number. There are 7,811 Sunday-school scholars and the collections amounted to $280,785. The church property is valued at $600,031, on which there are incumbrances of $138,750. The bishops severally reported that the church was in a very prosperous condition in their jurisdictions, and the Rev. Messrs. Stevens and Johnson told how the colored people in the South were attaching themselves to it. The Council transacted very little important business. Resolutions condemning theatrical amusements and dancing provoked some discussion, in which two prominent laymen stoutly defended dancing per se. The resolutions were adopted. A catechism was reported; but it, together with the hymnal, went over to next year. In regard to deacons, the Council decided that they cannot assume charge of a church, or administer the ordinances of baptism or the communion, without special license from a bishop. Among the subjects postponed, in addition to those above mentioned, were those of synodical bishops, and an amendment, approved by this Council, giving each parish one lay delegate for each one hundred communicants, instead of for each fifty, as at present. The closing business of the Council was the adoption of resolutions authorizing the congregation in Great Britain to form a General Synod, similar to the General Council, and appointing Bishop Fallows, Gen. S. L. Woodford, and H. B. Turner commissioners to confer with commissioners from the proposed General Synod in reference to changes in the offices and organic law of the church.—Independent.

—It has been feared that Father Hyacinthe's movement would come to nothing. At last something of promise issues from his hands. He has just established himself in Paris, and begun to hold religious Conferences or meetings, has addressed a long letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, asking that the reformation which he has begun in France be recognized by the Anglican Communion, and that one of its bishops be appointed provisionally to the oversight of the mission, until the day comes when the movement may constitute itself a church. He proposes, he says, to revive the ancient Gallican liturgies and the Gallican Church, which the Vatican Council has suppressed. To this letter the Primate of Scotland replies by request of the Archbishop of Canterbury. He assures Father Hyacinthe of sympathy with his mission in France, and promised to provide for its oversight, though he cannot promise that episcopal functions will be administered until the proposed ritual has been prepared and submitted for examination. This looks like a serious step toward a reformed Catholic Church in France.—Methodist.

—Both the Kirk and Free Church of Scotland have sent clergymen to Cyprus to establish missions or churches.

"Some of the greatest missionary meetings that have ever taken place in the world were very small gatherings, and yet they became centers of blessings to the whole world," was among the utterances at the world's Missionary Convention.

—Says the London S. S. World: "Rev. Mr. E. C. Wines related a remarkable story of the son of a professional thief. While in prison he was converted. After serving his time out he worked at his trade; studied the languages; entered the seminary where he formed the acquaintance of an earnest Christian student. The two resolved to become missionaries to the heathen, and plunged into the heart of India, where missionaries had never been seen. After eight years' labor among the Santhals, the result is thirty churches, forty schools, two training-schools, and twenty-one hundred communicants and a Christian population of six thousand, and a grammar and a dictionary of the Santhal language."

The Rev. Thomas L. Gulick writes to the Observer an account of the first Conference of the Evangelical Alliance of Spain and Portugal, held at Zaragoza. He says there were representatives present from nearly all the Protestant churches in Spain and from several in Portugal. The Conference was in session five days, and heard fifteen papers having to do with the evangelism of Spain and the means and methods of carrying it on. A committee was appointed to consider the expediency of establishing a theological seminary.

Our Young People.

THE OLD AND THE NEW YEAR.

We are passing another milestone,
Another school year's done;
One more chapter of life is written,
A few more threads are spun.

Life's journey, a school, a story,
Our best to-day demand
That future, it should be woven
With steadfast heart and hand.

But we've faltered, half learned our lesson,
The story who will read
And have we carelessly marred the page
A record pure and fair?

Yet our errors, our failure shall be
At length our best success,
If we store up their choicest teachings
For future helpfulness.

We have trodden the old year's pathway,
We enter on the new;
God hath brightened them both, O children,
To him all praise is due.

Let us study the next chapter,
The life work of this Son,
If the volume of life is finished,
And the Writer's gone.

Becky Hepburn's New Year.

BY S. P. PORTER.

Becky peeped into the library. There was nobody there. The fire in the grate burned with a cheerful glow. The light of the argand burner was soft and pleasant. The rows of books looked friendly. The big arm-chair was inviting. Becky had had a long walk and was very tired. She thought that she would sit down and rest a while.

"Now," said she, after settling herself, "I believe I will indulge in a soliloquy." Becky was studying definitions, and she knew that the word soliloquy means a talk to one's self. "I am glad," she continued, "that the old year is almost gone. I am tired of seeing the same date in the newspapers, and of writing the same figures at the head of my letters. A change will be very agreeable. To tell the truth, I like anything that is new—new books, new shoes, new bonnets, new dresses, fresh leaves in my copy-book. Why should I not like a new year? Not that the old one has been unpleasant. Indeed, I have had good companions in school, and a very kind teacher, and my father and mother are always as loving as they can be. Then, as for the boys, if they do tease me now and then, and if I do get provoked at them, I am sure that I think all the world of them really. Yes, I know that I have enjoyed my friends very much.

"Then, what a splendid time we had in the country last summer! What beautiful drives we took, and what delightful walks. It was much nicer in the mountains than it was the year before at the seashore. I do not believe that I could have improved this year if I had arranged myself."

But while Becky was speaking, her eyelids began to blink in the fire-light, and her head began to nod to the grate. The faster her head moved the slower went her tongue, until, having said what is reported, she ceased speaking altogether, and Becky was fast asleep.

In her dream she saw a radiant angel, fairer than any being she had ever looked upon, and the angel spoke to her. "Becky," said she, "you have told the truth. You have had a most delightful year. Your home has been very happy. You have had a great many comforts and pleasures. You, and the rest of the family, have been perfectly well. You have seen many attractive things. You have read entertaining books. You have had good times among your schoolmates. Becky, who gave you all these blessings? Have you been grateful to Him? I am very much afraid that you have not."

"So, puss, I have caught you napping!" It was Mr. Hepburn's cheerful voice that aroused his daughter from her slumber. "Oh, papa, I dreamed that I saw the most beautiful angel, and she was telling me that I ought to be a better girl." "I think you are pretty good as you are; anyhow, you are good enough for me," and Mr. Hepburn dismissed the subject with a laugh and a kiss. Not so with Becky. She thought of her dream when she was at the supper table; she thought of it when she was trying to study; she thought of it when she went to bed. She lay awake for a long time thinking it over and over. At length she prayed this prayer: "Dear Heavenly Father, I have been a very naughty girl all my life, and have not loved Thee as I ought to have done. I pray Thee to forgive all my sins, and wash them away in the blood of the Saviour, who gave Himself for me. Make me thy loving, grateful child, and help me to live for Thee always. I ask it for Jesus' sake. Amen."

After this, Becky felt a strange sense of peace and satisfaction. Indeed, she had never been so full of joy before. She felt as though she must tell somebody how very happy she was. But all in the house were asleep. It was too late to wake any one. The big clock in the hall was striking twelve. The new year had begun. The old one had departed.

The next morning how bright the sunshine seemed. How pretty Becky's room looked. How pleasantly sounded the voices of her brothers as they shouted "Happy New Year!" at her door. "It is a happy New Year indeed," said Becky to herself. "I believe that I have begun it as a Christian."

She did not forget before going down stairs to thank her Heavenly Father for His care over her through the night and for the mercies of the opening day. When she entered the breakfast room Mr. Hepburn stood behind the curtain at the window. "Father," she said, after returning his salutation, "I believe that the Lord has forgiven my sins. Don't you wish that He would forgive yours, too?" Mr. Hepburn looked out of the window for a minute. Then he said huskily, "Yes, Becky, I do."

"Becky, Becky," called her brothers in concert, "come and show us how to play this game now. There'll be just time before breakfast." Mother said so."

Becky accepted the invitation and performed her duty as well that I told her, "Seems to me you're [illegible] than you were yesterday. I wonder what's changed you so."

"Maybe she's turned over a new leaf," suggested Harry. "Perhaps so," Fred responded; "that's a good thing to do on New Year's day."

A Deed Done by a Child.

In Mr. H. P. Hammond's book on the "Conversion of Children" the following incident is related:

Eleven years ago, in a city in Illinois, a little child came to the meeting I was holding, just because the others came, but with no thought of being a Christian. But God's people had been praying earnestly that all the children present might be led to see their lost condition, and that Jesus had loved them and given Himself for them. Their prayers were answered, and many little children, as well as this little girl, became Christians. When I was in that city, not long since, I was glad to learn that most of them were still clinging to the Saviour. When this child went home from the meeting where she had found the Saviour, her father and mother were very much astonished at her words and manner. They thought she was too excited, and determined not to [illegible] her attend any more meetings, but she cried bitterly, and begged to go to the next meeting that she might hear more about the Saviour. Finally the father said to the mother "You'd better go with her, and if there's anything [illegible], we'll not [illegible] her attend." But while at the meeting the mother found her heart filled with love toward the precious Saviour. When she [illegible] loved her and led her to the Lamb, so she could rejoice [illegible] to Him, and to God, because [illegible] forgave her and [illegible] her soul with peace and joy. [illegible] so, went home [illegible] her child had become a Christian. Her ungodly husband was astonished when she said to him: "You better go yourself to the next meeting, for there is nothing at all [illegible] about them." He was thus drawn to attend the services where the spirit of God showed him what a great sinner he was. He felt at first that he was too great a sinner to be saved. For a long time he could not see how God could be just and yet forgive him, but when he heard the story of Jesus' love, and how He had died, "the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God," he bowed at the foot of the cross, and cried, "God be merciful to me, sinner." His prayer was answered and he too went home "excited." Yes, he was so much excited that he at once resolved to give up making whiskey. He had for a long time been a distiller of that which leads so many down to a drunkard's grave. But God showed him his sins, and he resolved never to distill another drop of liquor, for he felt that by so doing he was adding to the long train of sixty thousand who fall into the drunkard's grave every year in the United States.

A little girl, six years old, was desirous of putting her pennies into the missionary box with others. When saying her evening prayers at her papa's knee, she hesitated a moment, and then added, "Lord, bless my two pennies, for Jesus sake! Amen." After the child had gone to bed, her father asked his wife, "What made Gracie say that?" "She has prayed thus every night since giving her pennies to the missionary box," was her mother's reply.

A mother, trying to get her little daughter to sleep, said "Anna, why don't you try to go to sleep." "I am trying." "But you haven't shut your eyes." "Well, can't help it; ums comes unbuttoned."

Our New Year Meditation.

Our business friends are examining into their affairs, and making up their balance sheets. Planters and farmers can tell by this time about how the matter stands as to profit and loss. Reflections upon these subjects will occupy us more or less. The year's work and its results are to be summed up, and plans for the future are to be made under the guidance of past experience. After so many years of toil and care has the fortune been realized, or are the approaches to it satisfactory? It is past middle age with many, and with others one sere and yellow leaf is at hand. Another year of opportunity is now gone, and the more anxious is the scrutiny of assets and liabilities on this account. The riches dreamed of in early life have somehow eluded our grasp. Success has crowned the efforts of a few; the many have suffered much, or have failed to realize their anticipations. Whatever the disclosures may be, the race must be begun again, and the battles of the old year must be fought over during the new. The seasons will move on in their accustomed order, there will be seed time and harvest, storms and sunshine, losses and gains, and husbandmen, merchants, artisans, professional men, will go forth to their several labors, hopeful of what the rounded year may bring them.

Parents will have their thoughts on New Year's eve. How the children have grown in the past twelve months! They escape from their sweet childhood more and more, and they are changing insensibly as the dawn. Where a day reveals nothing, a year reveals a great deal. Development in mind and body, and changes in character, are made manifest. There are forebodings, grounds of congratulation and thankfulness, and a prayer breathed that the youthful feet may be ever kept in the paths of righteousness. Some homes have been invaded by death. Births and deaths in the household make the memorial of years. Death has graven the past year deeply upon the tablet of memory in many hearts. Fathers and mothers will remember it not as the year of the Paris Exposition, or of the Eastern war, but as the year when the dear boy or the sweet little girl was taken. Then they cannot but dwell upon the future of their children, their education, their character, the lot that shall befall them. The past year has answered these questions in part, but the coming year will have much more to say about them. We must conjecture, although we can neither break the seals nor open the book.

Christian people will think of their religious condition. Very naturally we recall the vows and resolves made a year ago. We proposed entering upon a course of greater usefulness—of giving ourselves more completely to God, and of amending our negligences respecting prayer, reading the Scriptures, and self-watchfulness. What report of ourselves have we to take? What does conscience, consciousness and memory say in reviewing our work and in estimating what we really are? Is it a year lost, or a year gained? Have we any sheaves from the field, have we laid up treasure in heaven, and can we think of the year as one devoted to Christ? One year less to live, and one year nearer the judgment, in life and character what have we gained? Whatever the answer, it is well to look into the new year with a heart of faith and consecration. If we have done well we may do better, and if we have done ill the new year is the open door which God in his mercy sets before us, through which we may enter upon a nobler and more blessed career. Christians and sinners alike should reflect seriously on the passing years and their results. Their progress may seem as slow and imperceptible as the travel of an Alpine glacier, but it is equally as irresistible, carrying with it everything it touches. While this stream is tearing and rending and upheaving and overthrowing, we are hardly conscious that it moves at all. To be able rightly to count our days is something to be prayed for: "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." God help us all to interpret the years, and to lay their lessons to heart!

A year in the world's life is gone, and how is the world doing? While the earth has been spinning along its orbit its inhabitants have been moving also. Science, in its various departments, has made some advance. There has been progress in the liberal arts, and in the practical fields of mechanics and agriculture. Taking all countries into the account, there has been nearly the average amount of war and bloodshed, but considerably less than there was one hundred years ago. Telegraphs and railroads have been multiplied, and the intercourse between distant parts has been increased. In society and politics the unrest of the world is chronic. Communism burns as a smothered fire, but there have been no serious outbreaks. In the industries there have been strikes and strikes, and the conflict of labor and capital has scarcely ever been more general throughout the civilized world. The sufferings of the unemployed in Great Britain, America, and on the continent of Europe, have probably been greater this year than heretofore. With the general diffusion of education, and with the ballot in the hands of the people, new and serious dangers threaten society. There is really a plethora of money, food, clothing and land in the world, and thousands of people cannot obtain work. Some means of distributing and equalizing the good things, and the necessaries of life, must be found, or there will be trouble. The yellow fever scourge is now chiefly notable for the philanthropy which was exhibited in relieving its victims. This widespread feeling of generous sympathy and kindness is, for us, the brightest and most imperishable gem in the crown of the dying year. The world is surely growing better. The practical charity displayed in recent years among Christian people would not have been thought of one or two centuries ago.

Something has been done during the past year for the kingdom of Christ. Missionary labors have been on a larger scale than ever, and the results have been such as to cheer and encourage every Christian heart. The light is gaining on the darkness, and the day spring from on high is spreading its mantle of purple and gold over all the sky. At home and abroad the gospel has triumphed, and thousands of souls have been converted. What the new year shall be in Christian work depends upon the faith and zeal of the people of God. Could they, or rather would they, reach the plane of a complete consecration, the new year would bring to the church and to Christ a surpassing glory.

Mississippi Conference.

Something past midnight, on the morning of December 18, we reached Hazlehurst, in company with several other brethren. The pastor, Rev. J. M. Weems, was on hand to meet us, and we were at once conducted to our homes. The editor's home was under the same hospitable roof where he spent several pleasant days during the session four years ago. We are under lasting obligations to Dr. Purnell and his family, who made our stay with them most comfortable and pleasant. Conference was called to order by Dr. C. G. Andrews, opened with religious exercises by J. O. Jones, and was presided by the election of W. H. Watkins, D. D., as president, of C. G. Andrews, D. D., as secretary, and of J. A. B. Jones, W. C. Black and John T. Cameron, as assistant secretaries. Bishop Paine, infirm from age, and wearied with the labors of his recent Conferences, was not able to be present. The committees were appointed in the usual way, and under Dr. Watkins' skillful guidance the business went on with harmony and expedition. On Friday morning we were surprised to find Bishop Keener in the chair. He had barely reached home from his Texas round when summoned to Hazlehurst, and he had thus promptly responded. The attendance of preachers was fully up to the average of other years. There were but few lay members present. Four preachers died during the year—Barnabas Pipkin, James Shanks, D. J. Parker and W. Wadsworth. The last named was in the prime of life, a beloved and faithful laborer, and his end was peace. Barnabas Pipkin had been sixty years a preacher, and was eighty-three years old. He was a man of weight and power in his day, venerable and venerated in his age, and died serenely and sublimely, as became a Christian patriarch. James Shanks was also among the fathers, and a man of strength and usefulness. His experience was deep, his knowledge of doctrine clear and full, and he had many seals to his long ministry. He had passed his threescore and ten by several years when called to his reward. D. J. Parker was on the superannuated list, worn out in the work, and a man respected and beloved. He died of yellow fever—the only member of the Conference who died of that disease, although several others were attacked. The venerable J. G. Jones, a member of the Conference for fifty-four years, is still able to be in his place, and to aid in affairs by his long experience and counsels. He had the fever this year, but was looking ruddy and hale. Mounger, Galloway and Featherston had also been near death with the scourge, but they were among their brethren, and in health. We were gratified to meet Mrs. Julia Hays, of Baltimore, president of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Sister Hays was present to promote this special work of organizing Woman's Missionary Societies, and to give aid and counsel in this most important enterprise. The following organization was effected:

ORGANIZATION OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

President—Mrs. Charles B. Galloway, Vicksburg; Miss; Vice Presidents—Mrs. W. T. M. Linfield, Hazlehurst, Miss., Miss Ollie Watkins, Jackson, Miss., Miss Nannie Heard, Brookhaven, Miss., Mrs. R. S. Woodward, Natchez, Miss.; Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. W. L. C. Hummett, Recording Secretary—Miss Annie Linfield, Hazlehurst; Treasurer—Mrs. Annie DeMoss, Vicksburg.

Dr. R. A. Young was present to represent the Publishing House, and $3,000 was subscribed for the four per cent. bonds. Our missionary secretary, Rev. Dr. Wilson, ably presented the cause of missions before the Conference, and at the missionary anniversary on Saturday night. Dr. Young also assisted at the anniversary. Over $350 was collected. Dr. Wilson, as the representative and advocate of our foreign mission work, is impressing the church profoundly and most favorably. Among the notable visitors were also Dr. Sullivan, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Dr. J. H. Brunner, president of Hiawassee College, Tennessee. The preaching during the Conference was spoken of as excellent. We heard but one sermon, that of Dr. Wilson, on Sunday night—a most admirable and satisfying sermon, and every way worthy of the grandest of gospel themes. We were constantly reminded of Bishop Marvin by the preachers order of thought, style and tones, and when he was done we felt that the mantle of the sainted Bishop had fallen upon Dr. Wilson. Only one, Isaac L. Peebles, was received on trial. Thos. W. Brown, George Bancroft, Truman Carley and David Merchant were readmitted. The Conference is fairly full, but not so crowded as some others. Monday was devoted, in the main, to reports. The report on Education was a good one, and elicited some profitable talk from the Bishop and others. The state of the church, Sunday-schools, the Bible cause, religious literature, all received patient consideration. The following are some of the statistics as well as we were able to gather them: White members, 21,180; adults baptized, 817; infants baptized, 1,018; Sunday-schools, 231; Sunday school scholars, 8,257; collected for Conference claimants, $1,310 38; assessed, $2,700; collected for Bishops, $811; assessed, $900. Raised for foreign missions: In churches, $1,341 95; in Sunday-schools, $297 10. For domestic missions: In churches, $1,055 65; in Sunday-schools, $157. The estimate for preachers salaries was $37,629 25. Salaries paid, $37,501 20. The deficit in the pay of the preachers is very large indeed, and, in other things, the reports show the effects of the yellow fever and the stringency of the times. On Monday night, at ten o'clock, after a good and wholesome talk to the preachers, Bishop Keener read out the appointments.

Not Appreciated.

There is, perhaps, no one living over ten years of age who has not felt at times that he was not appreciated. What school boy has not sunk mortified under the winks or jibes of some larger boy, or the half-concealed smile of a teacher, at his awkwardness or mistakes when trying "to say his speech?" What man or woman, great or small, but has felt the sting of the world's derision or uncharitable criticism, nay, of its detraction and slander?

"Why are you not charitable as you used to be?" "Because, when I tried to do something for the world, instead of appreciation, I received depreciation. I acted benevolently, from the purest of motives, and certain foul-mouthed busyboilies attributed my actions to selfish and base designs at heart. If I overlooked insult, I was called a coward. If I forgave an injury, it was said that I was only waiting an opportunity to be revenged. If I tried to be zealous in Christian work, I was called a hypocrite. Nothing I have ever done has been appreciated; therefore I shall not try any more."

How often do we hear such answers. St. Paul gives us the best means of overcoming these mortifications and discouragements. "For," says he, "consider him who endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." If we will faithfully follow this exhortation the cure will infallibly result. For let us make the case as bad as possible with ourselves, and then compare it with that of Jesus, and we shall find that ours is indeed a very light affliction compared with that which he bore. Let us consider it first in the light of our dignity contrasted with the vileness of our detractors. Grant that we belong to the best family in the land—a family whose escutcheon has no blot, a family with no "black sheep," and no marplot or malaprop in it, a family whose hospitality, generosity, patriotism, refinement, intelligence and virtue have been proverbial. Let the detractor be of a family of which nothing good can be remembered, and let him be the basest of the family. Now let his malice be not only unprovoked, but let it be the return of the greatest kindness done by the good man of the good family. This is about as bad a case as we can imagine. Yet there is no man upon earth who has anything more than a passing dignity—none that has been entirely free at all times from passion, prejudice or self-interest—none who has not had his preferences for one and his distaste for another on the ground of kinship, locality, or some other circumstance. Ingratitude to a noble human benefactor is criminal—injury and defamation of such is diabolical. But now consider Jesus, the Son of God, the heir and partner of his eternal power and glory, and what comparison will royalty among men sustain to his dignity? Consider the motives which brought him to earth, and study them not in the light of his words, but in the light of his deeds. He did good to men, but asked no remuneration. His doctor's bill was never presented to the sick he had healed. The blind had sight restored without paying a cent. The dumb were taught to speak without any charge for tuition. He preached, and said nothing about quarterage. He fed five thousand hungry people, and presented no hotel or restaurant bill. He did this to vagabonds, tramps, harlots, beggars, thieves, cut-throats. Yet they turned and said: "He hath a devil," "he is a wine-bibber and a glutton," "he is a blasphemer," "he is in league with Beelzebub," "he is a traitor and a conspirator."

Let us consider it in another light. He came to teach eternal and universal truths. He announced these clearly and unequivocally. He presented them publicly, and challenged the world to the discussion of their merits. If he used sophistry, the world was in possession of reason and logic, to detect the false reasoning or bald assertions. The world turned from the merits of the question, and made a personal assault upon him. The lawyer who asked him the question as to the greatest commandment, gave the very answer that Jesus approved, and had announced again and again. But still the lawyer turned his arguments into vituperation of character. We frequently feel aggrieved that the world takes this unfair turn with us. It will not stick to the merits of the question. It is so much easier to make an attack upon personal character than to meet an argument, that the debates of the world generally degenerate into personal abuse. Too often our philosophers and theologians quit argument, and go to throwing dirt at one another, like the denizens of Billingsgate. Sensitive natures are shocked and mortified at such unfairness, not to say downright villainy. But if Jesus encountered and endured it, what right has the Christian to murmur? Did he not say: "Marvel not if the world hate you." The world hated and abused him first.

It would be easy for one to be a patriot if the enemy would not point his guns at my breast, but at the flag I bore. I would stand on the rampant all day, and hold the flag high, if he would shoot at it all the time. I would bring it down at night all riddled with bullets, and boast of my patriotism. But whenever I mount the parapet I see the enemy level his gun right at my heart, and there is where it hurts to be a patriot. My stomach is sick, my knees are weak. Why won't the enemy fight my country on the merits of the question? Campaigns are pleasant as I sit in my easy chair, my feet on a Brussels carpet, and a warm fire in the grate. But to loll through mud and slush, to stand picket in the snow, shivering until a bullet prostrates me, there to groan and freeze all alone in the midnight cold, that is hard. But such is war in earnest.

"Consider him who endured." It will nerve you when you grow weary and faint in your mind. Napoleon, when marching across the deserts of Egypt, dismounted and trudged through the sand at the head of his columns. Often a soldier, overcome by the heat, would sink down in the burning sand to die. His comrade would say to him: "Get up, or the Mamelukes will kill you." But he would only reply: "The sooner the better." Then his comrade would say: "Yonder is the Little Corporal walking, can't you endure as much as he?" With a "long live the Little Corporal," the weary soldier would rise and march on. So with our Captain. He endured more than he requires of us. Shall we, as Christians, regard our Leader with less enthusiasm than the French soldiers did us? They endured for perishable glory. Shall we not endure for the imperishable? T. A. S. A.

Our city Sunday-schools are having their Christmas festivals. Felicity, Moreau and St. Charles Avenue have given their young people very pleasant and delightful entertainments. The Christmas tree at St. Charles Avenue was a very fruitful one, bearing almost all manner of fruits. Aunt Nellie was surprised by two large and beautiful chromos, handsomely framed, and ready for the walls—a present from her boys. The pastor, Bro. Hannon, got an excellent umbrella—an article much needed these days.

Our friend, C. H. McKnight, of this city, is the duly appointed agent to obtain subscriptions to the forthcoming life and labors of Bishop Marvin, by Dr. Finney. We understand that the book will be ready for delivery by February 1, 1879. Subscriptions for the work will be taken at the book store of G. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp street. We trust that this admirable life of the beloved Bishop will meet with a large and rapid sale.

A happy New Year to all. The compliments of the season to everybody connected with the ADVOCATE—to publisher, printers, clerks, and to advertisers, subscribers and friends generally. May you all have a pleasant time during 1879. We sincerely pray that the remainder of life's voyage may be a smooth and prosperous one, and that Heavens choicest blessings may rest upon one and all.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—Rev. Elisha Phillips, presiding elder of the Marianna district, Alabama Conference, has remitted us $30, to be devoted to domestic missionaries who have suffered from the yellow fever in the Louisiana Conference.

A recent note from Bishop Paine to Dr. J. B. Walker brings the painful intelligence that Sister Paine is critically sick with typhoid pneumonia. The Bishop himself was able to be about but far from well. God grant that both may be soon restored to health, and that they may be spared to us yet many years.

We believe nearly all of our churches in the city held watchnight services. The inclement weather was a hindrance, but a good many were present, nevertheless, to end the old year, and to begin the new with meditation, prayer and praise.

Bishop Keener is at home again, after four months' absence, and resting from the labors of an arduous tour of Conferences. He preached at Carondelet Street on Sunday last, and his health seems to be pretty good.

Bishop Haven, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, preached at Ames church, in New Orleans, on Sunday morning, December 29. He is on his return from an Episcopal tour in Texas.

Preachers and laymen, members of the Louisiana Conference and visitors, on arrival, will report at 112 Camp street.

The request, says the Christian Intelligencer, that not only the Week of Prayer but the whole month of January be consecrated to prayer for a revival of religion in all lands is meeting with more and more favor. Nothing more can be done. The Gospel has been preached for a witness to millions of men who have not yet accepted it as the word of life. The preparation for a great blessing has been made. We believe that God does not lead or allow His people to make such a preparation except when He intends to give not only a commensurate but an exceeding blessing, which shall be so evidently His work and not ours that it shall fill the hearts and mouths of men with His praise. We believe that an overflowing blessing, a blessing there will not be room to receive, is in store for us, to be given when we ask for it with importunate supplications. At the same time it is well to remember that the world's history will not close on the 31st day of January, 1879. The answers to prayer certainly will not all be received before the 1st day of next February. Our hope is that the return granted in January will be a joyous beginning but only the beginning of an extension of the kingdom of heaven to continue in constantly increasing power until it ends in the millennium.

While there is this call to prayer there is also an attempt on the part of certain persons, who are in great need of Scriptural expansion, to confine the petitions of the children of God to certain pet schemes. The schemes are good, worthy of sympathy, and ought to have our prayers, but they do not deserve and ought not to have exclusive attention. Let it be remembered that God began the Week of Prayer in the Lodiana Mission, in India, and intended to teach the church something by it. The whole lesson to be learned no man can even outline, but one part of it certainly is that God did not intend the object of the Week of Prayer to be confined to a narrow range. Give no need to men of limited views. Let the whole church unite in crying with importunity, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Lay hold on Him who is mighty to save. Lay hold for life, never to let go. If you have not been diligent in prayer begin now, never to cease until you are where full happiness prevents desire. Let us be distinctly understood. One day in January is devoted to prayer for Colleges, Academies, Seminaries. That day we must observe. Besides, the whole church has agreed upon a certain directory of worship for January, embracing all interests. We do not mean that, when deprecating limitations, we mean the attempt to thrust inferior objects upon the church and to secure for them exclusive attention.

DO YOUR DUTY.—We heard a man ask the other day, "When will this incessant begging for money (he meant for church purposes) cease? It is call upon call, now for this, now for that, and I am sick and weary of it."

The answer is as easy as the question. It will never cease. It is a part of the situation. While there remains a heathen on earth; an unfaithful Christian, a sick man—soul-sick or body-sick—an orphan child, a cripple, an outcast, a wretched one anywhere with any wretchedness, the demands will still be made, and they will still be answered worse or better.

When all men on earth are blessed, when the sun light of heaven yields the hills and valleys of the world, and wraps the blue seas in eternal calm, then may men rest from their working and their giving—not before. Till then let the demands be made, and made boldly. The situation is plain. God owns a man, and all he has, and is, and I will be. Ask him to give for one of God's purposes. You only ask him to accept the situation, to acknowledge the facts. There is no call for timidity. Let the applicant do his duty. It rests with him to whom he applies whether he will do his. He should at all events be furnished with fragment and favorable opportunities.—Ex.

A class-leader of the venerable Wesleyan City Road Chapel, London, publishes these exceedingly interesting facts: "I have in my class five members whose united ages, with my own, make four hundred and eighty years; we average eighty each. The oldest member in my class is in her ninety-third year. She was baptized by Mr. Wesley; Mrs. Mortimer was her first-class leader; Dr. Clarke gave her her first ticket, which I have in my possession.) She has been a member seventy-one years. She is a connecting link between the old Foundry and the present chapel.

SHIPWRECKS.—There are two shipwrecks against which the Christian is warned in Scripture: The wreck of faith and the wreck of himself. Who, "concerning the faith have made shipwreck," is Paul's sad allusion to certain ones; the faith which, like a richly freighted ship, they were appointed to guide and keep amid the storm and tempest of unbelief, wrecked in their hands, though they possibly may have escaped safe to shore on broken pieces of the ship. "Lest, having preached to others, I myself should be a castaway," is yet a sadder suggestion of the apostle—the shipmaster who has faithfully guided the vessel of faith, yet himself swept overboard and lost.

Testimony to a Christian Wife's Influence.

The secular press, which is usually very liberal in such matters, has denounced Jere Black's coarse assault on the estimable widow of Commodore Vanderbilt, while trying to break the will. Mr. Black went beyond even "professional" limits in his effort to supply lack of evidence by personal abuse. The Commodore, so far from having shown mental incompetency by his second marriage with a Mobile lady younger than himself, did therein one of the best and wisest things of his life.

Fortunately he knew well and appreciated the character of that Southern Methodist woman who has so well adorned her position. Among the witnesses called was Mrs. Wilson (Augusta Evans) of Mobile. Well does the Nashville Christian Advocate remark: "The reader may be reminded of 1 Cor. vii, 14 and 1 Peter iii, 1, in reading the following: The will of Commodore Vanderbilt has given rise to long litigation—a son Cornelius) and a daughter contesting it on account of alleged 'undue influence.'"

We quote from the New York Sun, November 2:

A deeply-veiled and slight-built woman walked into the Surrogate's court yesterday morning on the arm of William H. Vanderbilt. Few recognized her as the well-known authoress, Augusta J. Evans. When Mr. Clinton escorted her to the witness-stand, and, in accordance with his request, her veil was raised, she displayed a face of singular placidity, and a composure almost amounting to demureness. She was dressed in deep black. She testified as follows:

"What is your name?"

"Augusta Evans Wilson."

"You are known to the public as Augusta J. Evans, the authoress, but your husband's name is Wilson?"

"Yes, sir. My husband sits behind you."

"Were you acquainted with Mrs. Commodore Vanderbilt?"

"I have known Mrs. Commodore Vanderbilt about twenty-two years. I became acquainted with Commodore Vanderbilt through his wife. I visited them in the year 1875. I had several conversations with him in 1875—one a very long one, during a drive in Central Park. He drove me in a buggy with a pair of horses which he desired me to see. After driving through the Park and up to Harlem lane, he took me around to show me a villa which he said he had given to Miss Hawley on account of the engagement which he said existed between her and his son George, deceased. In showing me the villa, he spoke of his children.

. . . He said, also, that the greatest comfort, and happiness, and peace of his life had been derived from his second marriage; that his wife had, since her entrance into his family, been the pacificator and special mediator between Cornelius J. and himself, and when he had refused to receive letters from Cornelius, and returned them unread, Cornelius J. prevailed upon Mrs. Vanderbilt to read them, or repeat their contents, and that she had done so, sometimes standing behind his chair, and read him portions of his son Cornelius' letters before he was aware of her intentions, and that she had specially mediated between them, and endeavored to bring about more harmonious relations, but he had told her that she did not know Cornelius. I remember specially when he said that the beautiful consistency of his wife's Christian character had done more to draw him to religion than all the churches he had ever been in or all the sermons that ever had been delivered; that he had watched her consistent Christian life day by day, and that while he was very fond of Dr. Deems, and admired him, and liked to see him around, his wife's beautiful consistency of character had influenced him far more in favor of religion than any sermons to which he had ever listened. He said that in the course of his long life and career, that involved the knowledge of a great variety of character, he had found her the purest and noblest woman that he ever saw, and that she had commanded from him a reverence that no other human being ever did.

NOTICE TO THE MEMBERS OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Brethren: I have this day forwarded names and moneys secured by me at the recent session of the Conference, for the Southern Quarterly Review, to Rev. J. W. Hinton, D. D., editor, Macon, Ga.

Should unexpected delays, etc., occur, in regard to reception of the Review, please notify Bro. Hinton of the fact.

J. BANCROFT,
Agent Appointed by Conf.

EUTAULA, Ala., Dec. 7, 1878.

LOST.—One draft on Sims, Bibb & Co., Mobile, Ala., handed in by one of the preachers of the Alabama Conference, and counted in the general collection for missions. The finder of said draft will please return to the subscriber. The preacher who handed in said draft will please write to me and inform me in whose favor the draft was drawn.

GEO. F. ELLIS,
Texas Board of Missions.

SHIVER, Ala., Dec. 7, 1878.

NOTICE.—The Advocate of Missions is a sixteen page paper, published bi-monthly, in the interests of the missionary work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It will probably be published hereafter in Nashville, Tenn. But all letters, communications, etc., must be sent to Rev. S. A. Steel, Columbus, Miss. The price of the paper is fifty cents a year. We are very anxious to publish it monthly, and in order that we may do so, we urge the preachers everywhere to aid us in its circulation. It is the very thing needed to develop the missionary spirit in all our charges. We want ten thousand subscribers. Help us to get them.

Address,

REV. S. A. STEEL,
Columbus, Miss.

Periodicals.

Mr. G. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp street, has on hand a supply of Dr. Munsey's sermons. We are indebted to him for a copy. We have as yet read them only in part. We observe some typographical errors, and some inaccurate quotations of Scripture, and here and there a gramatical slip. These blemishes will, of course, be corrected in a new edition, which we suppose will be shortly demanded. At present our purpose is merely to call attention to the fact that the sermons of the celebrated preacher are to be had. They make a very handsome volume, and among them are the finest productions of the author. They are edited by Bishop Keener, and published by J. W. Burke, Macon, Ga.

—After sixty-three years' existence as a quarterly and bi-monthly, the North American Review with the January number commences life anew by becoming a monthly. This change will produce a much greater degree of timeliness in the treatment of topics, and will add largely to the amount of matter presented in a year. The managers state that they have secured as contributors for the coming year the most eminent Statesmen, scholars, literateurs, and men of science on both sides of the Atlantic. The subscription price remains at $5, and the price per copy is fifty cents. Published at 751 Broadway, New York, and supplied by booksellers and newsdealers generally.

—The National Repository for January, 1879, is a superior number of this able and entertaining monthly. The articles are: Afghanistan, by the editor, illustrated; A Lake-Side Idyl; Old Colonial Days, illustrated; Incongruities and Absurdities; Among the Thorns; The Handwriting on the Wall; The Coming Reign; Charles Hodge, D.D. LL.D., with portrait; Editorial Miscellaney. The National is published by Hitchcock & Walden, Cincinnati; Nelson & Phillips, New York. Price, $3 a year post-paid.

—Our Sunday-School periodicals for January, 1879, are to hand, and a most valuable budget they make. The Visitor and the Little People are things of beauty in typography and illustrations, and they are filled with the choicest reading for the young people. The Magazine is the best that has been issued. The Sunday-school lessons for the first quarter of 1879 makes a neat and convenient pamphlet, and will be a great convenience to teachers. D. Cunningham begins the year most auspiciously, and from the promise of the new volume we are sure that he will give us the best Sunday-school papers that our Southern press has ever owned. We most earnestly commend them all to families and Sunday-schools.

—Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine, American edition, the Leonard Scott Publishing Company, New York, has the following articles: Contemporary Literature; Journalists; John Callegate—Part IX; French Home-Life; The Fruit and Vintage of Herefordshire; The Progress of Naval Architecture; The Cottage by the River; The Berlin Settlement; Index.

—The American Agriculturist for January is, as usual, replete with valuable information, and abounds in illustrations. This first class journal is published by the Orange Judd Company, New York, at $1.50 a year.

—Our readers who are not acquainted with the fact may be benefitted by being informed that one of the handsomest Magazines in Yankeedom is Illustrated Monthly Magazine published by James Vick, Rochester, New York. Each number contains one or more beautiful Colored Plates, representing some flower or family of flowers, worth more than the price of the Magazine. In the January number we find two Colored Plates, one a group of Roses, and the other illustrating Church and Holiday Decorations, with a world of information on the subject that will be invaluable to the ladies, especially at Christmas and Easter times.

"Mighty God, While Angels Bless Thee."

Robert Robinson, the author of the well-known hymn beginning

"Come, thou Fount of every blessing," was a man of genius and impressible feelings, but was easily influenced by the force of association or circumstance, an instability which he deeply regretted in his declining years. He was by turns a Methodist, an Independent, a Baptist and a Socinian. He once said to a lady, whom he chanced to hear singing in a stage-coach, after his relapse into the gloomy speculations of Socinianism: "Madam, I am the poor, unhappy man who composed that hymn, many years ago, and I would give a thousand worlds, if I had them, to enjoy the feelings I had then."

"Come, thou Fount of every blessing,"

The early Methodists produced a number of hymns, which, like the German lyrics, written during the thirty years' war, illustrate the majesty of faith. Among these are John Wesley's itinerant productions, Charles Wesley's famous hymn, written on the Land's End, Cornwall and Oliver's "The God of Abraham Praise."

The well-known hymn beginning

belongs to the same class. It was written under peculiar circumstances, and such as would seem to be little likely to inspire so noble a theme.

"It was composed," says Dr. Belcher, "for the use of Benjamin Williams, deacon of the Baptist church at Reading." Benjamin was a favorite of Robinson when a boy. One day the poet took the boy into his lap, and, under the influence of that affectionate feeling which a child's love inspires, he wrote:

"Mighty God, while angels bless Thee,
May an infant join the lay?
Lord of men, as well as angels,
Though in every creature—Thou!

So far the poet's mind seems to have been influenced by the child he was holding. But a warm glow of religious feeling was awakened within him, and the second stanza was one of remarkable fervor and power:

"Lord of every land and nation,
Ancient of eternal days,
Sounded through the wide creation,
Be Thy power and glory praise,
Hallelujah! Amen.

After completing the whole hymn, he read it to the child, and put it playfully into his hand. "Well do we remember," says Dr. Belcher, "the deep feeling with which Deacon Williams described to us the scene, as we sat with him by his own fireside."

Such was the happy hour of domestic peace and affection that produced one of the most majestic strains in the language which has been sung in all Christian lands. It is one among the many instances on record in which the affectionate confidence of childhood has awakened the sweetest inspiration in the poet's heart, and the most harmonious chords of his lyre.

The hymn as altered reads:

"Mighty God, while angels bless Thee,
May a mortal join the lays?"

Here is a part of the life history of a Fiji islander—Livai Naborro—who became a Wesleyan Missionary and was killed and eaten by cannibals in New Britain last April. The Rev. John Brown, of Fiji, after having known him for five years, says that he was a true specimen of the men who have been sent out from the Islands to the New Britain Mission. He has often heard him preach and pray and tell his Christian experience in class-meeting, and does not doubt that on the trying hour of his departure he was "happily prepared to glorify the Son of God by a martyr's death." He was an efficient native agent, and might have risen to a good position at home, but he could not stay, as he believed himself called to go as a missionary to a strange island. He was one of six who offered for the new mission, but the district could not spare him, because it was thought unwise to send all the best men. When he learned this, he wrote: "Now that I have heard that I am not to go I have no rest in my spirit, and my soul weeps when I think of the dark and miserable condition of the people of New Britain; my soul longs intensely; therefore, let me go, that I may tell those who are perishing in darkness of the great light of the world, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Saviour of all. I know when the Gospel has done for Fiji, and it can do the same for New Britain." When this was read at the teachers' meeting, it was decided to let him go. Before going, he preached a farewell sermon to the teachers from John x: 11. Methodist.

Honor Thy Mother.

It was a cold, dark night in winter. The wind blew, and the snow was hurled furiously about, shrieking its high feats around the chinks and cracks, and in the very hair of those who were out. A traveling lecturer was to speak, and, notwithstanding the storm, the village was very generally astir to hear him.

William Arnold, by a strong effort of his will, left his own cozy fireside, accompanied his wife to the lecture, and, for the first time in his life, was thoroughly interested in what he heard.

The lecturer was well, if you took my word for it.

Perhaps I should. His mother replied, as she put a paragraph from his letter and drew up a chair for him. Together they listened to the storm, the lecturer and the boy who had once been expelled from school, but who had now grown up to tell that he could to whom he owed it. They had not walked very far, he said:

"I am very proud of you, sir, master."

"Proud that you can take care of me?" she said to him, with a heart gushing with tenderness.

"This is the first time you have leaned upon me," said the happy boy.

There will be few hours in that child's life of more exalted pleasure than he enjoyed that evening, even if he should live to old age, and should in his manhood lovingly provide for her who, in his helpless infancy, watched over him.

We may know the love of Christ and be filled with it, and constrained by it, even as we know by experience the cool refreshment of a fountain whose depths we cannot fathom, and rejoice in the warm beams of the sun, whose greatness we can not comprehend. They who best know that love understand best what the Apostle means when he says, that it "passeth knowledge."—Dr. A'an Dyck.

Publisher's Department.

EVERY one of our readers should carefully peruse the advertisement of the Royal Manufacturing Co., of New York, which appears for the first time in our issue of this date. The goods will speak for themselves.

THE proprietor of "Andrews' Bazar" has been the first to prove that a fashion journal which is unexceptionable in every regard, can be published at the extraordinarily low price of one dollar for twelve numbers. Each number contains 16 pages of choice reading, beautifully printed. W. R. Andrews, publisher, Cincinnati.

THE well-known and popular seedsmen Messrs. D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, Mich., are again in our columns with their usual announcement. Their catalogue, which is mailed free, is offered to all intending buyers. We would advise them to avail themselves of this offer.

OUR friend, Philip Werlein, the popular dealer in musical instruments of every description, has been adding lately to his already immense stock of goods until now he has an assortment that can be equalled by few houses in the country and excelled by none. Mr. Werlein has by tact and superior business management made his goods known throughout the entire South and has lots of them to offer at it pleases him to advance his interests. His store, on Canal street, is one of the finest of that street of fine stores. His advertisement will be of interest to all those who have musical taste.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

PIZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not injure the skin, or substitute brown or black spots in the place. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a sense of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—Farmers, Families and others can purchase the remedy equal to DR. TOBIAS VENETIAN LINIMENT, for the cure of cholera, diarrhœa, dysentery, cramp, colic and sick-headache, taken internally. It is perfectly harmless. Farm, Garden and Household.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.—The fish may be scaled much easier by first dipping into boiling water about a minute.

That salt fish are quickest and best freshened by soaking in sour milk.

That milk which has turned or changed may be sweetened or rendered fit for use again by stirring in a little soda.

That salt will curdle new milk hence in preparing milk porridge, etc., the salt should not be added until the dish is prepared.

That clear boiling water will remove tea stains and many fruit stains. Pour the water through the stain and thus prevent its spreading over the fabric.

That a tablespoonful of turpentine boiled with your white clothes will greatly aid the whitening process.

That boiling starch is much improved by the addition of spirm, or salt, or both, or a little gum arabic dissolved.

That blue ointment and kerosene mixed in equal proportion, and applied to bedsteads, is an infallible bug remedy, and that a coat of whitewash is fitting for the walls of a log house.

That kerosene will soften boots or shoes that have been hardened by water, and will render them pliable as new.

That kerosene will make your tea kettle as bright as new. Saturate a woolen rag and rub with it. It will also remove stains from the clean varnished furniture.

That cold rain water and soap will remove machine grease from washable fabrics.

Col. Scott, of Iowa, who is an extensive farmer and close observer, writes thus of the artichoke: My hogs seem to thrive upon them as well as when fed with corn, and for stock hogs they are better. I regard them as being in no small degree an antidote for hog cholera. I found the yield to be nearly 1000 bushels per acre. After digging all I desire to store, I turn my hogs in, and they complete the work, and at the same time their droppings enrich the land. The white variety is more hardy and more prolific than the Brazilian or red artichoke. I find it a profitable crop, even on my thin lands.

CUSTARD.—Boil one quart of milk, add while boiling the table spoonful of flour wet with a little cold milk. Beat in a proper sized pudding dish, three eggs, yolks in the boiling milk, a little at a time, stirring all well together. Add four tablespoons of sugar, a very little salt, a flavoring of any flavor you desire. Bake in a pan of boiling water, twenty minutes or half an hour, a little more.

This custard is less likely to be watery than one made with more eggs.

WET FEET.—A friend writes from Europe: When the boots are taken off, fill them quite full of dry oats. The grain has a great affinity for damp, and will rapidly absorb the last vestige of it from the wet leather. As it takes up the moisture it swells and fills the boot with a tightly fitting last, keeping it from coal, and drying the leather without hardening it. In the morning, shake out the oats and toast them a few hours before the fire to dry, ready for the next wet night.—American Agriculturist.

CHEESE CAKES.—Butter thoroughly a deep dish and cover with thin slices of rich cheese; lay over the cheese thin slices of well-buttered bread, first covering the cheese with a little red pepper and mustard; then another layer of cheese. Beat the yolk of an egg in a cup of cream; milk will do—and pour over the dish, and put into the oven. Bake till nicely brown. Serve hot, or it will be tough, hard and worthless. Cultivator.

A tree-felling machine, patented in England, has been tried on the Rumpell Park Estate, where several trees were successfully felled. The machine consists of a saw driven by steam power, and it cuts the timber close to the ground. A sycamore 2 ft. 9 in. across the cut, was felled in less than four minutes, and another 22 in. in diameter, in a minute and a half.

BUTTERNUT CAKE.—Four cups of sugar, one of butter, one cup butternut meats, one half cup sweet milk, two and one half cups of flour, heaped, one teaspoonful of soda, two of cream tartar. Roll the black scales off the meat before putting them in the cake. Bake in two loaves.

Do not put manure on the roots of the trees you plant, but fill the holes nearly full of earth and then put in the manure and cover it. Well-rotted cow and stable manure are best.

SURE REMEDY FOR BALDNESS

—It is interesting to learn that a process of manufacturing artificial stone has been patented by a Dr. Fernitue, of Germany, which promises the most satisfactory results. The chief constituents of this stone are sand and slaked lime. By boiling, a combination of silica and lime takes place. The mortar thus made is petrified by aqueous vapor, and hardened by absorption of carbonic acid from the air. The combination of the lime and sand under the action of hot water takes place at low temperature—from 250° to 300° Fahrenheit. The time of heating is about the same as for brick, but while a white heat is required for brick, 300 is quite sufficient for the mortar stone. Of course the stone can be shaped the same as brick or in other designs, according to the use to be made of it. When first cast the stone can be easily cut with a knife, but after a year of exposure to the atmosphere it shows throughout the hardness of good sandstone, which it resembles. It stands the test of extremes of heat and cold, dry and damp weather, equally well. It is said the cost of manufacturing is about the same as that of brick, while the product is a great deal better, more durable, and more widely useful, whether for buildings, pavements or streets. If the anticipations of the value of the new material are fully realized by further tests, a problem in cheap, abundant and lasting building material will have been solved, and yet we may live to see our streets laid with stone that will stand the wear and tear of traffic as well as bowlders, and be vastly more agreeable to travel over. —Commercial.

—A series of excellent plates illustrating the insects injurious to the cotton plant has been privately printed and distributed by Townsend Glover, late entomologist to the Department of Agriculture, under the title: "Manuscript Notes from my Journal: Cotton, and the principal insects, etc., frequenting or injuring the plant in the United States." The plates are most excellent, and are drawn much better than the other plates of the series. About thirty insects prey upon the cotton plant—the leaves and boll—the most destructive being the army worm and the boll worm. Mr. Glover's work is one of great merit, and it is a pity that a large number of copies were not in the hands of cotton planters.

—A foot pound is often mentioned in modern mechanical writings, but all readers do not understand the meaning of the term. When it is said, for instance, that 400 foot pounds of work is done, the meaning is that an effort has been put forth sufficient to raise 400 pounds 1 foot; 1 pound 400 feet, 2 pounds 200 feet, or any number of pounds to such a height that the product of weight and height equals 400.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

Celebrated American

WORM SPECIFIC

OR

VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semi-circle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the mornings; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive, stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine Dr. McLane's Vermifuge bears the signatures of C. McLane and Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa., on the wrapper.

LIVER PILLS

are not recommended as a remedy for all the ills that flesh is heir to, but in affections of the liver, such as all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Each box has a red wax seal on the lid with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILL.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING Bros.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

EDUCATIONAL.

Woodville Female Seminary.

A NON-SECTARIAN ACADEMY, UNDER the supervision of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Mississippi Conference; Hon. F. McGehee, President of Board of Trustees. For Thoroughness of instruction, healthfulness, cheapness, and in any other advantages, is not surpassed. We invite those interested to examine our Efficiency, and to obtain circulars, by calling upon Mr. Philip Werlein, New Orleans, La., or address the Principal, A. J. WRIGHT, Woodville, Miss.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicte of the late R. G. Bacon, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet-LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

"THE price and quality of board and tuition compares favorably with other colleges, while the peculiar constitution of the college and the influence of its surroundings render it, in my judgment the very best and safest place for boys and young men, at a certain stage of culture, which exists in the Methodist Church South."—Rev. F. M. Grace, A. M. of Alabama.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disorders of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH, and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk-like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop magnified 20 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitate's sharp particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable properties as found in the former.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take no other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

A STRANGE MESSENGER.—A professional diver told me that he had in his house what would probably strike a visitor as a very strange chimney ornament—the shell of an oyster holding fast a piece of printed paper. The possessor of this ornament was diving on the coast when he observed at the bottom of the sea the oyster on a rock with a piece of paper in its mouth which he detached, and commenced to read through the goggles of his head-dress. It was a gospel tract, and coming to him thus strangely and unexpectedly, so impressed his soul-converted heart, that he said: "I can hold out against God's mercy in Christ no longer, since it pursues me thus." He became, while at the ocean's depth, a repentant, converted, and as he was assured sin-forgiven man—"saved at the bottom of the sea."

BENSON'S CAPCINE

POROUS PLASTER.

This article is something more than a common porous plaster. Being spread with a new and extraordinary description of Burgundy pitch, medicated with Capcine (the active principle of the cayenne pepper plant), it will be found that the above is in fact superior to the ordinary porous plaster in every particular, and for the relief and cure of pain, whether local or rheumatic, in the back, chest, kidneys, or any other part of the body, it will be found to possess extraordinary curative properties, far exceeding in power and efficacy any plaster or remedies which have yet been introduced to the public. Its action is immediate, and in all cases of local pain, weakness, or local disease, a cure may be confidently relied on in a few days. Being entirely free from any mercurial or other injurious substance, it may be worn by the most delicate female or child with perfect safety, and will be found to relieve pain in a few minutes after application, and to cure in a few days what other plasters and remedies will only relieve after many weeks' use. Sold by druggists, price 25 cents, or five for $1, or sent free by mail on receipt of price. Manufactured only by the Capcine Porous Plaster Co., 338 Canal street, New York.

THE JEWS SYRIAN.—We Christians can learn some lessons from the heathen and others. In the late church congress in England a speech was delivered by Rev. Mr. Pearson, who said in his audience he was going to tell them what the Ameer of Cabul thought of the pew system. When the Ameer of Cabul visited Peshawur in 1870 he was shown the English church at that station, but when the chaplain of the church explained to him that the whole congregation was ranged in order according to the relative rank of the different officials, he expressed his astonishment. "Why," he said, "I am the chief ruler of my country, but when I worship in the mosque I take my place in the humble row with my servants, for in the house of God all are equal." What a changed state there would be in our Christian churches if rich could feel all their pews were to be left outside the door, for the presence of God in the house of God will humble the proud and exalt the lowly.

THE TRUE SHEPHERD.—Among the Highlands of Scotland and Dr. Guthrie, the Edinburgh preacher, tells of a shepherd who, being a long distance from the fold, discovered that one of his sheep was gone astray. It was a cold, stormy night, and the path was rough and dangerous, but seeing the lost sheep on the brink of a precipice, he left the rest, and after a long search found the poor creature, and carried it back in his bosom to the fold. Then, calling his neighbors around him, he said, "Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost."

A PERSONAL WIDOW gave this advice to a young lad, friend the other day: "Jane, never you marry a minister, marry one who in an emergency has enough of the grace of God in his heart to go from the pulpit to the kitchen and pare the potatoes for dinner without growling."

A pastor was conversing with a very gentle and most indispensable critic, the pastor's wife, on a Sabbath evening, about the morning sermon. "Was it good?" "Yes," she replied, "very." "Was it not a complete chain of thought with a link omitted?" "Yes, it was certainly this, but it seemed to me, husband, that, of the hearer's end, you forgot to put on the hook."

A Bride of Girls.

When speaking of a man who is chivalric toward women, we call him "a thorough gentleman." Schoolgirls pronounce him "splendid." But an Arab, a donkey-driver of Cairo, once gave a much finer illustration of the feeling toward women which should characterize a gentleman.

An English lady asked him if Abdel Kader, the Arab General taken prisoner by the French in Algiers was coming to Cairo. He replied that he did not know, and then asked if the chief were not "A kahl bonat" a brother of girls? "I do not know if he has sisters," prosaically answered the lady.

"Too Arabs, O lady," said the old donkey driver, "call that man 'a bath fel gers' to whom God has given a clean heart to love all women as his sisters and strength and courage to fight for their protection."

"Our English phrase "a thorough gentleman," or even "splendid," seems almost unmeaning besides "a brother of girls."

THEY ARE WORTH THEIR

WEIGHT IN GOLD

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me. I procured one box with little faith. I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles cure, and I have gained forty pounds in solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Biliousness, Fever and Ague, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaints, Colic, etc.

TUTT'S PILLS exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and with certainty will relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these Pills of itself informs their admirability to nourish the body; hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, Dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sinking sensations, weakness of the kidneys, chronic constipation, and impurities of the blood, which will soon follow.

LAST DAYS.

BY ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

The long brown beach lies sleeping in the sun,
The hot white noon leans idly to the bay,
Cloud upon folded cloud, above my head,
Opens the blossoms of the perfect day.

There is the color like a living soul
Upon the half-revealed but half-veiled sky;
Glad to sad eyes, reclines the flushed, full tide,
Celestial body that shall never die.

My prayers look out like orphans through their tears;
My heart cries out, Oh life! Oh life! for thee.
But One across the water draweth nigh,
Too kind and so too dumb to answer me.

—Sunday Afternoon.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

GALVESTON, Dec. 31.—Gen. Trevino, of the regular Mexican Army, arrived here last night, accompanied by his staff officers, Gen. Ord, commanding the Department of Texas, other American officers, citizens of Mexico and San Antonio. They were received by the citizens and a military committee. A salute of fifteen guns was fired. They spent the day visiting the public buildings.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—There was no excitement when business opened at the Sub-Treasury this morning. Treasurer Hillhouse was prepared to meet all probable rush for gold, but the demand was very light, while in some instances greenbacks were preferred. The first demand was for $210, but not another dollar in gold was paid out for half an hour. Within that time there were half a dozen applicants for sums less than $50, but as no payments are made under that amount, they were refused. National bank bills were also offered but were not taken; only legal-tender being exchangeable.

The Chamber of Commerce to-day adopted resolutions felicitating the community upon resumption, and congratulating Secretary Sherman upon the success of his policy, recognizing the action of the city banks in co-operating with the Treasury, and thanking Congress for the establishment of the national banking law. A resolution was also adopted calling upon Congress to avert the danger attending the adoption of silver as a measure of values by amending the existing law so as to further limit the coinage of the silver dollar, and its use as a legal tender. Copies of these resolutions were ordered to be sent to the Senate and to the House of Representatives, and also to Secretary Sherman.

In an interview with a representative of the Associated Press to-day Gen. Hillhouse, United States Sub-Treasurer, stated that resumption, so far as the working of his office was concerned, had been attended by a most gratifying success, and that there appeared to be no demand for coin," the payments thereof in exchange for paper being very insignificant. Up to two o'clock the Sub-Treasury had received over $500,000 in gold, in exchange for which he has issued legal tenders and certificates of deposit, while on the other hand it was estimated that the disbursement of coin for the day would not amount to over $125,000.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 2.—The resumption of specie payments in this city caused no stir whatever. Inquiry at prominent banks show that the demand for gold, up to noon to-day, was very limited.

NEWBURYPORT, Mass., Jan. 2.—Caleb Cushing died at 11:17 P. M.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 3.—The Belgic has arrived from Hong Kong, with advices to December 3. No further authentic intelligence has been received respecting the movements of the pretender to the throne of Anam. Rumor tells of his rapid advance towards the capital of that kingdom, but Chinese authorities discountenanced inquiry.

Tang, the new Minister to England and France, has sailed for his post. Great hopes are entertained by the Liberal party from this mission.

COLUMBUS, Ga., Jan. 3.—The Rankin House, the principal hotel in Columbus, with several large stores underneath, is now (9:30 P. M.,) burning. It is feared it will be a total loss. The loss will probably be $70,000. The insurance on the building is not more than $20,000.

The weather is intensely cold and a high wind prevails.

CHICAGO, Jan. 3.—Dempster Hall, at Evanston, Ill., was burned to the ground last night; loss $25,000; insurance $3000. This building was the theological home of a large number of Methodist ministers of the Northwest, being a branch of the Evanston University.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3, Noon.—The sudden and severe cold snap has generally deranged travel this morning in and out of the city. The Jersey City ferries are impeded by great masses of ice on the New York side, and boats are running with difficulty.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Dec. 31.—The Viceroy of India reports that Major Cavagnari has received a friendly letter from Gigod Mahomed, Chief of Kunar Valley, announcing his intention of coming in. The Times says this may be heralded as a forerunner of intelligence already hinted at, that the districts of Chiral, Swat and Kunar will be incorporated into the Indian Empire by occupation. This tract of country is easy of access and a direct road will be opened up from Punjaub to Yarkand and Kashgar, presenting far fewer difficulties than that now followed by the Central Asian Trading Association, which traverses the high mountain ranges of Cashmere and Lodak.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The Viceroy of India telegraphs that Gen. Stewart reports the completion of a good road, suitable for heavy artillery, over the Ghorazin Pass. Advances were commenced by both the Ghorazin and Khojack Passes to-day, with the intention of concentrating at Takhtipul for the final advance on Candahar.

The most reliable reports state that only three or four weak Afghan regiments and a few hundred irregulars, destitute of artillery, are at Candahar. There is no news from Cabul, or from Yakoob Khan.

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent with the Quetlak column, says the artillery has safely passed Khojack Pass. The bulk of Gen. Biddulph's division is now in the plain of Candahar.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The Oldham masters, at yesterday's meeting, refused to pledge themselves to restore the old hands to their former places or exempt carders from the reduction. The loss in wages by the strike amounts to £60,000, besides the expenditure of the union funds and loss to capital by the stoppage of four millions of spindles. The Sun Mill, which is the largest limited company in Oldham, announces a loss of £22,000 during the last three months. This is the greatest loss ever sustained by any cotton company since the cotton famine.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The number of business failures announced in the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland during the year 1878 was 15,059, of which 2643 were in financial and wholesale and manufacturing branches of trade, 12,416 in retail trades, professional pursuits, builders, publicans, working classes etc., against 2172 and 8850 under the respective headings in 1877, showing an increase of 1037 failures last year over the proceeding year.

State Sunday-School Convention.

Under a call from the Executive Committee of the New Orleans Sunday-School Association, soon to be made public by circulars, there will be held in this city, on February 20, 21 and 22, a State Sunday-School Convention. This Convention is to be composed of two delegates from each evangelical Sunday-school of the city and State. These delegates may be pastor, superintendent or teachers, and male or female, but they must be actually engaged in the Sunday-school work. The Convention will have counsel and addresses from such men as Rev. C. A. Peltz, of the Sunday-School Times, B. F. Jacobs, editor of the International Sunday-School Helps, E. Payson Porter, and others. Ralph Wells, of the celebrated Grace Mission School of New York, will conduct a normal class; and other features of great interest will be added. The aims of the Convention will be to stimulate zeal and enthusiasm in the work, to raise the standard higher, and to extend and increase the number and efficiency of Sabbath-schools.

Let our interior friends who are in this work see to it that their schools are represented at the coming Convention.

Further information may be had on this subject by addressing L. H. Gardner, president, or Jos. H. Spearing, secretary, of the New Orleans Sunday-School Association.

On Board Steamer J. H. Hanna.

JANUARY 1, 1879.

At a meeting of the members of the Louisiana Annual Conference Rev. C. R. Godfrey was called to the chair, and J. B. Godfrey was requested to act as secretary.

On motion the following preamble and resolutions were offered and adopted:

Whereas, The urbanity of Capt. J. W. Blanks, and other officers of the Steamer John H. Hanna, extended to us, since our embarkation, so conducive to the happiness of the travelers, and in the reduction of fare of the members of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been of such a character as to increase our already great respect for and confidence in them; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we take pleasure in recommending the Steamer John H. Hanna, of the Ouachita Transportation Company, and her officers, to the traveling public.

Resolved, That we request the secretary to furnish Capt. J. W. Blanks a copy of the aforesaid preamble and resolution, and also the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, Catahoula News, Columbia Herald and Ouachita Telegraph to publish the proceedings of this meeting.

Signed,

C. R. GODFREY, Chairman.
J. B. GODFREY, Secretary.

Mr. Muller's Experiences in America.

The following extracts from Mr. Muller's new report, just issued, are of extreme interest. We are reminded of Wordsworth's lines:

"And I should wish my days to be Joined each to each by natural piety."

By how much more than "natural piety" are the days of a life like this "joined each to each"—even by praise for answered prayer.

OCTOBER 19.—Legacy of the late Mr. B., of Philadelphia, U. S. A., $5,000 (£1,002 0s. 1d.) Mr. B. insured his life for $5,000 in the year 1868, with the intention that the amount should be paid for the benefit of the orphans on Ashley Down. The testator died on November 20, 1874, but I had never heard the least about this. On my arrival in the United States of America I was preaching on September 10, 1877, in Dr. Budington's church in Brooklyn, when a slip of paper was handed to me, on which it was stated that if I would apply at such and such a place in Philadelphia I might obtain this legacy of $5,000. I did so, and after some time obtained in full the amount. Thus my being led of the Lord to labor for a season in the United States in word and doctrine, was also used as a means of obtaining the payment of this legacy.

But this was not all. In New York, in Brooklyn, in Philadelphia, in Baltimore, and in other cities in the United States, I had the joy of seeing orphans who had been brought up under my care, some of whom had walked in the ways of the Lord for a number of years, and one of them for about thirty.

After my having preached the first time in Calvary Presbyterian church, San Francisco, Cal., on April 26, 1878, Mr. Wilkinson, who has a respectable situation in that city, introduced himself to me. I had not seen him for about twenty years. He holds fast the Lord Jesus, and is a happy Christian, and, as he told me, is even happier now than during the American civil war. It was a real joy to me to meet this former orphan, about 6,500 miles from Bristol.

I have to state that thousands of similar instances of blessing have been the result of our labors. While engaged on a preaching tour in England, Scotland and Ireland, I met converted orphans in every one of the large cities in which I preached, and sometimes ten or fifteen at once, who, after the service, came to shake hands with me, some of whom had left the orphan houses more than ten or fifteen years, and are now fathers or mothers of families. Thus we reap in a small degree even now; but how vast will be the harvest in eternity. Nothing has so abundantly shown to me the blessed results of my labors in connection with the Scriptural Knowledge Institution as going from city to city, and from country to country, on my preaching tours. In every city in England, Scotland and Ireland, where I preached, I had testimony from the mouth of multitudes of the great blessing which they have received through reading the reports of the institution, or the narrative of the Lord's dealings with me, which contains the substance of the reports. The same I found to be the case in sixty-eight cities where I preached in Switzerland, the German empire, and in Holland, also in all the many cities in the United States of America, where I have been preaching.

While I am writing this, I am in San Francisco, Cal., where I shall, God willing, be preaching some time, as well as in seven or eight other cities in California, and where such labors are greatly needed. I am now about 6,500 miles from Bristol; but even here, though I have been only two days in the city of San Francisco, I have met already with many pastors of churches and other Christian gentlemen who have been abundantly blessed, as they say, through reading the account of my trials of faith in connection with the institution, and my practical remarks made regarding them. Thus, great as my expectations of blessing were when I began this institution, more than forty-four years since, they have been increased a thousand times beyond my expectations. I refer to all this, in order that Christians laboring in any way for the Lord, may be encouraged to go on in their service, being assured that, if we seek to be vessels meet for the Master's use, and go on patiently and perseveringly with our work, in due season we shall reap.—London Christian.

The Ecclesiastical Laws of Germany.

On the tenth of December, 1871, a law was passed by the Empire which threatened with imprisonment for a period not exceeding two years any of the clergy who, in the public exercise of their office, or in the church, spoke of political questions in such a way as to endanger the public peace. A second law, dated the fifth of July, 1872, dissolved all the institutions of the Jesuits, with the orders and fraternities associated with them, within the German Empire, forbade all action on the part of the members, and expelled all foreign Jesuits. A third law, passed on the fourth of May, 1873, threatens all clergymen who continue to exercise their functions after being deprived of their office by a judicial sentence with confiscation in certain districts or places, and eventually with the loss of German nationality and banishment from Germany. In the years from 1872 to 1876 Prussia passed a number of laws, the object of which was to protect the rights of the State against the churches—especially the Romish Church. The scope of them may be thus summed up. The oversight of all public and private schools is accorded to the State; the institution of clergymen, whether permanent or temporary, can only be made after notice has first been given to the government, which has the right, on legal grounds, to protest; clergymen must possess the rights of German citizenship; have attended a German gymnasium, studied theology for three years at a German university, and passed an examination in history and German literature before a State commission. All ecclesiastical seminaries are to be under the oversight of the State. Otherwise they must be closed. New schools for boys or for students are not to be built, nor youths received into those already existing. A clergyman who is punished for any crime or misdemeanor for which the penalty is imprisonment with hard labor in a house of correction, or with the loss of municipal rights or public offices, is not to be reinstituted. The same is to be the case with a clergyman from whose conduct it may be premised that he will oppose the laws and regulations of the State and endanger the public peace. Actual discipline is only to be exercised by the German ecclesiastical authorities. The accused must be heard, an ordinary trial must be held, a written judgment given, with the grounds on which it rests. Corporal punishments are forbidden, and fines are not allowed to exceed ninety marks. Imprisonment in a domus deacritorum not to be for longer than three months, and these institutions to be under government surveillance; the appeal to be made to the State when the sentence is illegal. If a clergyman has so seriously violated the laws of the State, relating to the clerical office, and its functions, that his remaining in office seems incompatible with public order, then, on the proposition of the State authorities, he shall be dismissed from his office. No penalties are permitted except for ecclesiastical offenses or those concerning religion. They cannot be inflicted because political or civil rights are not exercised, or to enforce their exercise in a particular way. The public announcement, performance or proclamation of them to the congregation in an injurious way is punishable. A royal court of ecclesiastical affairs decides concerning appeals, dismisses from office, and so forth. Bishoprics which are unlawfully occupied, as well as other places, are to be administered as to their temporalities by a State commission. Revenues provided by the State for the clergy (or arising from funds administered by the State) are withheld if the receivers do not declare, either by word or deed, that they submit to the laws. Benefices that have been vacant longer than a year may be filled by the patron or the community. The property of benefices is administered, under State laws, by a steward chosen by the community. The State exercises an oversight of the administration of the diocesan property. All orders and fraternities, except those devoted to the care of the sick, are to be dissolved at the latest by the third of June, 1879, and those which remain are to be under the supervision of the State. This summary will be sufficient to show the great importance of these laws.—Contemporary Review.

The Glorification of Doubt.

Some metropolitan pulpits, and some leading religious presses of the country, seem to feel that their special office is to deal with the prevailing skepticism of the times. And they do deal with it after a most singular fashion. They are perpetually emblazoning its triumphs. They never cease to tell us how it is carrying everything before it. They speak of it in such a tone of appreciation, and even half approval, that plain, honest men cannot help thinking they are far more than half skeptics themselves, as to all the distinctive principles of gospel truth. They are sowing the seeds of doubt broadcast over the land, by speaking so doubtingly on all points, that men begin to doubt whether they themselves hold any fixed and certain beliefs. Thus, instead of reclaiming the wanderers, they shake the faith of hundreds of young minds, where they remove or satisfy the honest doubts of one.

An earnest, positive man like Moody or George Muller, who never mentions the subject of doubt at all, but speaks from his own conviction and experience of the saving power of the gospel truth, will do a thousand times more to relieve the doubts, both of the half-hearted Christian and of the avowed skeptic, than this whole school of speculative theorizers, who analyze and philosophize, and tell us all about the causes of doubt, without ever pointing to its remedy. The best way to remove doubt is to inculcate the truth itself with that authority and certainty which spring from a living experience of its power. "We speak that we do know and testify that which we have seen." "Knowing, therefore, the terrors of the Lord, we persuade men." There is no higher philosophy in the world than that. There is no power in the pulpit like that, for it is the very power of the truth and of God. "Nothing doubting" should be the spirit and the argument of every pulpit utterance. What the world wants is a living demonstration of the truth, as exemplified in the preacher's own life and character, and then enforced with all the authority of a "Thus saith the Lord." The man who is perpetually treating his hearers or his readers to a diagnosis of doubt, telling them of its wide diffusion through all ranks of society, and raising a thousand grounds of doubt and difficulty which he cannot answer, is only helping to spread the malady of which he speaks. He could not do a more insidious and destructive thing. He is simply scattering arrows, fire-brands and death. A preacher told the young men at one of the great universities recently, that the essential condition of truth and the first duty in religion is to begin by doubting everything.

We greatly fear that this tone of uncertainty and doubtfulness, this compromise and connivance with the prevailing unbelief, is of growing tendency in some of our American pulpits. Many of the published sermons, both regular and occasional, now given to the public, through the newspapers and other channels, are of this uncertain sound. They seem to be constructed on the principle of stooping to conquer, or rather they seek to conquer the enemy by going over to his side. Either consciously or unconsciously, they so magnify the importance and the extent of the present opposition to Christianity, and so parade before the world the statement that all the higher, educated, scientific classes of society are deserting the church, that many are led to think Christianity a failure and the Bible a fable. In this way the pulpit is in many cases responsible for the prevailing unbelief. The pulpit has deferred too much to what is called the spirit of the age. It has conceded too much. It has been too much disposed to compromise with the world. Wherever it has done so, it has invariably lowered its own standard, become secular in its tone, lost the true secret of power, and in the end lost the respect of the very classes which it had thus sought to please.

It is worthy of notice that the Scriptures pass no enloginm on doubt or unbelief. They everywhere assume that the evidence for all the great truths of religion is ample and satisfactory, and that there is no reason why any of them should be questioned or denied. Their language is: Be not faithless, but believing. O thou of little faith wherefore didst thou doubt. There is no laudation of any doubtful minded people in all the Bible. Yet there is a species of semi-infidelity running through much of our current literature of magazine, sermon and book, which seems to delight in setting all religious truth as in a twilight and haze of ambiguity. It is the glorification of the doubting mind of the age—the apotheoses of negations and denials, and universal know-nothingism.

From the days of the apostles until now, it is only the positive, uncompromising, blood-earnest class of preachers who have done much real execution in the way of converting sinners to God and advancing the standard of the Cross. These are always and everywhere the true workers for Christ. The other class—the doubters and the trimmers, the cultured critics, the fine orators and essayists, the deep philosophers and other artistic performers in sacred opera—are only fit to come along in great cities where other men have gone before and prepared the way, and to discuss nice points of art and literature, or morality and virtue, for the amusement of great audiences that hang in admiration on their splendid talents. As to any real good they do in saving men from sin, or from skeptical unbelief, it is not very apparent. It is a question which must be adjourned over to the next world. They build only on other men's foundations, and sometimes they destroy more than they build. For they put into that foundation not a little of "the wood, hay and stubble" of doubt and unbelief. —Interior.

The Martin Luther of India.

This remarkable man is doing for Brahmanism what Sâkya Muni or Gautama Buddha did for Buddhism in the fifth century B. C. It is his habit to address the people in their own tongue wherever he goes, being familiar with many different dialects, and speaking from the Vedas, of which he claims a thorough knowledge, he challenges the Brahmin priests to controvert his arguments. He preaches Monotheism the most simple, arguing that the one God has many attributes, and that the many gods and idols of the Brahmins are only corrupted personations of these attributes. His majestic presence and stirring eloquence are doubtless powerful elements of success, but the condition of affairs in India is ripe for reformation, and thousands were ready to follow an able leader. On the one hand the priesthood is corrupt, leading the people further, year by year, into superstition and idolatry for their own aggrandizement and enrichment. On the other hand is the gradual introduction of the civilization of the Anglo-Saxon. For in India, as in all other countries where the manners of a foreign race have been introduced, the vices have obtained the first and widest adoption. On both sides has the learned swamee met with stubborn and bitter opposition (though under the British Government religious persecution is happily impossible,) and it is not without a hard struggle that he has made so great progress in so short a time. The better part of the people were ready, however, as was said, to follow the right leader; and the number of his followers is constantly and rapidly increasing. He has devoted his whole time to the work, and travels from city to city, and from province to province, preaching his doctrine, and never failing to establish in each place that he visits a branch of the Arya Samaja.

And surely, one who shall accomplish what he has undertaken will be worthy of being accounted great, even by those who may lament that he rejects Christianity. Preaching the pure theism of the Vedas, he is gradually destroying what the missionaries of Christ have always declared to be the greatest foe to their progress, namely, the superstition of idolatry. If he is not sowing the true seed, he is, at least, breaking up ground that has lain fallow not for centuries, but for thousands of years. Shall we dare to say that his reward will be less than theirs who work with a full knowledge of Christianity?—David A. Curtis, in Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

Our Work for God.

The errand on which God sends is always a practicable errand, provided there be a sincere desire on our part to accomplish the errand, to do the errand; and in proportion to the effort demanded, to the self-denial required, His authorship of the message concerning the work becomes more evident to the thoughtful and reflective Christian mind. We usually judge in exactly the opposite way. We say: "That is a good work, and I can do it in a minute; therefore, I will do it; that is God's errand for me. It is a good work, and I can help it by a little gift which I never shall miss. That is evidently God's plan for me." Thus we reason; ah! but God's plan exactly reverses that. He makes duty the more obligatory the more difficult it is, because for the development of Christian patience. He gives us the work to be done by us. God can do His own work without us, and when one by one the great teachers of the church have passed away, and the Christian church tarrying behind has felt that the horsemen and chariots of Israel had gone from its sight forever, and there was no more guardianship and no more inspiration, God has raised up others to take their places, or has carried on His work without such signal and illustrious spirits to be leaders in it, to show that He never depended upon any one human soul, upon any twenty, upon any million human souls, for the accomplishment of His plan. He carries them forward by His own might, as the ocean carries the log, because of its own majesty and buoyancy. God does not need our help. Why then, does He ask for it? Why put us to the trouble of working for Him? Why put us to the strain of giving for him? Why put us to the long endurance of patiently planning and waiting that we may accomplish His design? Because thus He develops us. This is His spiritual university in the world. Thus He applies not tests merely, but implements, stimulants, means of instruction, to whatever is best in us. The man who has given himself to his country loves it better; the man who has fought for his friend honors him more; the man who has labored for his community values more highly the interests he has sought to conserve; the man who has wrought and planned and endured for the accomplishment of God's plan in the world sees the greatness of it, the divinity and glory of it, and is himself more perfectly assimilated to it.—Dr. Storrs, in the Complete Preacher.

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House, Astor Place, on Thursday, December 5 at half-past three, P. M., William H. Allen, Esq., LL. D., President, in the chair.

Two newly organized societies were recognized as auxiliary: one each in Alabama and Iowa.

In the foreign correspondence of the month were letters from Rev. M. Phillips of Merida, Yucatan, Rev. John Edwards of Guadalajara, and Mr. James Pascoe of Toluca, respecting work in Mexico; Rev. C. H. Doering of Bremen, and Rev. A. W. Clark of Gratz, Mr. A. B. King of Liberia, asking for Arabic Scriptures for Mohammedans in Africa; Mrs. Blackford, announcing his return to Rio de Janeiro, after many delays; and from Mr. Milne at Monte Video, Sept. 30th. Dr. Gulick was at Tung Chow, China, Oct. 6th. Mr. Bliss sends a long and valuable paper respecting the openings for larger work in Persia and the Caucasus.

Grants of books were made for sale by the Society's colporteurs in the South and West, amounting in value to $5,000. Besides these, about 6,700 volumes were granted, for home and foreign distribution, to various auxiliaries and other societies, churches, and individuals. Of these, nine volumes were in raised letter for the blind, and about 1,100 for foreign lands.

The receipts for November were $38,775 87; copies of Scripture issued 71,010.

MATER AMABILIS.

Down the goldenest of streams,
Tide of dreams,
The fair cradled babe-clad drifts,
Skirts with cadenced million snow,
To and fro,
As the mother-foot pulsed lightly, falls and lifts.

He, the breathing—he, the light
Of her sight—
He, the breathing pledge of love,
'Neath the holy passion lies
Of her eyes—
Smiles to feel the warm, life-giving ray above.

She believes that for his visions
Skies Elysian
O'er an angel people shine,
Back to gardens of delight,
Taking flight,
His aerial spirit basks 'til dream-divine.

But she smiles through anxious tears
Unborn years,
Pressing forward she perceives
Shadowy manned ships, they come
Dear and dumb;
Bringing what? dry chaff and tares, or ripened sheaves?

What for him shall she invoke?
Shall the oak
Bind the man's triumphant brow,
Shall his darling feet alight
On the height,
Shall he wear among the immortals not the low?

Through what tears and woe must pain
Must be gain
To emerge from the tree of life
Shall it yield him better fruit
Shall its savor
Be its magic under the ground and the strife?

To his cradle slept and smiled
Thus the child,
Who was Prince of Peace was but Thus 'neath the mother's breast
Lulled to rest
Cæsar Napoleon—Shakespeare folded close and blest.

Crowned for conflicts the wise
Or the skies
Or the deathless kingdoms,
Or the pressed mother stands
In her hands
As in sight of the unborn and the dead.

What secures the years to be?
Who can know?
Still the child lives on who Sleeps they lie, or still deceased
But the child
Who she crooned to sleep and kissed through her tears.

John Locke.

BY REV. D. A. WHEDON, D. D.

John Locke is lost known to the world as the author of "An Essay Concerning Human Understanding," which was published near two centuries ago, and inaugurated a revolution in philosophy. His biography, by Mr. H. R. Fox Bourne, recently given us in an American dress by Messrs. Harper & Brothers, furnishes the fullest account of him ever published, and supplies much that was not within the reach of previous writers, but is necessary to the best understanding of either his principles or his career. And really the world is scarcely less indebted to him for his political than for his philosophical inquiries.

The period covered by Locke's life extended from the year 1632 to 1704, a space of seventy-two years. It was crowded with events most momentous in the history of England. When it began Charles the First had come to a rupture with his Parliament, and was governing England without its help. The civil war, the overthrow of the Established Church, and the establishment of Presbyterianism, the beheading of the King, the protectorate of Cromwell, the restoration and the revolution, which expelled the Stuarts and placed William and Mary on the throne, were all in his lifetime. In some of them he bore an important part, always, however, by his personal action and the productions of his pen, giving aid to the cause of civil and religious liberty.

As a Westminster boy Locke was crammed, by the famous Dr. Busby, with the usual amount of Latin, Greek, Hebrew and Arabic, preparatory to being sent to Oxford, but an important part of his education was derived from the intense struggle going on around him, almost in the very center of which he was. When he went to Oxford the Puritans had acquired control of the University, and the celebrated Dr. John Owen, who had preached a sermon before Parliament on the day after the execution of Charles justifying the deed, was vice-chancellor and virtual master. Under his stern hand the dissipation and debauchery of Oxford for some previous notorious years gave place to hard, honest work. Latin and Greek were made the spoken language to familiar conversation, and whatever was regarded as belonging to scholarship was assiduously cultivated. This suited Locke precisely, though in later years he severely criticised the educational methods of his time. In philosophy, Aristotle was his master; but the time thus employed he afterward felt was wasted. From Aristotle he turned gratefully to Descartes, and it was to him he set Locke thinking.

Though intended by his father for holy orders, Locke was averse to becoming a clergyman, and devoted himself to the study of physical science in general, and medicine in particular. His "studentship" he was able to obtain only by special command of Charles the Second, but it enabled him to make Oxford his home for many years, and to devote himself to severe studies for his chosen profession of physician.

Soon after the restoration Locke became acquainted with Lord Ashley, the first Earl of Shaftesbury, the result of which was an intimacy which greatly changed his whole future. He became a member of his family as its physician, as tutor to his son, then fifteen years old, and confidential counselor to himself in all affairs of public or private interest. Nor could the statesman have had a truer friend, or one more willing to give himself to the severest study of any question submitted for his judgment or assistance. When Shaftesbury became Lord High Chancellor of England he made Locke one of his secretaries, giving him charge of all church matters coming under his control; and to our modern notions it is a little curious to fancy the philosopher attending the chancellor bareheaded as he took his coach, or walking by his side as he rode in state. But this friendly relation gave birth to the famous essays on "Toleration," the sentiments of which were so nearly correct, and so far in advance of the prevalent practice of the day.

Locke's theory was that the State should grant entire liberty of opinion and practice in matters of religion, except to Roman Catholics, whom he excepted on the ground that their bounded allegiance to the Pope of Rome made them untrue in their allegiance to the King, and therefore unsafe citizens in the State; and to atheists, who he thought could not be good citizens. He fell short of John Goodwin, the American, who taught that full liberty of conscience belongs sacredly to every human being, and that the State should protect him in its exercise so long as he does not trespass upon the rights of others, and is a peaceable and orderly citizen.

Mr. Bourne, who seems to be an ardent admirer of John Owen, represents him as preaching the full doctrine of religious toleration, and as being in this respect "a direct teacher to Locke." But, whatever may have been his influence upon Locke, it is clear that he never rose to the level of full toleration as the doctrine was proclaimed by Goodwin, or the lower phase of it as taught by Locke. When his party was in power he insisted that the civil magistrates should not allow even the use of the Book of Common Prayer; and, said he: "Let Papists, who are idolaters, and Socinians, who are antihropolatre, plead for themselves." "Liberty for those who agree in doctrine with the Church of England," was all that he asked of Clarendon. It surely will not answer in the latter half of the nineteenth century to extol, as a representative advocate of proper religious toleration, a man who could justify the burning of Servetus, as did Owen.

Shaftesbury's conspiracy against Charles the Second, to save England from the Catholics, involved Locke in such peril that to escape arrest he fled to Holland. He had, in reality, held aloof from the plot; but from his relation to the great conspirator, it was natural to suspect him of treason. A true patriot, he was prepared for any labor for his country but not for a useless rebellion. He therefore gave himself to literary work—among the rest completing his essay on the "Understanding"—until the movement arose, six years afterward, for the overthrow of the wretched government of James, by placing William of Orange on the English throne. In the revolution Locke had a considerable share, and, refusing an honorable embassadorship, which was pressed upon him, he was content to see his country recovering from the effects of its years of misrule, and adopting measures of reform and good government. He would accept for himself only the small office of Commissioner of Appeals, though later he became Commissioner of Trade and Plantations, which made him pecuniarly comfortable. On the grave political and financial questions that pressed for action he wrote freely, and may almost be styled the founder of the Bank of England.

It was in this latter period of his life that he wrote "The Reasonableness of Christianity," a book which roused the ire of Stillingfleet and other theologians, and began a fearful war of pamphlets plentifully besprinkled with such favorite epithets as "Socinian" and "atheist," which Locke certainly was not. Christianity, he held, requires for divine acceptance the believing of Jesus of Nazareth to be the Messiah of God, and the doing of all that the Saviour Lord and King has taught and commanded, which is to be sought and found in the Bible, and there only. Defective as this is, according to our ideas, it is vastly better than the infidel platform to which Matthew Arnold, W. R. Greg, and their friends, are inviting their countrymen.

Of Locke's philosophical system there is little space, and there was but little purpose, to say much here. The truth is it is less a system of itself than a protest against Descartes's theory of innate ideas. In his view all knowledge is derived from our senses, which is equally wide of the truth, and has been made by a generation of idealists a foundation for their infidelity. Yet, as every student knows, succeeding thinkers, while abandoning this position, gratefully acknowledge their indebtedness to Locke as a foremost leader of the world's thought. The eighteen years spent upon the great essay were not in vain.—New York Christian Advocate.

The Lord's Supper, as observed by the brethren, is not the eucharist, or holy communion. It is a full meal immediately preceding the communion, at which the meal served is usually bean or mutton. After singing, exhortation, and prayer, the ceremony of feet-washing is performed. After the water is brought the fifteenth chapter of John's gospel is read and commented on while the washing is going on. The feet of the brethren are washed and wiped by two of their number, who are relieved by others, if there are many present; the sisters proceeding in the same manner among themselves. This service over, some remarks are made by the ministers concerning the Lord's Supper, and after singing a verse or two, and asking a blessing, all partake of the meal. Directly after the supper the table is cleared, and the elements of the communion are placed on one end of it. In all this the brethren aim to copy the example of our Lord at his last supper with his disciples as nearly as they can. The preparatory service for the communion consists of the singing of a solemn hymn, and the reading of portions of the gospels about Christ's passion and death. Then the unleavened bread is prepared for distribution, and the minds of the partakers for meditation on Christ's great work for man. The brethren then pass the kiss around, the sisters doing the same among themselves. A blessing is asked over the bread which is then broken, from brother to brother, and administered to the sisters by the administrator, each one laying his piece in front of him. Then when all are ready the morsels are eaten simultaneously and silently. The cup is passed after thanksgiving is made and a blessing invoked with singing, and the services are closed with a "hymn of praise and prayer," all standing.

The two distinguishing principles of the brethren are "non-conformity to the world" and "non-resistance." The former, which is often little more than a kind of every-day ritual, not unlike that of the Rabbis in Christ's time, it has been hard to guard or enforce, notwithstanding the many rules the Annual Council has made for this purpose; and the constant watchfulness which "the faithful" have exercised. These rules oppose the building of fine houses, the using of bells in sleighing, or the possession of paintings and costly furniture. They prohibit the sisters from wearing hoops, or trimmed straw, or leghorn hats (when these things are fashionable,) or rings, or breastpins, or jewelry. They declare that it is wrong for the brethren to wear fur or cloth hats, or frock or sack coats, or dusters; or to part their hair on one side, or to have it "shingled." In 1828 the Annual Council, because it might engender pride, refused permission to the brethren to lay carpets in their houses. Subsequently, when they were found to be convenient and comfortable, the objection was withdrawn. In 1801 it was decided that, inasmuch as God made men with beards, and commanded his people not to cut them off, and Christ and his disciples followed this order, the brethren ought not to shave. Shaving was actually made a bar to admission.

By decisions given at various times the Council advised against using mourning bonnets, joining secret societies, having "portraits" or "likenesses" taken, going about with a "Digerreum apparatus," the using of pupits or bone tones, putting up lightning rods, attending theaters or shows, teaching singing-school, or keeping a tavern. This last was declared in 1855 to be "unbecoming," yet in 1877 the last page of the official report of the Annual Council contains an advertisement of the "Bigelow House," kept by one of the brethren.—Sunday Afternoon.

Last Utterances of Illustrious Men.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM.—As soon as Chrysostom entered, he called for the brethren to give him some clean white raiment. He stripped himself, and, having put on the raiment brought him, he received the sacrament from their hands. He concluded with his favorite doxology: "Glory be to God for all things that happen. Amen." Gently stretched himself out and died.

The sands are numbered,
It needeth not to wake me,
I go rejoicing and free
To keep my appointment.
And those I love the best
Shall not weep when I lie at rest,
For they shall feel that the spirit blest
Has only gone before me.

From the Greek.

LEO X. THE EIGHTEENTH.—He expired in the sixty-eighth year of his age, with his dying breath bequeathing the charter to his brother, as his last inheritance, exhorting him to preserve it for his subjects and himself. "Do as I have done," were his last words, "and your reign will end in peace."

For within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
Keeps Death his court, and there the antic sits,
Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp,
Allowing him a breath, a little scope,
To monarchize.

Shakespeare.

CHARLES THE FIFTH, OF FRANCE.—He caused his crown to be placed under his feet, and then said: "O, crown of France, how precious and how vile art thou at the same time! Precious as the symbol of justice, but vile as the most vile of all things, if we consider the labor, the anguish, the perils of the soul, the pains of the heart, of the conscience and the body, which thou castest upon those who wear thee. Whoever should thoroughly know all these things would rather leave thee to lie in the dirt than he would take thee up and place thee on his head." After receiving the sacrament the king bade farewell to his officers, saying: "I know that in the government of my kingdom I have given many offenses; for that I pray you grant me mercy; pardon me." He stretched his hands out to all, and, after blessing his eldest son, quietly expired.

O, what a thing is the throne and crown
To him that has it!
Full many would think the sceptre down,
And shun the palace gate.

From the Greek.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.—I found him entirely himself, though in the last extreme of feebleness. His eye was clear and calm; every trace of the wild fire of delirium extinguished. "Lockhart," he said, "I may have but a minute to speak to you. My dear, be a good man; be virtuous, be religious; be a good man. Nothing else will give you any comfort when you come to lie here." He paused, and I said: "Shall I send for Sophia and Anne?" "No" said he, "don't disturb them. Poor souls! I know they were up all night. God bless you all." These were his last words.

The best of all the boons was he
Who sung of brother charity;
For, well-a-day, the legislator fled
His mortal brethren all to spend
And he, with sorrow sore oppressed,
Wished to be with them and at rest.

Let us keep our scorn for our own weakness, our blame for our own sins, certain that we shall gain more instruction, though not amusement, by hunting out the good which is in anything than by hunting out the evil.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Since Madagascar became nominally a Christian nation a most notable event in the history of Christian missions—the rest of Christendom has been expecting, doubtless, too much from it. It is the united testimony of the missionaries that "it requires more than one generation to change the Ethiopian's skin or the leopard's spots. The Madagascans were essentially a heathen people when Christianity was declared to be the religion of the country, and not a very enlightened people either. The missionaries had met with great success, and had not only induced the members of the government to put off heathenism for a national religion, but had gathered a considerable number of converted natives into the churches. The masses had not been reached, however, and cannot be, perhaps, for some years yet. It is only gradually that the enlightened Christian influence prevailing in the capital district can be extended to the remote heathen tribes.

The principal agency in bringing the knowledge of the Christian religion to the Madagascans was, as is well known, the London Missionary Society the pioneer. For sixty years its missionaries have toiled faithfully in the churches and schools of the land, excepting the period of reaction to heathenism, and have obtained wonderful results. Other societies came into the field later; but, with one exception, they observed the principles of comity and worked in harmony with the pioneer society. The Church Missionary Society, after a protest against the intrusion of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, withdrew from the island, well satisfied to leave the work in the hands of the London Society. The Catholics have done but little; the Episcopals have given their attention chiefly to schools; and the Lutheran Society of Norway has had about half a dozen missionaries employed. A great part of the island is occupied by savage tribes, whom the missionary would hardly dare approach without the protection of the government. The two central provinces of Ankova and Betsileo, and points along the coast, principally in the northern part of the island, mark the presence of Christian missionaries. In the rest of the island nearly everything is yet to be done. Independent.

The English Wesleyans report this year 380,871 communicants; a decrease of 1,115. The decrease is said to be apparent, not real. It is explained that the depression of business has caused much moving about, in consequence of which many members have been left out of the statistical reports.

—The Church of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, have resolved to raise $25,000 as a testimonial on the occasion of the completion of the twenty-five years, pastorate of Mr. Spurgeon. Mr. Spurgeon objects to a personal presentation, and has suggested that the money be used to endow the almshouses of the church.

—According to a cable dispatch, the Vatican contemplates removing the Roman Catholic churches in England, Ireland, and Scotland from the control of the Propaganda Fide, and placing them under the immediate authority of the Pope. This measure, continues the dispatch, is attributed in clerical circles to a desire to induce the British Government to establish relations with the Vatican.

The Primitive Methodist Conference of England, which met in Manchester last year, reported 171,473 members, 1,122 ministers, and 358,358 Sunday-school scholars. The increase of members is 1,173. In Canada there are besides 8,151 members, making the total 182,617.

It is stated that the number of Mohammedan pilgrims will this year fall much below the average. As yet only about 7,000 have landed at Jeddo, but it is expected that the total will be increased by arrivals from India and Java.

Of the six hundred thousand or more of Lutheran communicants in this country, 175,502 are said to be Scandinavians, who play no unimportant part in several other communions in the West.

"Twenty thousand Israelites have been converted in London to the Christian faith under the labors of the London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews." The Society was organized in 1809.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada has three annual Conferences, 27,285 members, and 781 Sunday-schools, with 20,977 scholars. The value of its church property is $1,267,924.

Our Young People.

OUTSIDE AND IN.

Just outside the window
Through the cold the bleak air
Snowflakes falling softly,
Drifting here and there,
Covering it as a blanket
All the ground below
Where the flowers are sleeping
To rest in by the snow.
They are dreaming sweetly
Through the winter's night
Oh, the mantle covering
Keeping sure and bright.

Just inside the window
Full of light and glowing Cheerful words and smiling
Where no cold is known,
While the cruel snowflakes
Pile the window high
On the dying embers
Rest serenely by.
Take the lesson, then, the bright
Dazzling bright, the frost
Painting on the dark pane traceries
Into beauty.

Just above the shepherd
Be they white or brown
Our divine Father watcheth
With loving power by loving
His little lambs keep in safety
Blessings great or small
In His presence we are equal Making way for all.

Polly and the Parrot.

The widow Whiting had a green parrot. Her son who was a sailor, had brought it home for her on his return from a long voyage. The bird was a great pet with this poor woman, because as she loved him it was so much company for her. It would call out "Pretty Poll, oh, pretty, pretty Poll! How smart she is!" Then it would say, "How are you?" and, "That's right."

As widow Whiting lived near a large seaside field, the boarders often walked past her little cottage to hear this bird talk.

A few days since all our little readers of the Children's Friend of a curious thing which happened one summer, from which you may see that whole pride may be very excusable in birds it is very inexcusable and silly in little girls.

Up among the mountains lived Mrs. Cole and her little girl, Polly. Mr. Cole had consumption for many years, and when he died his wife thought she might earn a living for herself and little girl by taking in washing. So she moved to this small town along the sea shore, in order to get work from the boarders in the sea-side hotel.

The cottage which she hired was next to the garden of the widow Whiting, and you could hear distinctly every word the parrot said across the garden; for, you know these birds do not talk in the ordinary tones in which people converse with each other, they often scream out their words, and even their remarks spoken at their lowest are lower than the same words spoken by a human voice.

Polly had never seen a parrot, or heard one; she knew nothing about parrots; how should she, for she was a poor child, who had never gone to school but six months in her life, and could not read.

Unfortunately it sometimes happens that, although there may not be much to be proud of, yet pride will enter little girls' hearts. What do you think Polly Cole was proud of? She thought she had a pretty face, and instead of being thankful to God for this blessing, if such it might be called, she thought every one must be admiring her black eyes and rosy cheeks, and she became very conceited and proud.

When Mrs. Cole had put her house in order, after their moving, she went to the hotel to see if the proprietor, whom she knew, would give her some work to do.

Polly, being left alone, went to the fence to look over into the garden of their next neighbor. Presently she heard a strange voice calling, "Pretty Polly! Oh, pretty, pretty Polly!" The little girl looked around in surprise that her beauty should so soon be acknowledged in this town in which she was an entire stranger.

"Pretty Polly," call the voice again, as if asking the question; "Pretty, pretty Polly."

"I'm here," replied the silly little girl.

"That's right," replied the bird, "that's right."

Polly thought this person had a strange voice, but nevertheless must be very sensible to find out her charms so soon. She smoothed her apron, and slyly pinned a red bow, which she happened to have in her pocket, on her hair.

"That's right," said the parrot.

"He must have seen me," she thought, and blushed deeply; "I wonder where he is?" She looked around, but no person was in sight. There was a queer cage with a bird larger than her pet pigeon in it hanging on the piazza of the next house, but there was neither man nor woman to be seen. After waiting some time longer and hearing nothing more, Polly Cole went into the house to peel the potatoes for dinner.

Presently she heard some voices on the street, and looking up she saw a young lady and young gentleman coming in the direction of the house, and they were exclaiming, "Oh, pretty Poll, pretty Polly!"

Polly Cole, silly child, blushed again, and stepped back from the window. Her mother had told her to scrub the floor after she had the potatoes peeled, but she was now entirely above such work as that. Why should she do menial work which every one in this charming place was attracted by her wonderful beauty?

Three children, with their nurse, next passed by. She did not like to go near the window, for she heard them saying aloud, "Pretty Polly! pretty Polly!"

"That's right, that's right," called the same strange voice from the next house.

"Oh, dear! thought Polly Cole, what a nice town this is! I wonder if I had not better put on my best dress? Some one might come in to see me."

Her mother had not unpacked her best dress, and she could not find the key of the box in which her clothes were kept, but she found her mother's best Sunday bonnet, and putting these on she went out and stood by the door on the front steps.

"How nice and still the same voice.

"How strange," thought Polly Cole.

Soon there was such screeching and scolding and crying, all of which seemed to come from the yard of the next house, and then the voice called loudly, "Polly! pretty Poll, oh, pretty, pretty Poll!" and then, the poor, silly, bewildered girl did not know if to cry or laugh or answer back, saying that she was here.

However, however she heard a sound that she had no difficulty in recognizing calling her by name. "Polly Cole, what are you sitting idle for, and with my best shawl and bonnet on too? Have you finished your work? Go right in the house."

Poor girl, how mortified she felt when she found it was a Poll parrot that had made her so conceited and silly, and that it was the bird and not herself whom the boarders at the hotel had called pretty Polly.

It was fortunate for this child that her mother was a good Christian woman, for she talked to Polly about the wickedness of being so proud, and made her commit to memory a portion of the sixth verse of the fourth chapter of James. Look for that verse and learn it, so that pride may not enter your heart.

The moral of my story you will find in Proverbs, eleventh chapter and second verse. Children's Friends.

You Never Find It Out.

One pleasant afternoon a lady was sitting with her little son, a light-haired boy five years of age. The mother was sick, and the child had left his play to stay with her, and was amusing himself in printing his name with a pencil on paper. Suddenly his busy fingers stopped. He had made a mistake, and, wetting his finger he tried again and again to rub out the mark, as he had been accustomed to do on his slate.

"My son," said his mother, "do you know that God writes down all you do in a book? He writes every naughty word, every disobedient act, every time you indulge in temper, and shocks your shoulders or pout your lips; and, my boy, you [illegible]."

The little boy's face grew very red, and in a moment tears ran down his cheeks. His mother looked earnestly on him, but she said nothing more. At length he came softly to her side, threw his arms round her neck and whispered, "Can the blood of Jesus rub it out?"

Dear children, Christ's blood can rub out the record of your sins, for it is written in God's holy Word, "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Paul at Athens. An exchange tells a curious story of a Londoner, occupying an elegant house with ample grounds, who bought a lively monkey and brought him home, dressed in hat, coat and breeches. A terrier dog belonging to the establishment saw the monkey sitting on a terrace in the yard, and started for him. When he got within a few feet, the monkey sat so still and uncontorned that the dog was frightened. He also sat down, and for a minute or two they glared at each other. The dog was thinking of renewing the attack, when the monkey lifted his hat and bowed politely to him. This was too much for the dog, and he took refuge under the porch. As soon as he was gone, the monkey, who was really as much frightened as the dog, made lightning tracks up a tree.

Lo, where in fragrant bowers
The precious myrrh distills,
Where all my heart I'll serve Him
And lead a life of prayer.

Conscience Money.

The public treasuries occasionally receive funds under this head from anonymous sources. It is presumed that in these cases an awakened conscience has led to the payment of money heretofore wrongfully acquired or withheld. It is an act of restitution without which there could be no peace of mind.

Conscience enters into all true Christian giving, but its office ought to be specially active in reviewing the past. Christians are sometimes awakened upon the question of devoting their substance to Christ. It would be well for them to consider how much they have withheld from God, and, as a matter of conscience, endeavor to restore that which long ago should have gone into the Lord's treasury. On this score there are very few who do not owe something, and there are many who owe a great deal. Those who are converted in middle life or in old age, and have ignored the duty of giving until that time, have a reckoning to make with God and with conscience.

Reparation and restitution are among the things which repentance demands in our relations to God not less than in our relations to men. So far as restitution may be in our power, there can be no forgiveness and no acceptance without it. It may be beyond our power to make the restitution! Poverty and repentance have come at the same time. When we had the ability to give we were indifferent, and now, that we would, the means have been swept away. We fear that a sharp sense of sin in having withheld from God in the matter of money does not always enter into repentance as deeply and as prominently as it ought. He who could have given a hundred dollars a year to support and spread the gospel for twenty years, and gave nothing, surely owes that much to his Master.

We occasionally find those who regret that they did not give more when they were rich. In their poverty and quickened religious sensibilities they look back upon their churlishness with wondering sorrow. It may be very well for them, but if any fail to the extent of ability in restoring the Lord his own, it must be ill with them. If they have the means to pay their debt, we question whether the blood of redemption will settle it. Restitution must be made before there can be peace. If we have nothing to pay, and are truly penitent, God will frankly forgive all. It is for conscience to say, when a rich penitent comes for mercy, how much can be done in repairing the past wrong. It is for the enlightened Christian conscience to decide how much short of ability the giving of the past has been, and how far the deficit can be brought up by a careful and complete devotion of all we have to God.

We have never been able to satisfy ourselves of the genuine piety, nor of the salvation of those who do not, as far as possible, restore to Christ what is rightfully His. They are holding and using the Lord's property, expending it on their lusts, enjoying it in fine dressing and sumptuous living, without a thought that it is embezzled, and that they are guilty of a breach of trust. How can the love of God dwell in the same breast with this most flagrant of sins? And how, with such guilt upon them, can men meet the scrutiny of the judgment? We confess this has been a puzzling problem with us for a long time. What is the real character and end of people who seem otherwise to be Christians, and who appear to be almost indifferent to this duty of restoring and of giving to God? We may hope for the best, but we have our misgivings. Conscience money may have much to do with the experience of many, both in providence and in grace. We have seen seemingly penitent and sincere people whose religious life had no brightness in it, and whose sky was clouded in death, and upon whom rested this solitary doubt, that they lived and died with no adequate sense of the duty of giving. With the conscience and light of John Wesley such people would surely be cut off as slothful servants. As it is, we must wait to know.

Zaccheus had a conscience on this subject, and it shone out, full-orbed, in the hour of his conversion. No wonder that the Saviour went home with him, and proclaimed that salvation had come to his house. Here was a penitent sinner convicted of a sin that required special notice and treatment. He had wronged his neighbor, the poor, and God, and he stands up to make restitution. Half of his goods he gives to the poor, and makes restitution fourfold to those whom he had defrauded. Do penitents generally admit convictions upon the point of money misused or kept back from God? Are Christian men and women particularly careful and scrupulous about it? We need a revival of conscience and of sound conviction with reference to this matter.

Notes from Nashville.

HOLIDAY OR HOLY DAY,—WHICH?

Both. For example, we have holiday at Christmas; the courts, banks, legislatures, etc., make it a dies non, and entertainments are given on that day. This is all right, provided the holiday be not abused to licentiousness, like the Roman saturnalia. It is hardly necessary to say that the word holiday is a corruption of holy day. Christmas should be observed as a holy day—that is, there should be religious exercises suited to the holy occasion.

Of course we do not consider the twenty-fifth of December, or the sixth of January, which some still deem the proper day—old Christmas day—as certainly the day of our Saviour's birth. That is unknown. It is a pretty conceit of Marcellus in Hamlet:

> Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes,
> Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
> This bird of dawning singeth all night long:
> And then they say no spirit can walk abroad
> The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike;
> No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm,
> So hallowed and so gracious is the time.

I used to hear the old people in England declare that the cattle in their stalls knelt down to do homage to the new-born King on old Christmas morning before day! Oxen are too orthodox and canonical to make this obeisance on the day of the new style! But the poets as well as the ritualists (I use the word in the old sense) will have it that the Saviour was certainly born in the winter, though the precise day is in dispute. Thus Milton:

> 'Twas the winter wild,
> While the heaven-born Child
> All meanly wrapped in the rude manger lies;
> Nature in awe to Him
> Had doffed her gaudy trim,
> With her great Master so to sympathize.

But I am no Puritan, though a born Independent. I keep Christmas when other people keep it, and let the calendar take care of itself. Being invited by Chaplain Sharpe, as usual, I preached in the penitentiary. The convicts seemed pleased to hear of One who "came the prisoners to release." They sang Christmas carols, and did it well, led by an organ. They greatly need a chapel. It reflects no credit on us that we have no better place in which to hold divine service than the gloomy refectory. At night the students of the Biblical Department of Vanderbilt, with their professors and other friends—ladies, of course, among them—met at my house for a Christmas festival. They seemed to enjoy the occasion very much, though, of course, there were no beverages there stronger than coffee, and the cognate cup which "refreshes, not inebriates."

Vanderbilt University gives holiday only on Christmas and New Year's days, not the whole octave, much less the time-honored time closing with the twelfth day (Epiphany, or old Christmas, January 6,) formerly crowned with the mammoth twelfth-day cake. How old customs pass into disuetude!

New Year's eve was kept as a watch night in some of our churches. At Vanderbilt the annual New Year's dining was held in Wesley Hall. The theological students and their faculty, and Pastors Kelley and Hill, the editor of the Advocate, and other invited guests, were present. Bishop McTyeire was ex officio architriklinos or symposiarch—what you will. He presided as "to the manner-born," showing that he is au fait at a dinner table as well as in a Conference room. Appropriate sentiments were announced by one who acted as the chorus of the occasion, and post-prandial speeches of uncommon excellence were made on the occasion. Old Hundred and the apostolic benediction closed the joyous reunion.

Now comes the tug of war! Examinations for a fortnight! How they may result I may perhaps let you know. I will anticipate this far to say that I predict they will be more satisfactory than ever, as the Chancellor, a month or so ago, announced that the reports from the several professors were better than they ever had been before.

I earnestly hope that all our institutions of learning will have a prosperous year. Let all our people rally around them. I am more and more impressed with a sense of their vast importance to the church. I sincerely trust that the policy adopted at the late session of the Alabama Conference for the relief of the Southern University will prove successful. Let the presiding elders vigorously carry out the measures adopted, and that noble institution will be relieved.

We have had a visit from Mrs. Hayes—not the President's wife—but the president herself. She has been visiting some of the Annual Conferences in the Southwest, in the interest of the Woman's Missionary Society. She made a fine impression during her short stay in Nashville. She did us the honor to dine with us and some friends while she was here. We commend her and her cause to universal favor.

A meeting of Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist and Lutheran ministers was held this week to agree upon the method of observing the Week of Prayer suggested by the Evangelical Alliance. They agreed to hold Union meetings at the First Baptist church—ministers of the several churches officiating in turn—while each pastor will conduct a night service in his own church. That is "good and pleasant."

But I am scribbling too much, I fear, so I close by sincerely tendling to you and your "patrons" the congratulations of the season. A happy New Year to you all.

That Grandest Word of the Age "The Carpet-Bagger."

Some one has said there is nothing in a name, but Bishop Gilbert Haven is of a contrary mind. And who will doubt that on one subject he is authority? With him a certain word is not simply the sign of an idea, but is the magic synonym of all that is holy in religion, pure in morals, patriotic in citizenship, honest in business, sublime in aspiration, and divine in humanity. His soul kindles with holy fire and flames with noblest enthusiasm as he contemplates the vastness and richness of the meaning. It is the burden of his fervent prayer, the melody of his rapturous praises, the occasion of his elysian dreams, and the inspiring theme of his brilliant eloquence. He exhorts us to "pronounce it reverently, for it is the word of Christ and Christianity to-day." And, pray, what is that word so rich, so sacred, so grand? The "carpet-bagger," quoth the afore-named Bishop of certain fame! Much depends upon the point of observation, the angle of vision, and the color of the glasses through which we look. It is well known among the Bishop's friends, on account of which they have at times felt great apprehension—for the church—that he is color-blind. In consequence of which, and, it is said, as a compromise with the "man and brother" who demanded a representative in the Episcopal College, he was elevated to his present high position, and assigned a residence among his colored constituency. Hence a carpet-bagger himself, he rings the changes upon that word, until we are forced to believe that to his righteous soul it is the Alpha and Omega of all revelation, and but another name for Messiahship itself. That this may not appear an overdrawn picture of the Bishop's negromania on the one hand, and his partisan bitterness on the other, read the following lengthy extract from a recent address on the "Americo-African," at the anniversary of the Freedman's Aid Society:

How maligned has been that grandest word of the age—the carpet-bagger. How Northern pen and tongue have joined with Southern tongue and pen in abusing these martyrs of to-day, chosen of God and precious. So have the sons of this world always mocked at the sons of God. That word means your best civilization, carried by more courageous souls than any who before bore arms in the same field. See the South burned and blackened by the war—cabins and fields and towns lying waste, crops gone, and the spirit wherewith to rise and renew the face of the land gone too. See your soldier marching homeward, and resting on his laurels—deservedly resting on deserved laurels. What shall lift up that despoiled land? No power of regeneration is in it. That redemption must come from without. Like the new birth, it must be from above; it came from above. See that vessel loading in this city for Hilton Head as soon as Beaufort is captured. See the applicants for passage as teachers. See the delicate ladies, the youthful men, the minister and teacher, crowding the office and clamoring to go for nothing, or the merest pittance. See aid societies organizing in New York, Boston, Chicago, and elsewhere. See the host pouring in, almost as numerous as the host that has left. Bearing their carpet-bags as their knapsacks, they march down to possess the land. They plant schools, they build churches, they buy farms to sell to their emancipated brothers; they identify themselves with these brothers; they accept their very name, they are "nigger teachers," "nigger preachers," niggers of niggers. They are assailed with insult and revolver, shut out from all white society, delicate women dying the death of a mother, and no white mother willing to enter their door, fair maidens insulted with every damnable epithet, yet serenely braving all for Christ and his poor children. O ye ribald revilers of that sacred word, take heed to your ways and words! Pronounce it reverently, for it is the word of Christ and Christianity to-day. Carpet-bagger is the true knighterrantry of the age. Of old they went forth on horse and in armor. To-day, with less than David's sling, with less than the disciple's staff, with a simple carpet-bag, now go forth to conquer. By this they will conquer. Deserted by the government he has elected, and the nation he has recreated, the carpet-bagger will yet save that nation, will again restore a true and honest and patriotic government, that shall protect every citizen in his every right, by every force at its command.

Without the Bishop's glasses we could not recognize the picture. No such apostle, martyr or confessor of that name and ilk, although "the true knighterrantry of the age" has been found in these parts. Many adventurers, "with less than David's sling, with less than the disciples staff," came down and infested the land a few years ago, but they didn't return so empty. They were surely teachers of the poor negro, as the Bishop says, for they taught him hatred toward the whites, and all the arts of roguish trickery and political dishonesty. And they are ideal reformers, martyrs? So honest Horace Greeley thought, until he came down to spy out the land for himself. But the Bishop will never be converted—"let him alone." To glorify politico-partisanship, and vilify the Southern man who ever owned a slave, will continue to be his loved employ. C. B. G.

Death of Rev. Samuel H. Schroeder.

Rev. Samuel H. Schroeder, pastor of the Moreau Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of New Orleans, died on Sunday morning, January 5. He was apparently in good health up to Saturday morning, January 4, and on the morning of that day was in the ADVOCATE office, assisting in providing for the entertainment of the Conference now in session. About one o'clock on Saturday afternoon he was taken with a congestive chill, and breathed his last at five o'clock on Sunday morning, only sixteen hours from the time he took his bed. Bro. Schroeder was thirty-two years old, and was received on trial in the Louisiana Conference seven years ago. At the last Conference, on account of a throat affection, he was granted a supernumerary relation. After the death of Rev. Tift Foster he was placed in charge of the Moreau Street Church, where he labored with great acceptability and usefulness, until so suddenly called away. He was a native of New Orleans, raised in the Moreau Street Sunday-school, converted there, and was there received into the church. By that Quarterly Conference he was licensed to preach, and recommended for admission into the traveling connection. He was pastor of that church in 1877, and, in the order of Providence, he was its pastor when he died. He was a preacher of great merit, a faithful pastor, and did the whole work of a preacher with prudence, industry and ability. He was well known, and greatly loved and appreciated by all of our people, and also by his brethren in the ministry. He was a noble spirit, unselfish, pure, kind, and wholly devoted to his Master's work. No better man has fallen in the ranks of the itinerant ministry in Louisiana. But few words were spoken by him during his illness. Among them were: "Jesus! how good he has been to me. I have never so felt the fullness of the blessings of the gospel and of this great salvation as during the past year." Our dear brother has fallen in his prime, and in the strength and beauty of his manhood. The funeral service was held in the church he so much loved, in the presence of a large and tearful audience, and his mortal remains were deposited in the Odd Fellows' Rest. We pray that the bereaved parents, and brothers and sisters, may be divinely supported in this time of sorrow.

"Our Christian Neighbor" quotes and comments as follows:

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, speaking of the revival of iniquity in that city, mentions that "debasing and corrupting institution"—the lottery—and says:

"We have heretofore called attention to the fact that the names of two, once distinguished but now notorious, Confederate generals have been associated with this gambling contrivance. Five thousand dollars a year is a tempting price, but it is a pity that such men as Beauregard and Early should have accepted it."

Wherein is the incongruity between the former "distinguished" and "now notorious" position of these generals? If the people of New Orleans think that these men ought not to be presiding over that swindling concern, why don't they send one of them to Congress and the other to the Legislature? Editor Parker does not seem to think that his part of the world—New Orleans—is just now getting better very fast. The devil and his crew, in that city, seem bent on making up for time lost during the yellow fever.

Well, we did think well of those distinguished soldiers when they were fighting in our war of self-defence. It was, as we believe, the cause of civil liberty and of right. But fighting under the devil's flag is another thing. We think the Confederacy was a better institution than the lottery company. It might be true that New Orleans is not getting better very fast, and also true that the world is improving. An eddy here and there does not prove that the stream is not flowing on. Nevertheless, there has been improvement in New Orleans within thirty years. There are more Protestant churches, Sunday-schools and religious people, in proportion to population, than a quarter of a century ago. There is a great deal of wickedness left, and a great deal everywhere, but the gospel is steadily advancing; the mission fields, especially, are widening and blossoming, and, we believe, the light is gaining on the darkness. Bad as the world is, it is surely growing better. The earth will yet "be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

The Review.

The General Conference appointed a committee to have in charge all matters pertaining to a Review, and to do or authorize to be done whatever might be deemed best touching that matter. At a meeting held at Atlanta, at the close of the Conference, the undersigned was appointed chairman of the committee, charged with all correspondence and management of the Review, except the editorial department. Rev. J. W. Hinton, D. D., of Columbus, Ga., was elected editor, and Rev. R. A. Young, of Nashville, Tenn., secretary and treasurer. Immediate steps were taken to ascertain what could be done; various propositions were carefully considered, differences of opinion adjusted, and difficulties uninteresting to the public overcome. But the way is now open, and the prospect is flattering. The Review will be published by our Publishing House at Nashville. The first number will be issued in January, and promptly every three months thereafter.

Terms, $3 per annum in advance. All subscriptions to be sent to Rev. R. A. Young, D. D., Nashville, Tenn., all communications in reference to the editorial department must be addressed to Rev. J. W. Hinton, D. D., Columbus, Ga.

We intend to make the Review worthy the great ecclesiastical body it represents—an able exponent of advancing thought and culture, a vindicator of truth, both old and new, and a fearless defender of the "faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

We make an earnest appeal to the Bishops, presiding elders and preachers generally, to present the claims of the Review on all appropriate occasions, and in every proper way to aid the committee in placing this important work on a safe basis.

B. CRAVEN, Chairman.

TRINITY COLLEGE, N. C., Dec. 27, 1878.

Death of Dr. John Sample.

The subjoined note from Dr. Linfield brings us sad intelligence. We had known Dr. Sample for years through his pen. He was one of our earliest subscribers and contributors. We were greatly gratified to meet him at the late session of the Mississippi Conference. He seemed then to be enjoying good health, and showed none of the infirmities of age. His Master has called him suddenly, but he was ready for the summons.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Jan. 1, 1879.

"DR. L. PARKER: A letter from Dr. Sample, of Summit, informs me of the death at his residence, on the eve of Christmas, suddenly, at about nine P. M., in full possession of his faculties, and under a strong expression of faith in a present Savior, his father, John Sample, M. D., a local preacher of the Brookhaven district, and a member of the late Annual Conference, on his return home, which he did not live to see. A painful but sacred duty is left to the friend most in his confidence, to give suitable notice of his service to the cause of the Lord, whose presence he enjoyed in the last moment of his earthly life. He was a man of service, both in the pulpit, with his pen, and in District and Annual Conferences. He finished his work in his seventy-second year.

"Yours truly,

"W. E. M. LINFIELD."

The Conference.

The Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met in the Carondelet Street Church, New Orleans, at nine o'clock A. M., Wednesday, January 8. Bishop McTyeire was in the chair, and appears to be in excellent health. J. T. Sawyer was elected secretary. Bishop Keener is usually present, but looks much jaded and worn. The attendance of preachers is good; but few laymen are present. There are quite a number of visiting brethren—among them Dr. A. W. Wilson, Missionary Secretary, Dr. R. A. Young, representing the Publishing House, Dr. C. G. Andrews, president of Centenary College, and Dr. H. F. Johnson, president of Whitworth College. Up to Friday business was proceeding smoothly and thoroughly. Further reports and items will be given next week.

The cold wave, of which the telegraph gave account as rolling over the North, struck us in this section on Saturday, January 4, and the extreme cold continued until Tuesday morning. We believe the lowest point reached by the thermometer here was eighteen degrees above zero—about as cold as it ever gets in this latitude. Everything was covered with sleet, and on Monday the sun shone out upon a world clad in crystal. Houses, spires, trees, shrubs, grass flashed and sparkled in the light—a rare and surpassingly beautiful scene. If cold can kill the yellow fever germs, they are surely dead. The hope of it has helped us to endure the trying weather, and makes apologies for the "sunny South" unnecessary.

LOST.—One draft on Sims, Bellups & Co., Mobile, Ala., handed in by one of the preachers of the Alabama Conference, and counted in the general collection for missions. The finder of said draft will please return to the subscriber. The preacher who handed in said draft will please write to me and inform me in whose favor the draft was drawn.

SHELBY, ALA., Dec. 21, 1878.

The Weekly Herald, of Baton Rouge, says that a most beautiful silver card-receiver was presented to Rev. J. T. Sawyer, on Christmas night, by the ladies of the Presbyterian Sunday-school of Baton Rouge. This elegant present was made to Bro. Sawyer in appreciation of his valuable services during the recent epidemic. It was well deserved, we are sure, and its bestowal reflects credit upon the donors.

The postoffice address of Rev. A. J. Briggs, of the Alabama Conference, is Montgomery, Ala.

In Memory of Bishop Marvin.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate informs us that a tablet has been recently erected in the chapel of Central College, Mo., to the memory of Bishop Marvin. It is alongside those of Drs. Smith and Wills, former presidents of the College. It bears this inscription:

"Bishop Enoch M. Marvin, D. D., LL. D. Born in Warren county, June 12 1823. Died in St. Louis, Mo., November 29, 1877.

"Remembered by all as a profound thinker, an eloquent preacher and a magnetic man. During a quarter of a century he was closely identified with the history of Central College, and after a voyage around the world in the interest of Christian missions, he gave his last services to the upbuilding of the college, being special agent at the time of his death.

"This tablet is erected in his memory by the Methodist preachers of Missouri."

An old clergyman said: "When I come to die I shall have my greatest grief and my greatest joy; my greatest grief that I have done so little for the Lord Jesus, and my greatest joy that the Lord Jesus has done so much for me."

MARRIED.

Young Ministers and Old.

From Bishop Simpson's recent Yale lecture, on "the personal habits of the minister," we make the following suggestive extract:

One great source of the minister's annoyance is connected with his pecuniary support. In nine cases out of ten this will be quite limited. He has been well educated, associated with respectable society, admires the beautiful in paintings, and feels the absolute necessity of books. But he has not a fortune at his command. His salary, though oftentimes meager, is not promptly paid, and many a sad heartache comes from inability to meet pressing wants and demands. The true remedy can be found only in economy. In college life he studied political economy; but in ministerial life his studies will be protracted and severe in personal and domestic economy. An inflexible resolution should be formed never to get in debt. "Owe no man anything" is an apostolic injunction. John Randolph is reported to have said in Congress: "I have found the philosopher's stone. It is: Pay as you go."

The young minister will need to guard against self conceit. He may have been successful in preaching, and fancies he has already overcome all difficulties, and will take his place as one of the leaders of the land. He has scarcely descended from the pulpit when some one is silly enough to tell him—and he is foolish enough to believe—that he has preached a fine sermon. He compares himself with some able and aged minister, and fancies that he is already more popular, and he lays aside his sermon with the conviction that it is as nearly perfect as a human production can be, and he has little more need for study or care, because his fame is already sealed.

It cannot be denied that there is a tendency among churches to seek for young men rather than for the old; and I believe this is one of the great errors of Christian congregations. It is not so in other professions. The older a physician is, and the more cases he has successfully treated, the greater is the confidence placed in him. The attorney as he grows in years is supposed to increase in knowledge and skill; and, while clients are willing that the younger members of the firm should draw up papers and prepare the case, they desire the counsel and advice of the senior members to guide the case through its intricacies. A statesman never grows too old to be appreciated and sought for. Russell, Broughan, Palmerston, Webster and Clay were leaders as long as they lived. To-day Gladstone, Disraeli, Bismarck and Gortschakoff are the men who control in great measure the destinies of Europe. Why should it not be so in the ministry? Why is it that men turn, in the most important interests of life affecting themselves and their families, from the counsels of age and experience to those of youth and less skill?

I may not be able to answer this question satisfactorily either to you or to myself. One reason is, I believe, the neglect of study on the part of many aged ministers. They lose that stimulus which belongs to other professions. To the physician every case is a new study. New remedies are discovered and recommended. He must keep abreast of the times, or some intruder will take away his practice. The attorney finds some new element in almost every case. New decisions are given by the Supreme Court, and he must study them. In statesmanship new complications are constantly arising. The connections of nations are so numerous, the questions involved are so various and sometimes so vast as to require the utmost comprehension to grasp them, and the closest attention to the least minutiæ and detail. The statesman has no old sermon that he can pick up and apply. He must think and study and write, and thus keep his mind ever active and fresh. There is no time for him to nod or sleep. But the old minister sits down under his vine or fig tree, and there is no one to molest him or to make him afraid. (Laughter.) He hurls thunderbolts at the heads of scientists who are a thousand miles away, and who will never hear his thunders; he descants upon the sins of the Egyptians who have been mummies for thousands of years (laughter;) or he discourses upon the pride of Babylon or Nineveh, which have been swept away for ages. He is pressed for time, and brings before his congregation of to-day a discourse which he had made twenty years ago, on an issue then living, but now almost forgotten. His thoughts are of the past; his sermons are of the past, and the generation of to-day feels that he is scarcely of them.

But, independent of this, society loves to be stirred or excited. Youth has greater power in arousing it; has more enthusiasm and zeal. Whether it be more earnest in heart or not, it exhibits greater earnestness in action. The eye sparkles more brightly, the utterance is more rapid, the gesticulation more excited, and the whole bearing more impassioned. There is no need of age losing its keenness of thought, though it may somewhat its energy of manner. I think the latter is almost inevitable.

I must not touch much on metaphysics, yet I may say that minds differ generically in two things: First, in the rapidity with which thought succeeds thought. I can fancy it quite possible that some men may think two or three times as fast as I can. In the image cast from the camera you have sometimes seen how slowly a shadow may pass across the curtain, and then again how rapidly one chases another. It may be so across the field of mind. Where thoughts move most rapidly in succession, conclusions are more rapidly reached; and if, as some philosophers fancy, the origin of the idea of duration is from the flow of thought, one man may seem to live longer in a month than another in a year. Now, as the pulse in the same person beats more rapidly in youth and more slowly in age, so is it true in regard to the succession of thought.

The second element in which minds differ is in the number of thoughts which troops across the field. I have no faith in the theory sometimes advanced that we can have done only one idea in the mind at a time. If that were so, there could be no comparison and no reasoning; there would be no fancy, no imagination. Some minds are very narrow; they are your severely logical minds. Their whole strength is spent in examining how one link of thought is fastened into another and how strong and unbroken is the chain. The chief motion of their minds is in a straight line; and, as the hound pursue the hare without looking around right or left, so such minds pursue an idea, and sometimes when they catch it they almost kill it. Laughter.) Still they have their use. They are logical, severely logical; though the skeletons they form are so dry that one may well ask: "Can these dry bones live?" (Laughter.) Other minds, however, see a whole platoon of thoughts, usually one advancing something in the character of a captain, while the others are mere privates. Such men write and speak fervidly. They deck with jewels their favorite idea and cover it with a profusion of ornaments. They are rich in illustration, abundant in metaphors, and their imagery is so luxuriant that the main idea gets lost in the foliage and escapes them utterly. In listening to them, you are bewildered and cannot tell what is meant. Half it largely influences and controls us; but I think the ordinary law is that, without careful study and constant culture, not only is the succession of thoughts more sluggish in age, but the width of the platoon is also diminished. Age may think more correctly, but less ornamentally; and the common mind is pleased with illustrations, figures and ornaments. Broader stores of knowledge and broader views of life are needed by the aged to compensate for diminution of the power to charm and impress.

There is another reason why the young minister is sometimes preferred. The human mind has a love for noticing development or growth. We love the beauty of the morning. From the clear sky we anticipate a bright and beautiful day. The noon hour brings with it the thought of declination. We wander through the garden, and the opening bud is more beautiful than the full-blown rose. With the former there is the thought of beauty with the added thought of increasing beauty; but with the full-blown rose comes the idea of decay. So, too, in realms of business, men prefer investing in growing towns rather than in older ones. They purchase corner-lots not because of their value to-day; but for what it is supposed they will be worth ten years hence. So is it with the ministry. Men love to hear the young minister, for, they say he preaches a fine sermon and he will preach better by and by. They take stock in him not because of what he is; but of what he will be. They admire his utterances not merely because of what they are; but for the promise they give of coming oratory. So, because of this feeling, they prefer him to the man who is fully developed and whose real value to-day may be much greater. But if that young man rests on his laurels; if he fails to progress in his studies; if he preaches the same sermon ten years afterward, the church will regret its investment, because the anticipated rise is not realized. It may be illustrated by what we find in our own families. The little child just beginning to speak is an object of admiration and delight. The first time he says "Pa" or "Ma" distinctly the family is enraptured; and when he is able to pronounce his first sentence they pat him on the head and clap their hands for joy. They call him a coming genius. But if ten years pass away and he makes no improvement in his speech it will not be on the head they will pat him. (Laughter and applause.)

Many a time we are like children; we "can't wait a minute" for the least of our plans to mature. Yet all the while we know, whether we fully feel it or not, that the Eternal Planner has waited and is yet to wait centuries for the perfection of His great scheme.

CATARRH AND ITS CURE.

REV. T. P. CHILDS publishes today a wonderfully accurate description of the causes of catarrh and the results from inattention to the first symptoms of this terrible disease. From the details given of his method of cure, it seems to be easily applied and very simple in its action. Inhalation is evidently the most rational and sensible way of reaching any disease of the air passages; Mr. Childs' application of this principle in medicine, together with the knowledge of the inhalants to be used, have given him his wonderful success in the treatment of catarrh and bronchitis. To judge from the published statements of some of his patients, the medicine Mr Childs contrives to place, by the use of his inhalers, just where it is needed, must be most powerful and searching in its character to produce such surprising results. None need feel any hesitancy in placing their case in Mr. Childs' hands for treatment. The number and character of the certificates, as well as the favorable notices from well-known publishers, who have carefully examined the subject, must dispel every doubt in regard to his reliability. We would call especial attention to the advertisement and request a careful perusal of the facts as set forth.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CATARRH

Thousands suffer without knowing the cause of this almost universal complaint. It is an affection of the head. Its indications are, tickling, pricking, pain and soreness, frequent soreness of the throat, dryness and heat of the nose, offensive ringing from the head down the throat, often ringing or deafness in the ears, loss of smell is more or less impaired, dullness and dizziness of the head, often in the first stages of the disease all nature in its advanced stages, attended with pains in chest or left side and up between the shoulder blades. Indigestion usually attends Catarrh; a hacking cough and colds are very common; some have all these symptoms; others only a part. Very little pain attends Catarrh, until the liver and the lungs are attacked in consequence of the stream of pollution running from the head into the stomach.

All persons thus affected take cold easily, and have frequently a running at the nostrils; the breath sometimes reveals to all around the corruption within while the patient has frequently lost all sense of smell. The disease advances carefully, until pain in the chest, lungs or bowels, startles him; he barks and coughs, has dyspepsia, liver complaint, and is urged by his doctor to take this or that, perhaps cod liver oil is prescribed. Perfectly ridiculous! The inhalings in the head cannot be reached by pouring such stuff into the poor, jaded stomach. The patient becomes nervous, the voice is hoarse and unnatural, he feels disheartened; memory loses her power, judgment her seat, gloomy forebodings hang overhead; minarets, yes thousands, in such circumstances, feel that to die would be a relief, and many even abuse the tired Physician and their sorrows.

THOUSANDS ARE DYING

In early life with consumption, who can look back a few years (perhaps only months) when it was only Catarrh. Neglected, when a cure is possible, very soon it will transform the features of health and youth into the dark, pallid appearance, while the hacking cough, the excess of blood guessing from the lungs, or night sweats, all significantly proclaim it is too late. [illegible]

NASAL CATARRH.

Sometimes the disease only affects the membranes lining the nasal passages, and they may be easily reached and cured by simple means. But when it is located in the frontal sinus, or in the sphenoidal cavity (if it has entered the cerebral cavity) and is lodging the ears, then nothing but finely medicated vapor can effectually reach it and destroy it. And certainly, after it has affected the throat, the bronchial tubes, as all well-read physicians will readily attest, nothing can be relied on to effect a permanent cure but the inhalation of properly medicated vapor. In the same manner that we breathe common air, we can inhale and breathe a medicated air, and it is perfectly simple, any one can see, thus to treat diseases of the breathing apparatus. How much better this method by which remedies are conveyed directly to the seat of the disease, than to resort to the uncertain and too frequently unsafe practice of medicines taken into the stomach.

Among Women Catarrh is very common. The decrees of fashion compel women to go from the dry atmosphere of furnace heated houses, into the open air, with the head but poorly protected. Many suffer keenly from its painful and distressing effects of the throat and lungs.

Teachers in our Schools are greatly subject to this painful malady. Confinement in close, ill-ventilated school-rooms, the over heated atmosphere, charged with the steaming poison exuding from the bodies of the ill-always or clean children, breed this disease with fearful rapidity.

Lawyers in the Court Room and Clergymen not exempt from the same general cause, are too often afflicted in the same way.

Ministers of the Gospel, after having for years been overtaxed with the strain of their mental and physical efforts, neglect sufficient physical exercise and accord to the result. This neglected opens the way to catarrh, and [illegible] loss of voice. I have suffered so keenly myself that I cannot urge upon preachers too strongly the necessity of removing this disease when a cure is possible.

MY EXPERIENCE.

[illegible] years of terrible headache, disgusting nasal discharges, dryness of the throat, acute bronchitis, coughing, soreness of the lungs, rushing bloody mucus, and even night sweats, incapacitating me for my professional duties, and bringing me to the verge of the grave. ALL were exhausted, and the results of Nasal Catarrh. After spending hundreds of dollars, and deriving no relief, I compounded my CATARRH SPECIFIC AND COLD AIR INHALER, and, working upon myself a [illegible] Now I can speak for hours with no difficulty, and can breathe freely in any atmosphere. At the calls of numerous friends I have given my cure to the public, and have now thousands of patients in all parts of the country, and thousands of happy fellow-beings whose sufferings I have relieved. My cure is [illegible] and is indorsed by the PRESS and PHYSICIAN who has examined it. If I can relieve my fellow-beings as I have been relieved of this loathsome disease, which makes life possible and disgusting to [illegible] and others, I shall be satisfied, and feel that I have done the most effective toward removing the ills of mankind.

T. P. CHILDS.

TESTIMONY OF OTHERS.

FROM THE CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NEBRASKA.

T. P. CHILDS—Dear Sir:—I think you have the true theory and practice for the cure of Nasal Catarrh, and also for the treatment of the respiratory organs. My throat is now so well restored that I lecture daily without difficulty, and I find it [illegible] whatever on preaching. You are at liberty to use my name for the benefit of others.

Yours very truly,

E. B. FRAY, A.M., D.D., LL.D., Lincoln, Neb.

JUDGE J. COLLETT, of Elma, O., writes: "You will remember how terribly Catarrh had taken hold upon me at the time you were at my house, making me all unlike to myself, and to all around, and what suffering day and night. I began to use your excellent remedy about the 26th of August. Now I am cured, head free, air passages all open, and breathing natural. I express to you a sum which I said in a recent letter was a thousand thanks to you for so sure a remedy, and so very cheap. I have cast away the instrument, having no further occasion to use it. Three [illegible] six weeks have accomplished what you thought could be gained in from three to six months." Write to them.

MR. T. GRAVESON, of Woodworth, Kenosha Co., Wis., writes: "I must say that I never had a medicine take hold of my Catarrh, by the root, and [illegible] as this has."

MR. THOMAS J. DAILY, of Homer, Champaign Co., Ill., one of the worst cases I ever had under treatment, who was six months bedfast, and nearly blind, the eye utterly destroyed by Catarrh, nose and face much disfigured, and throat and lungs in a critical state, writes, June 21, 1878:

"DEAR MR. CHILDS: I have used your Catarrh remedy, until the disease has completely left my system, and am entirely well. I cannot say too much in favor of your remedy. I have gained rapidly, soon could sit up, passages of the head began to open, throat and bronchial tubes, grew better, cough ceased, and now I can see to write. I now expect to get well and go about my business again. I owe you a great debt of gratitude. Indeed I owe my life to your treatment. Very truly your friend, THOMAS J. DAILY.

MR. D. is now (September 10) in Troy, looking quite well, almost every vestige of Catarrh has disappeared.

A WONDERFUL CHANCE.

MR. W. S. SANDEL, of Willis, Montgomery Co., Texas, writes:

REV. T. P. CHILDS—Dear Sir: In 1871 I was attacked with Catarrh slight at first, but it gradually grew worse and worse. In the spring of 1877 the Fever assumed a new form, my nostrils and throat were attacked, ulcers were formed, and soon the nose was all destroyed away, and large scabs through the posterior nares. My condition was now not only deplorable but apparently hopeless. Large quantities of gory matter were discharged from the nostrils and throat, and for days together I could take no food but spoon victuals. Knowing of your remedy, and the success it gave, I determined to write you for advice. My sufferings were intense, and I determined in my mind was added to my dreadful sufferings. All this induced a friend called my attention to your advertisement. I [illegible] immediately, and began to use it the latter part of August and continued using it [illegible] when I think of what I suffered, and the many sleepless nights of agony I spent, I am truly glad I [illegible] a remedy for this horrible disease. I shall recommend it to all suffering with Catarrh. I will cheerfully answer any letters that may be addressed to me, asking information.

Most sincerely your friend,

W. S. SANDEL.

WHAT THE EDITORS KNOW OF T. P. CHILDS.

Catarrh, in its worst and most offensive form, compelled Mr. Childs to give up his charge after years of public speaking, and constant travel, as you always strong. After trying all that medicine could do for him he finally, in despair, at last applied his own cure, and having considerable knowledge of medicine, succeeded beyond hope, and restored his own suffering, enabling him to resume public speaking without difficulty.

Mr. Childs was besieged by others similarly afflicted, until the good man was compelled to go into the manufacture of his medicine to the number and frequency of these calls.—Correspondence Enquirer, Cincinnati.

The publishers of the Times, with multitudes of other people, are somewhat suspicious of patent medicines, as a rule, and when we received the advertisement of Mr. Childs we at first declined its insertion; but on making an [illegible] search into the merits of Catarrh remedies, and one especially from a well known subscriber not far from Mr. Childs, the proprietor of the medicine, that we withdrew our objections.—Times, Chicago.

While not supposing that all cases of Catarrh will be cured by the prescription advertised, the publishers of the Illustrated Christian Weekly, after diligent inquiry, have reasons to believe that it has in many cases proved effectual. We do not ordinarily insert medical advertisements. Illustrated Christian Weekly.

The medicine Mr. Childs is advertising in this paper is one of the greatest discoveries of the age, now offered and searching in its character to produce such surprising results. Many of our leading lawyers, divines, and prominent men of ours have tried this remedy with wonderful success. There is no doubt of the efficacy of this method. We know Mr. Childs as an honest, Christian man.—Gazette, Cincinnati.

Mr. Childs gives a very strong description of this most annoying and loathsome disease. A number of testimonials from well-known publishers and others throughout the country seems to indicate that his peculiar manner of treatment is worthy of investigation by those thus afflicted. The physician that has [illegible] to relieve suffering humanity from such painful ills is most assuredly entitled to the plaudits and patronage of the world at large.—Andrews' Bazar, Cincinnati.

CONCLUSION.

It is now a well established fact that Childs' Catarrh Specific, for thoroughness, completeness and efficiency, does not equal in the world. Every [illegible] known to the good for Nasal Catarrh, in all its horrible forms, all the good, that is and or original to be arranged into one complete system of treatment, 50 items, all the good, that is and or original to be arranged into one complete system of treatment. Two kinds of inhalers and two [illegible] used with each full course of medicine.

Do not call [illegible] cheap this, which at best can at most only relieve and temporary relief, while the roots of the evil disease are left to [illegible] deeper and deeper. Be in earnest and thorough, or, do nothing! Write at once, and say you saw this in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, New Orleans. Circulars, prices [illegible] and all necessary information [illegible] of treating (with [illegible] stamp.)

HOW TO KEEP MILK.—Three years ago I told the milkman I wished to experiment with our milk, and asked him to watch it closely for a week. My experiment was to put it in the cans, stop it up and put it in the well as soon as possible after milking. We had been in the habit of pumping water and letting the cans sit in it two or three hours with the stoppers out, before putting it in the well. The report from the milkman was that he never had better milk, or had it keep better. Since then our custom in getting has been to take the cans from the rack, and set them in a row with the stoppers in. Our strainer fits the cans and we take out one stopper, set in the strainer and strain into the can. When the strainer is taken out, the stopper is put in. Soon after milking, the morning's milk is put in the well, the night's milk is put in water to wait for the milkman. He takes both milkings at night, keeps it over night and puts it out the next day. We have had no complaint about our milk since we adopted the plan of putting in the well soon after milking.—New England Farmer.

HOW TO TREAT WOUNDS.—Every person should learn how to treat a flesh wound. In the first place, close the lips of the wounds with the fingers, and hold them firmly together to check the flow of the blood until several stitches can be taken and a bandage applied. Then bathe the wound for a time in cold water. "Should it be painful," a correspondent says, "take a panful of burning coals, and sprinkle upon them common brown sugar and hold the wounded part in the smoke. In a minute or two the pain will be allayed, and the recovery proceeds rapidly. In my case a rusty nail had made a bad wound in my foot. The pain and nervous irritation were severe. This was all removed by holding it in smoke fifteen minutes, and I was able to resume my reading in comfort. We have often recommended it to others with like result. Last week one of my men had a finger nail torn out by a pair of tree-tongs. It became very painful, as was to be expected. Held it in sugar smoke twenty minutes, pain ceased, and promised speedy recovery."

EGG-PLANTS.—The usual mode of cooking is to cut the egg-plant fruit into slices across its length, sprinkle salt on them for half an hour before cooking, then dip in batter and fry in hot lard. Occasionally it is fried without the batter. But a much better and more wholesome way for delicate persons is to cut it in the middle, like a melon, scraping out the contents with a dull knife. Mix these well with stale bread well crushed, and a little butter, and sufficient salt and pepper. Return to the empty shells and cook in a hot oven for half an hour, or till thoroughly done through. This dish, when properly prepared and thoroughly baked, is as great a treat as scalloped crabs.

Just before frost, in Autumn, if the egg-plants are stored away on shelves, in a damp cellar, where they will not freeze, they may be kept till New Year's day. They soon wilt and rot if the cellar is too dry.—Prairie Farmer.

BISCUITS, ETC.—Biscuits require a hotter fire than bread, but slowly, from first to last; if too hot at first, the crust will cook before the dough does; if too slow toward the last, the crust will dry, before the dough is done; if too hot toward the last, the crust will stew out before the crust is done. Pumpkin pies require a fire as hot as can be without burning the crust.

SOFT SOAP.—The latter is from a lack of proper boiling, or from a lack of proper lye to boil the clothing in, or it may be harden by putting in about three times the usual amount of salt, or washing a little in strong salt water. Many of our readers have doubtless noticed the soft soap that is sold in Philadelphia markets. We have never seen any that was better than that, and of course it is made in the latter. We extract the SOFT SOAP.—Soft soap is that intended for use, and is made or picked before it is cold. Sometimes washing in soft water has been effected in preparing soft soap, but time is also required, as all wish for soft water, which is a scarce drink. But the best method is by destroying acid, by the use of lead instead of lime, or a sulphate of copper. Either will effectually do as well.

DELICATE CAKE.—Two cups white sugar, one-half of butter, one of sweet milk, three of flour, whites of four eggs, one teaspoonful of cream tartar, one-half of soda.

THE NEW YORK SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: to present all the news in a readable shape, as fully as it can be had, truthfully as the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the right and its own sane conception of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which lies won for THE SUN the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper of the people. It is and the organ of all the people, as far as any newspaper can be. It has no sympathy with any party. Whenever the people are wronged, it will denounce the wrong-doers, be they politicians, rich men, or paupers. It is for the honest man against the rogue, everywhere. It is for the law-abiding against the disorderly. It is for the Republican party against the dishonest Republican, and for the honest Democrat against the dishonest Democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterances of any political organization. It relies upon its own conviction of what is right and proper, and fearlessly upon the intelligence of its readers to approve honest efforts in behalf of the people, and to condemn dishonesty, whether practised by politicians, by rich men, or by paupers.

THE WEEKLY SUN, printed on the day of the issue of the Daily, is the most important and interesting publication of the week. Its news is the news of the Daily SUN, and its editorial columns, which are a prominent feature, are the editorials of the Daily SUN. Its literary and miscellaneous contents are such as to make it a welcome visitor to the household. The WEEKLY SUN is the best family newspaper published.

THE WEEKLY SUN is sent postage paid to any address in the United States or Canada, one year for $1.00. The Weekly is the cheapest and best newspaper published, and the cheapest and best literary journal. Every farmer in the land should have it. Every mechanic should have it. Every workingman should have it. Every lover of good reading should have it. Every family should have it. Every person who can read should have it. Address

SCIENTIFIC.

VOLCANIC ACTION IN THE PACIFIC.—The exhibition of volcanic energy in the Southern Pacific in the early part of the year, seems to have extended over a considerable area. At the Island of Tanna, in the group of the New-Hebrides, the first eruption took place on January 10, last, about 10 A. M. The bottom of the harbor at the west side rose above the water for about fifty fathoms length at the first earthquake shock. A new volcano burst out close to "Sulphur Bay," between it and an old volcano. A second great eruption and earthquake took place on February 11, and the bottom of the harbor was again upheaved for about another fifty fathoms, making the entrance of the harbor very narrow. Three rocks rose up about a cable's length from the west point to seaward out of eleven fathoms water. There is now a bar with only fifteen feet of water, where there used to be five or five and a half fathoms right across the mouth of the harbor, a little inside. A tidal wave about fifty feet high, swept the east point of the harbor, destroying all the native plantations. The wave occurred on both occasions, but the first was the biggest. The old mountain was very active, roaring and throwing up huge rocks. The tidal wave was local; so was the shock. The missionary on the other side of the island hardly felt it, and there was no wave there. The natives say they never knew anything like it before. On the west side the earth has cracked and sunk very considerably; on the east side the land was swept by the tidal wave; the plantations on both sides are destroyed.

—By an observation recorded in the recent issue of the "Proceedings" of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia it would seem as if insects had some power of distinguishing plants of the same natural order as botanists have the large Yellow Mullein (Verbascum thapsus), for some purpose not ascertained, stripped the growing branches of the European Ash of their bark, and they do the same with the common Lilac, which is of the same natural order. Ornaco.

—Bomen presents a new method of separating arsenic from antimony, in which the sulphides are dissolved in potash and subjected to the action of chlorine, which a saturated aqueous solution of chloride sulphide, sufficient to precipitate the antimony as Sb_2S_3 is added, and in the filtrate the arsenic is precipitated as As_2S_5 by a long continued stream of H_2S.

THE CENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver

PAIN in the right side, under edge of the ribs, sometimes extending sometimes the pain is on the left side, the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternating with looseness; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; has pain in the low, and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the liver to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, in cases of AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with the disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated. Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression Dr. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING Bro's on the wrappers.

In purchasing the genuine Dr. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bro's, Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being flooded with full similitudes of the name, McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

EDUCATIONAL.

Woodville Female Seminary.

A NON-SECTARIAN ACADEMY, UNDER the supervision of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South: Mississippi Conference; Hon. J. F. McGehee, President of Board of Trustees. For Thoroughness of instruction, healthfulness, cheapness and many other advantages, is not surpassed. We invite those interested in examining our credentials, and to obtain circulars, by calling upon Mr. Phillip Werlein, New Orleans, La., or address the Principal, A. J. WRIGHT, Woodville, Miss.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

A NIKINDER GARTEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cordelia W. Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicts of the late R. G. Raoul, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of M. the Loquet LeRoy, with good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No expense whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

"THE price and quality of board and tuition compares favorably with other colleges, while the peculiar constitution of the body and the influence of its moral atmosphere it is my judgment the very best and safest place for boys and young men, of a certain stage of culture, which exists in the Methodist Church South."—Rev. E. M. Grace, A. M., of Alabama.

"I have tested the asbestos paints you have prepared to say that the Paints will do all you represent. Shingles are not only fire-proof, but they last much longer than any other shingle. I have used many experimental paints, but after all they have proved worthless. I am pleased to say that I have found in your Paints the superiority of the paint I have been in search of for many years. They are the best I have ever used, and I take pleasure in recommending them to all who may want a good paint. C. H. MANSFIELD.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE most reliable preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and radically cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. Its gentle action on the bowels, and as a mild aperient, renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no preparation, but when they refuse it all need is to put it in their milk. It also neutralizes the poisonous gases which are generated in the bowels during fermentation. They represent a brief, concentrated form of a simple drug, unalloyed by pharmacy. The first one examined, Magnesia Carbonas, is taken with water. The gas and the Milk of Magnesia now offered, are the result of years of experiment to produce the most perfect, but simple, of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with forcible illustrations, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a milky vapor, and the Gas Magnesia has the appearance of a snow flake, and both these forms are the purest and most delicate ever produced.

The above Milk of Magnesia, Asbestos, Asbestos Lubricating Oil, and Asbestos Lime, are for sale by all druggists, and all orders for them will be promptly filled by the undersigned.

SAVING FAITH.—"If I only had more faith," said a young and widowed mother, as she petted and caressed the child in her arms.

"What do you understand by faith?" was asked.

"A certain confidence in my own spiritual condition—a surety such as I hear others speak of," was quickly answered.

"Your child has the faith that you need," was the reply.

"How so," asked the mother.

"Your child trusts you, loves you, obeys you."

"O yes! pet darlings to me. I mean she has, you know," and a shower of kisses rained over the baby's face.

"That is it," exclaimed the aged Christian; "that is the faith that gives assurance. This trusting affectionate faith in Christ. He must be all to love, to trust, and to cling to.

Reader, have you this clinging faith?

BENSON'S CAPCINE

POROUS PLASTER.

This article is one which possesses extraordinary merit. It is recommended by physicians in your own country, and I believe that the above is the only plaster which contains the ordinary porous plaster, combined with the electrical appliances and the curative remedies whatever. It is the only plaster which contains the elements which cause it to be effective, and other plasters will not even relieve. For the cure of weakness of the back, kidneys, Rheumatism, Lung and Chest affections it is unequaled. Neglected in female complaints and backache, aches and pains, it is unequaled. Some even declare it worth its weight in gold.

Silent Women.

The dean of Chichester, a High Church-man, is out upon the Ritualists, denouncing "the foppery, the effeminate passion for finery, the pitiful millinery of this new sect—their colored stoles and strange surplices, and imported 'birettas,' and melodramatic gesticulations,—their sing-song prayers, and their gabbled lessons; the combined result of all which things is, to make the services of God's house, as they conduct them, no refreshment at all, but simply a weariness of the flesh and an exasperation of the spirit."

But this tomfoolery of the Dean's confrères is surpassed by some of his ritualistic who are doing penance after this manner in London:

They have left their luxurious homes, gone into a low part of the town into hired lodgings, and positively, incredible as it may appear, they assume the virtue of dumbness. They rise early, long before the sun, and go into the dark, cold street, saying no word to any person. They return soon after nine o'clock at night; do not even ask for a candle, but expect it to be given to them; and then pass, without so much as a "thank you," but with a sad smile and a dignified bow, to their rooms. They are devout Protestants "doing a retreat" at the Home of Nazareth occupied by the Sisters of Bethany. Most of them, it is given out, are women of wealth and position, some of them women of title. Early in the morning, precisely at the hour of six o'clock they meet to perform their devotions under the direction of the holy Ritualist Fathers who have been appointed for the service. Every moment of the day has its devotional occupation. The food is of the plainest. Talking is scarcely tolerated. For nearly fifteen hours they are at prayers or at meditations. They should, properly speaking, not leave the Home, but the Sisters of Bethany cannot take them all in. And all this in the Protestant Church of England.—New York Observer.

Marriage Custom in India.

Marriage customs and marriage ceremonies differ in some respects in different parts of the country. Thus at the marriage of His Highness the Maharajah of Mysore the following pretty recitation formed a portion of the ritual uttered by the bridegroom in musical Sanskrit:

The bridegroom replies, "Well be it," and recites the following:

[illegible]

Soon after this the bride and the bridegroom proceed one or two steps forward and the bride is thus addressed by the bridegroom:

May the regions of space, may air, the sun and fire dispel that anxiety which thou feelest in thy mind and turn thy heart to me. Be gentle in thy aspect and loyal to thy husband; be fortunate in cattle, amiable in thy mind, and beautiful in thy person; mother of valiant sons, be fond of delights; be cheerful and bring prosperity to our bipeds and quadrupeds. Soma first received thee, the Sun next obtained thee, the regent of fire was thy third husband, and now a human being is thy fourth.

Soma gave her to the Sun; the Sun gave her to the regent of fire; the regent of fire gave her to me. With her he has given the wealth and male offspring. May she, most auspicious and of prosperity, never desert me.

Here and many others, which were recited, contain much of exalted poetry in them. They are, as Professor Max Muller, the simplest of the Aryan players on record,—The Right Hon. Mr. Mitchell

WILL H. LEITH, P. E.

LITTLE EARS HEAR.—Parents and other persons [illegible] though having at heart the [illegible] good of children, are very apt to be heedless of what they say in the presence of the young ones, whose minds and hearts catch the hue of every sentiment expressed. They talk on, and the child is seemingly engaged in its play, but words and statements then made come up days after, when, perhaps, they had forgotten the conversation, wonderfully fresh from the child's lips. Its mind has been resolving what it heard for good or evil. Boys grow old too fast by hearing men at their talk among themselves. Says a writer: "If we stopped to think how every word spoken in the presence of a little child affects its future, for good or evil, we would be far more considerate in our speech. It is astonishing how, for days, children will ponder over a careless word or sentence which no one supposed they had even heard, and at some critical moment use it themselves, with startling and horrifying effect. How an impatient, petulant word shocks us, coming second hand from those innocent lips! Then, alas! we see and deplore its real deformity, and realize how potent is our influence over these observant innocents, not only at all times, but at every moment of time in which they are in our presence."—Calendar.

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS

THEY ARE WORTH THEIR

WEIGHT IN GOLD

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence upon the Liver, and will certainly relieve it of this important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which pounds are taken on flesh, while under the influence of these Pills is itself indicate their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

THERE'S NOT A JOY

There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away,
When the glow of early youth the cheerless feelings dull decay
'Tis not on youth's smooth cheek the blush alone which fades so fast,
But the tender bloom of heart is there, which withers first and last.

Then the few whose spirits float above the wreck of happiness
Are driven o'er the shoals of guilt or ocean of excess;
The magnet of their course is gone, or only points in vain
The shore to which their shiver'd sail shall never stretch again.

Then the morn itself looks like the night of starless gloom
Is all around them, and within their hearts is drear as the tomb.
And their country mourns their blighted fame, and weeps with hopeless eyes
More for the wanderer than the dead who calmly sleeps and dies.

But hush! hush! false mourners all,
Nor thus insult the dead.
Their shrouds are drifting memories
That haunt the guilty head.
The cowards who compel them
At memory's fiery wheel
Still sit in judgment o'er their dust
We only pity and conceal.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—Representative Schleicher, of Texas, is in a very critical condition this evening. His disease, erysipelas, is complicated with typhoid fever, and there are grave fears as to his recovery.

The house committee on foreign affairs, of which Mr. Schleicher is a member, postponed its session to-day on account of his illness.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The report of the Agricultural Department for December has the following relative to tobacco: The crop of the present year has been secured under exceptionally auspicious conditions of the weather; the bright open days of September favoring the growth, while the unusual delay of severe frost enabled the plant to mature thoroughly before the knife was applied.

Of the large producing States Virginia, Maryland, Connecticut and Massachusetts report an improvement in quality. Twelve States, representing the bulk of the total production of the country, report the product compared with last year as follows: Kentucky 60 per cent., Virginia 75, Missouri 50, Tennessee 53, Ohio 90, Maryland 81, Indiana 83, North Carolina 89, Pennsylvania 80, Illinois 50, Connecticut 80 and Massachusetts 85.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Vessels which arrived here in the past twenty-four hours report heavy gales, many wrecks and much difficulty in getting in the face of westerly gales.

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—It has been telegraphed that the Chicago elevators are full of grain and that no more could be received at present. This is contradicted by the figures furnished by the warehouse register Culver, who says that the elevators contain 10,463,994 bushels, while their capacity is 14,375,000 bushels, leaving room for 3,912,000 bushels more. Besides this, vessels in the harbor can be utilized for storage purposes if relief can't be had soon enough by Eastern shipments. Officials of roads running East say that they could find use for 2,000 more cars than they have.

CHICAGO, Jan. 14.—A heavy easterly snow storm set in here at nine o'clock this morning and is still raging.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The board of experts who visited Memphis and New Orleans, under instructions from the special congressional committee for examining into the cause of yellow fever, and what, if anything, can be done to prevent a recurrence thereof, having returned to this city commenced to-day summing up their labors. It will be several days before the report can be made.

CHICAGO, Jan. 14.—A military court of inquiry into the responsibility of Major Reno for the Custer massacre, convened to-day with open doors, but reporters are not allowed to take notes of the proceedings. The only important action of the first session was the decision to summon Whittaker, who made the charges against Reno.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 15.—A severe shock of an earthquake was felt here about 11:45 last night, which lasted about thirty seconds and appeared to move from southeast to northwest. Buildings were violently shaken, crockery rattled and doors were thrown open. The shock was felt at St. Augustine and down the Gulf coast from Punta Rassa to St. Marks, as well as over the interior portion of the State. Nothing of the kind was ever experienced here before.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 14.—The weather is moderate. The river is rising. A great crash expected to-night or to-morrow, as the great ice field is moving from above. The utmost precaution to avert danger has been exercised, but the situation warrants grave apprehension by steamboat men.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 14.—The Nevada legislature re-elected John P. Jones United States senator.

FORT ROBINSON, Jan. 13.—Fifty Cheyennes are still at large, having escaped from their stronghold among the bluffs last night. Their trail was followed this morning going northwest. The advance guard of troops were fired upon by a party of savages to-day, who were, doubtless, covering the retreat of the main band. Corporal Ore, of Company A, Third Cavalry, was killed, and the other members of the guard seeing their leader falling dead from his horse, shot through the heart, charged the Indians, who were concealed in a rifle pit near the top of a ridge. In the charge the guard killed one Indian and wounded another; the remaining Indians escaped through a heavy timber. At four o'clock, this evening, the troops had got up with the savages, who surprised the troops by firing a volley into their midst, wounding Private Hunter, Company C, Third Cavalry, in the shoulder.

The savages were entrenched in the bed of a small stream. The troops kept up a continuous fire in the direction where the savages were supposed to be until dark when firing was discontinued until morning. Two more companies of the Third Cavalry, commanded by Major Vroom, left here this evening for the scene of hostilities, carrying two twelve-pound Napoleon guns with them.

FORT ROBINSON, Jan. 15.—Sunday night the Indians in the bed of Indian Creek, at Hat Creek road, strengthened their position. At noon Monday a twelve pound Napoleon gun was brought up, but owing to the nature of the ground it could not be brought to bear effectually.

Tuesday morning a reconnoissance showed that the Indians had escaped during the night. The troops, with the provisions, returned to the camp to refit, back to Hat and start on a prolonged scout after the savages.

ATLANTA, Ala., Jan. 15.—The People's Bank suspended.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 15.—The ice gorges are breaking up in every direction, great damage being done.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—A dispatch to the Standard from Hazarjir announces that Gen. Roberts visited the principal port of Khost, Monday and was saluted by the Afghan garrison. The attitude of the marauding tribes around his camp, however, is so threatening that his force passed Monday night under arms. The garrison at Pelwar, which is also threatened, request reinforcements.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—A Reuter telegram from Rome says: The Pope has sent to the bishops of the Catholic Church a very important encyclical letter with regard to the churches of Russian Poland, which it is thought, will create a sensation.

PANAMA, Jan. 9.—No further trouble has occurred since the attempt at revolution on the night of the twenty-seventh of December, and peace again reigns. Gen. Cerroreso, President of the republic, has resigned, and Josey Carlo Carsola, second vice president, has been appointed to fill the vacancy. He took the oath of office and was formally installed on the thirtieth ultimo. Ricardo Arias has been appointed governor in place of Leguizda Pena, who was assassinated on the night of December the twenty-seventh.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Ben. Ismail, Prime Minister of Tunis, repaired Friday in full uniform, and accompanied with a numerous suite, to the French Consulate, and on behalf of the Bey tendered a full apology.

The Consul of France received Ben Ismail surrounded by all his staff and officers of the French fleet stationed near Tunis.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Foundrymen, ship-builders, and house-builders, of Bat gor and vicinity, have struck.

Six hundred weavers at Carlisle struck. This strike will affect other departments of mills. A strike commenced in the wire trade at Warrington—fifteen hundred men are idle in consequence. The strike on the Midland Railroad has virtually ended.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 13.—The Russian trade route to China is more dangerous than ever. Another Russian caravan has been robbed.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 13.—Prince Henry of the Netherlands, brother of King William died to-day.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—A dispatch from Milford Haven, coast of South Wales, says that an American ship, the Thomas Reed, 1507 tons, Capt. Small, bound from San Francisco for Liverpool, went ashore in breakers in Fresh Water Bay, near Linny Head, yesterday. Three men were washed overboard and drowned. The vessel is a total wreck; the salvage is large. The boat was built and owned at Bath, Me.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—A dispatch from Tashkend says: Gen. Kaufman forwarded an invitation to Shere Ali to come to Tashkend. There is some doubt whether he is still waiting at Mazarid. Shere Ali receives daily reports from his son and representative on the throne, Yakoob Khan. On this young acting potentate, if reports from credible sources speak truly, English gold is beginning to exercise great influence. Probably Yakoob Khan will soon usurp his father's throne, thus verifying the wildest Arabian tales of sudden transformation from a dungeon to the Durbar.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—A dispatch from Kingston, Jamaica, says yellow fever is very prevalent there.

The brigantine Lona Nina, which left New York for Limerick, has been wrecked on Aaron banks and the captain and three men drowned.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 15.—The signature of Russo-Turkish treaty is expected to take place on Thursday. Russia, it is understood, accepts the reduction of the indemnity by a hundred million roubles and also the payment in payment by roubles.

Homer College.

On Tuesday, the last day of the session of the Louisiana Conference, Rev. J. T. Daves, chairman, presented the third report of the Committee on Education as follows:

Your Committee on Education, by formal action of your body giving definite instructions, beg leave to report the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this Conference petition the Legislature of the State of Louisiana to abrogate the charter of Homer College, and that the Bishop presiding be requested to appoint a committee to carry out the resolution.

Rev. B. F. Alexander offered the following as a substitute for the resolution of the Committee on Education:

Resolved, That the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, hereby memorialize the Legislature of the State of Louisiana to so amend the charter of Homer College that the connection of the Conference with said college be severed, and that the control be placed wholly in the board of trustees.

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to secure this amendment by the Legislature.

After some discussion, the vote was taken on the substitute, and found to be 25 for to 19 against.

Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker then offered the following:

Whereas, The trustees of Homer College have instituted suits on subscriptions in utter disregard of the wishes of this Conference, expressed by formal resolutions; and whereas, The Louisiana Annual Conference regards these suits as improvident and oppressive; therefore,

Resolved, That the Louisiana Annual Conference disavows in toto any part or lot in said suits.

Resolved, If the trustees of Homer College continue to press these suits, the Conference will not endorse nor commend Homer College to the patronage of our people within our bounds, and that these resolutions be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Being put to a vote, these resolutions were adopted by a vote of 26 to 25.

Louisiana Conference.

RESOLUTIONS ON BIBLE.

Resolved, That we urge upon our people to make it their daily companion and to teach it to the children in their schools on the Sabbath days and on the week days and tell of it when they sit in their houses and they walk by the way and when they lie down, and when they rise up.

Resolved, That we highly appreciate the services of the directors of the Southwestern Bible Society in their past efforts to circulate Bibles among our people, and do greatly esteem the worthy men who have hitherto filled this position.

Resolved, That we will aid the society in all available modes such as by public collections in our congregations, founding auxiliary societies giving and receiving contributions in aid of distribution of the Bible.

Conference Thanks.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Louisiana Conference be and are hereby tendered the various steamboat and railroad lines connected with the city, for the favors shown delegates in passing to and from Conference, and also to the hotels and others that have assisted in the entertainment of the Conference.

Resolved, That this resolution be furnished the daily papers of this city and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

The Worship of Mary.

Dr. Cumming, of London, who is not a stranger to controversy, has made a brief passage at arms with Dr. John Henry Newman, the famous convert from Anglicanism to Catholicism. Dr Cumming was reported as saying, in a discourse on a recent Sunday, that "the Pope, cardinals, prelates and other officials of the Roman Catholic Church had just issued an order withdrawing the word 'Father' from the Lord's Prayer, and substituting the word 'Mary.'"

Dr. Newman, on being appealed to, declared that this statement, correctly reported, was simply a false and a gross calumny. To this denial Dr. Cumming made reply as follows:

"Behold the foolish calumny, of the least high authority, had expunged from the Psalms of David the title 'Lord,' and substituted in every Psalm the name Mary.

"Psalm cx thus: 'The Lord said unto our Lady, Sit thou at my right hand.'

"Psalm xcv: 'Come let us sing unto our Lady, the Virgin queen of our salvation.'

"I have unbroken testimonies consisting of all the Psalms, also of Bonaventure's Psalter.

"What you quote as stated by me is perfectly correct.

"Yours very truly,

"JOHN CUMMING."

The London Daily News gives Mr. Cumming praise, "Mary, Mother of God, the earth doth worship thee," the praise of the Eternal."

Dr. Newman was in the end obliged, says the Presbyterian, to confess that there were some expressions like to the above in some versions of the Psalms, but he characterized them as "profanities," which they certainly are. Then Dr. Cumming overwhelmed him with evidence that the Psalms had been so changed by devotional writers in the Roman Catholic Church that what in the Psalms and ancient Liturgies is addressed to God is in these writings addressed to Mary, "Our Lady, our Mediatrix, our Advocate." The controversy ceased with Dr. Cumming in the field, and triumphant.—New York Christian Advocate.

Sensational Sermons.

Announced preaching I do not regard with favor. A man has, or his friends feel that he has, something out of the way to say, and he looks up a smart running title, and gives it out, or the newspapers does it for him. I have never thought this a good plan, and would advise my brethren not to adopt it. It is regarded as a confession of general weakness. Your common things, it could hardly be supposed, would attract, but have a sermon on "The Iron that Did Swim," or the "Little Foxes," or "Samson's Foxes," or "Jehudi's Penknife," and it is hoped the people will hear you thereon. And when there is no announcement, why, of course, the fair inference is, there is nothing peculiar, nothing worth hearing but the gospel.

Among the incidental evils of this announcing system, is the effect it has on the Christian community. There are enough of gypsies already, unattached hearers who "go round" and hear the "most interesting preachers." You get them the first time you are announced, perhaps the second. But meantime your neighbor, or his deacons, will have taken notice of the fact, and a rival announcement is in the field. You get out Goliath; he proclaims Samson. You imitate the Royal Dancing Girl, and he forthwith produces the Witch of Endor; and the poor, uninstructed owners of itching ears and vacant minds have a good time, and persuade themselves they are talking religion when discussing the relative merits of the performances. Let us leave all this to the lyceums, the lecturing bureau, and the showmen. Let us be willing to go down as low as is needed to lift up sinners; but it is we who are to go down. This is to drag down the sacred desk, the office of the ministry, the Bible itself. Competitive rowing and running, and competitive oratory, may be well enough for the boys in school and college, but competitive preaching is not among the elevating forces in the church. And, as a rule, the least instructed hearers are those who have "heard everybody."—Rev. John Hall, D. D.

Notes for a Bible Reading.

"And I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed. I will delight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved. My hand also will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved; and I will meditate in thy statutes. Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope. This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me. The proud have had me greatly in derision: yet have I not declined from thy law. I remembered thy judgments of old, O Lord, and have comforted myself. Horror hath taken hold upon me because of the wicked that forsake thy law. Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage. I have remembered thy name, O Lord, in the night, and have kept thy law. This I had, because I kept thy precepts. Princes have persecuted me without a cause: but my heart standeth in awe of thy word. I rejoice at thy word, as one that findeth great spoil. I hate and abhor lying: but thy law do I love. Seven times a day do I praise thee because of thy righteous judgments. Great peace have they which love thy law: and nothing shall offend them. Lord, I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments. My soul hath kept thy testimonies; and I love them exceedingly. I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies: for all my ways are before thee. Let my cry come near before thee, O Lord: give me understanding according to thy word. Let my supplication come before thee: deliver me according to thy word. My lips shall utter praise, when thou hast taught me thy statutes. My tongue shall speak of thy word: for all thy commandments are righteousness. Let thine hand help me; for I have chosen thy precepts. I have longed for thy salvation, O Lord; and thy law is my delight. Let my soul live, and it shall praise thee; and let thy judgments help me. I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek thy servant; for I do not forget thy commandments."—Psalm cxix, 46-176.

The life and death of our Lord Jesus Christ are a standing rebuke to every form of pride to which men are liable. Take for instance:

Pride of birth and rank—"Is not this the carpenter's son?"

Pride of wealth—"The Son of Man hath not where to lay His head."

Pride of respectability—"Can any good thing come out of Nazareth." "He shall be called a Nazarene."

Pride of personal appearance—"He hath no form nor comeliness."

Pride of reputation—"Behold a man gluttonous and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners."

Pride of intelligence—"Many others who ministered to Him of their substance."

Pride of learning—"How knoweth this man letters having never learned?"

Pride of superiority—"I am among you as He that serveth." "He humbleth Himself." "Made a curse for us."

Pride of success—"He came unto His own and His own received Him not." "Neither did His brethren believe in Him." "He was despised and rejected of men."

Pride of self-reliance—"He went down to Nazareth and was subject unto them."

Pride of ability—"I can of mine own self do nothing."

Pride of self-will—"I seek not mine own will but the will of Him that sent Me."

Pride of intellect—"As My Father hath taught Me I speak these things."

Pride of bigotry—"Forbid him not; for he that is not against us is on our part."

Pride of resentment—"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." "Friend, wherefore art thou come?"

Pride of reserve—"My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death. Tarry ye here, and watch with me." "The Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected."

Pride of sanctity—"This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them."

But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world."—Gal. vi 14. Word and Work.

Repeating.

Dr. Vincent happily illustrates the value of getting back from the person to whom you communicate information, so as to be sure that he has it: "I wish to send a dispatch to Mobile. I hand it to the operator, and ask, 'How much?' 'Four dollars.' 'Will that make it sure?' Not absolutely; we can repeat it for two dollars additional, and make it so.' The words are, 'Not good for any amount.' Click, click, click—the dispatch is gone. The operator in New York, whence I dispatch, asks his friend in Mobile to repeat or send back the message. Back it comes, reading as I wrote it, 'Not good for any amount;' all right. I pay my six dollars. If it had not been repeated it might have read, 'Note good for any amount,' and the change of one little letter would have made me infinite trouble. By recalling and repeating I know it is all right. Recall and repeat with your pupil, and be sure that he knows that all is right."

FOR THE N. O. ADVOCATE

"THY WILL BE DONE"

When cares of life come crowding in
Like some rude howling wintry blast,
And clouds obscure the morning sun
'Tis hard to say: "Thy will be done"

When we, beside the bed of death
Watch some dear loved one's fleeting breath
Then see them lie all cold and still,
We question: "Why is this thy will"

But there is One who reigns above
That chastens those whom He doth love
And when we think on this we know
A loving Hand hath dealt the blow

Though gloomy clouds may gather fast
And fierce may howl the wintry blast
Father, teach thy little one,
To say in truth: "Thy will be done"

Let darkest shadows o'er us loom,
Let life's sweet hopes fade ere thy bloom
From early morn till set of sun,
We still will say: "Thy will be done"

F. M. GRAVES.

Errors of Authors.

There are a good many books among us in common use which, while they undoubtedly contain much valuable teaching, are, nevertheless, interspersed here and there with very erroneous teaching. I wish, for the good of the church, and especially for young preachers, to point out some of these errors. I will endeavor to raise no debatable questions, but to state such as are palpable when once pointed out; nor will I state any that are not so important as to be necessary to a proper understanding of Scripture.

They will relate mostly to the church. Here I have long felt assured was great need of such a line of very plain and simple explanations as would tend largely, if not almost, or quite entirely, to do away with the mass of current denominational and sectarian wrangling about the church. Nine-tenths of those debates touching ecclesiastical science generally, the character of the church, the ministry, high and low church questions, apostolic succession, baptism, sacraments, etc., proceed almost entirely upon a false assumption on both sides of an easily-seen primary principle. We do not start right.

I will mention, in a sort of categorical order, some of these errors, and remark that the mistake itself, or by itself considered, does by no means constitute the disadvantage, but, being more or less fundamental in character, it becomes the source of an almost endless catalogue of errors running through the entire theological and ecclesiastical curriculum. Like a mathematical problem or teaching, an error at the beginning injures, if it does not nearly, or quite, ruin all that follows.

Error 1. There are two distinct systems of religion in Scripture, one in the Old Testament and one in the New. The former is called the law, and the latter the gospel.

Answer. Scripture knows but one system of religion. The Old and New Testaments teach precisely the same principles, truths, doctrines, precepts, morals, faith and duties in every respect. The New Testament teaches nothing but what is drawn from the Old. Scripture against Scripture is taught by infidels, but it is false.

2. The first system, commonly called Judaism, was temporary, not designed for mankind, but for a special people—the Jews only.

Ans. A temporary or special religion for certain persons, and not for mankind universally, is an absurdity, utterly unknown to Scripture, and repugnant to the very idea of human religion.

3. The condition of salvation under the law—i. e., Judaism or the Old Testament system, was the performance of certain religious rites and ceremonies, particularly the killing of certain animals by way of atonement for sin.

Ans. The law knows no salvation. Such an idea is preposterous. Law knows nothing but obedience or punishment. Religious ceremonies are modes of worship, and of inculcating truth. The conditions of salvation were always the same.

4. The ceremonial slaying of animals, and offering them in sacrifice, was a real, proper and true sacrifice under the law or the legal dispensation. This is taught by McClintock and Strong, and many other authors.

Ans. Sacrifice for sin was always the same. There never was any other than Christ, our Saviour. The slaying of animals before his advent and death was a mere instrumental mode of teaching the doctrine of sacrifice; the only mode in which it could be taught before the actual suffering.

5. When Christ appeared on his supreme authority he abrogated this system of Old Testament religion or Judaism, and forever discontinued all ceremonial worship.

Ans. The Saviour never abrogated or changed any religious system, doctrines, ceremonies or modes of worship, but, on the contrary, always maintained and enforced all the doctrines or tenets of the Old Testament. There are probably as many ceremonies in use in the church now as there ever were. Nevertheless, a number of ceremonies ceased forever at that time, but not because of any command, but because of the natural impossibility of their continuance. Those particular ceremonies that shadowed forth, or pointed forward to the incarnation of God in Christ, must necessarily cease on the coming of that event. These, and none others, ceased, and for that reason alone. An event cannot be anticipated after it has come to pass.

6. The Saviour at the same time introduced a new religion into the world. This was the origin of Christianity or the gospel. It was wholly and entirely new.

Ans. In this great, wholesale, false teaching, we have germ, pith, gist and starting-point of all high churchism and Romanism. The Saviour never taught anything different from the Old Testament teachings. The Old and New Testament agree in every tenet and principle. They are chronologically separate, and for that reason, the one code going before, and the other after the advent, certain modes of teaching must necessarily differ.

7. This new religion was not restricted to the Jews, as the old religion was, but was for all mankind. It rested not on external observances, as did the old, but on the new principle of faith in Christ.

Ans. All religion of all Scripture was always limitless and universal. A limited and restricted religion is absurd. Religion always rested on faith in Christ, and never on external observances.

8. Jesus invited, entreated and commanded the Jews to abandon their old religion and embrace the gospel; but they all refused, except a very few, perhaps twelve or twenty, or so.

Ans. On the contrary, he entreated and commanded not only the Jews, but all men, to adhere closely and strictly to the old religion of the Old Testament, and not depart from it in a jot or tittle; and great multitudes, probably one-half or more of all the millions of the church, did so, and their successors, afterward called Christians, have continued to do so, at least nominally, to this day.

9. All the Jews except those few, the apostles and a few others, being very wicked, and accustomed to their formal religion of the Old Testament, refused the gospel, and their descendants, the modern Jews, still adhere to the Old Testament religion.

Ans. This is also a wholesale untruth. If it were true, then it would follow necessarily that if the Old Testament is revelation, Christianity is false. But the truth is, that about one-half of all the Jews then living were among the most noble, pious and self-sacrificing Christians known to the history of religion. For about ten or fifteen years most of the entire Christian Church, apostles and all, consisted of Jews. Modern Jews are the descendants of those only who repudiated Christ.

10. The whole Jewish people, therefore, became very much incensed against the Saviour for trying to destroy their religion, and they unanimously sought to take his life.

Ans. Very few Jews, probably not more than two or three hundred out of all their millions, had anything to do with the death of Jesus. The whole thing was done secretly, and in haste, for fear of the people. Moreover, most of them were not in Jerusalem, or even in Palestine, and could not know it till long afterward.

This catalogue is not yet finished, and I must beg for more time.

R. ABNEY.

The Old Year and the New.

Another year has rolled into the abyss of time, with all its deeds of virtue, all its acts of shame, all its little acts of kindness, all its omissions of duty. The time is past never to return. The golden opportunities which have been allowed to pass unimproved have been lost forever. The recording angel has been busily engaged writing in God's great book of remembrance the acts of our lives during the last three hundred and sixty-five days, and the great book, with its records of deeds, whether good or evil, is sealed, to be opened at the great day of "the revelation of God's righteous judgment." Not one of its evil deeds, omissions of duty, or unimproved opportunities, but that will have to be accounted for. While on the other hand all the good deeds that God's children have done will be likewise rewarded. All the little acts of kindness, and all the words of comfort spoken to the distressed which we have perhaps forgotten, have been marked to our credit and we receive a just recompense.

To many the year of 1878 has been quite [illegible]. Many homes have been rendered desolate, and many hearts filled with sadness by the terrible scourge which has visited our Sunny South; and yet to most of us, when we attempt to review the prominent sorrows and joys of the past year, it presents but few that now seem worthy of notice. Each day, it is true, had enough of each, it appears to us, at the time, but now we look upon most of them as though they had never been. Many of our fellow-creatures who set out with us in the race of life, in the beginning of the past year, have been called to judgment. They have received the reward of their labors, whether good or evil, and their names and faces are swiftly disappearing from the minds of those who knew and loved them. A great many who have lost friends and loved ones have failed to profit by the admonition God intended thus to give them, and still think as little of death as if they were certain of being spared during a long life. They are still willing to say to their souls to rejoice, because they have "much goods laid up for many years."

The new year, which twelve o'clock last night ushered in, will be one, no doubt, marked with events of interest to many. Many who this morning wished their friends a happy new year will, ere the year of 1879 has been all rolled up on the great wheel of Time, have crossed the river of death, and be lying in the cold and silent grave.

How many and how varied are the petty plans and lofty schemes that are working in the breasts of the heterogeneous mass of mankind who enter this morning upon the new year, and how few of them will be worked out. How few of the wild hopes which are drawing men on in the path to ruin will be realized, and how many are the unexpected pleasures that await those who can now see no ray of light in the future, except with the eye of faith.

The year will be the turning point in the lives of many. There will be those who during the year 1879 will make decisions, and put in execution plans that will tell upon their happiness through all time and eternity. We should use the fragments of time, and improve the precious opportunities that are offered to us, for to many of us the privilege of the coming year will be the last that are ever presented.

The Real Prisoner of Chillon.

"A character more celebrated than known" is Francis Bouivard, prior of St. Victor and Prisoner of Chillon. It is not by any intentional imposture on his part that he goes stalking through modern literature disguised in the character of hero, saint and martyr, and shouting in his hoarse client voice his "appeal from tyranny to God." In fact, if he could be permitted to revisit his cherished little shelf of books about which has grown the ample library of the University of Geneva, and view the various delineations of himself by artist, poet, and even serious historian, it would be delightful to witness his comical astonishment. Perhaps it is not to be laid to the fault of Lord Byron, who, after visiting the old castle and its dungeon, beguiled the hours of a rainy day at the inn at Ouchy with writing a poem concerning which he frankly confesses that he had not the slightest knowledge of its hero. Hobhouse, his companion, ought to have been better informed, but was not. If anybody is to blame, it is the recent writers, who know the facts, but are unwilling to hurt so fine an heroic figure or to dethrone "one of the demigods of the liberal mythology." Enough to say that the Muse of History has been guilty of one of those practical jokes to which she is too much addicted, in dressing in tragic buskins and muffling in the cloak of a hero of melodrama, and so palming off for earnest on two generations of mankind the drollest wag of the sixteenth century.

The story of the imprisonment is soon told; for strangely enough, this most garrulously egotistical of writers never alludes to it but twice, and then briefly. The first two years he was kept in the upper chambers of the castle and treated kindly, but at the end of this time the castle received a visit from the duke, and from that time forth the Prisoner of Chillon was remanded to the awful and sombre crypt. A single sentence in his handwriting is all that he tells us of this period, of which he might have told so much, and in this he shows a disposition to look at the affair rather in its humorous than in its Byronesque aspect. For his one recorded reminiscence of his four years of dungeon-life is, that "he had such abundant leisure for promenading that he wore in the rock pavement a little path as neat as if it had been done with a stone-hammer."

It is needful to caution enthusiastic tourists that nearly all the details of Byron's poem are fabulous. The two brothers, the martyred father, the anguish of the prisoner, were all invented by the poet on that rainy day in the tavern at Ouchy. Even the level of the dungeon, below the water of the lake, turns out to be a mistake, although Bonivard believed it; the floor of the crypt is eight feet above high-water mark. As for the thoughts of the prisoner, they seem to have been mainly occupied with making Latin and French verses of an objectionable sort, not adapted for general publication.—Lippincott's.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death with names and dates, will be published.

☞ Obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS. MARY EDITH HOWARD, daughter of Rev. Mark and Julia Howard, died of hemorrhagic malarial fever, after an illness of only twelve hours, September 22, 1878, in Autauga county, Ala. She was born in the county in which she died, on February 18, 1822. She embraced religion in youth, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, continuing a faithful member thereof through life.

She was married to Dr. C. C. Howard January 10, 1843; was the mother of two sons and five daughters, all of which, save one son, are active members of the church of her choice. Sister Howard was a woman of high culture and very pleasant manners.

I was her pastor for three years, and can safely say that I was never acquainted with a woman who possessed more noble traits of character. It was her fortune to meet with reverses and troubles of no small weight in life; but with Christian fortitude and cheerfulness she overcame them all.

Her deep personal piety not only had its weight upon her family, but impressed all with whom she associated with the reality and necessity of heartfelt religion.

I feel, as doubtless her kind husband, children and many friends feel, that heaven has an additional charm for her having been transferred there.

The very short and painful illness that terminated her life prevented her from saying much about her future state, but her life of love for the Master, and devotion to the church, removes all doubts of her eternal bliss in the enjoyments of heaven.

A. C. HENDLEY.

SISTER ELIZA SPEAR was born A. D. 1800, and died in Jackson county, Fla., July 30, 1878.

Auntie Spears, as she was called by all who knew her, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in Wilmington, N. C., A. D. 1820. During her pilgrimage upon earth she moved and married several times, but never forgot her church and church vows. In her amiable life the religion of Christ had a most beautiful illustration. She rarely ever absented herself from the house of God when she was able to attend upon the ordinances of the church. During the last years of her life she was greatly afflicted, yet she possessed her soul in patience and Christian resignation. I did not have the pleasure of visiting Sister Spears during her last illness, but she died as she had lived. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

JOHN A. GREEN.

BRO. JOHN W. SELMAN was born in Franklin county, Ga., September 22, 1811, and died in Jackson county, Fla., July 20, 1878.

Bro Selman was a man of God. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1851, at Bethel church, in Calhoun circuit, Marianna district, Alabama Conference, where he had lived for many years. He was converted before he joined the church. He had been halting between two opinions in regard to denominations, until at last he made a wise decision, and joined the church of his choice, in which he lived and died. I never met a man in my life who was more ready to talk about religion than Bro. Selman. His whole soul seemed to be filled with Christ and his cause upon earth. His house was always open to the preachers, and they were welcome guests at any time. He filled some office in the church during his association with it upon earth. He had only a short notice of his death, but he was ready—he had set his house in order to die. He seemed to be impressed from his first attack that his time was near at hand. He talked but very little during his last illness, but gave his family to understand that all was well. He was a very kind and affectionate husband and father. He kept up his family altar until he could no longer bow in prayer. He often called his family around the fireside, and instructed them from the book of God. He has left a wife and three children to mourn his loss, all of which are in the church, and, we trust, are on their way to heaven.

JOHN A. GREEN.

THE following preamble and resolutions were adopted by Adams Church Sunday-school:

Whereas, Death, with his relentless hand, has invaded our Sunday-school, and taken from us our beloved brother, J. E. Westmoreland, in the prime of life and usefulness; be it

Resolved, That while we meditate with sad hearts upon this dispensation of an all-wise Providence, right and just in all His acts, and while we bow in meek submission, and mourn our irreparable loss, yet we do rejoice in the hope that his spirit is now in glory.

Resolved, That the Sunday-school has lost a promising member, and a community a useful citizen.

Resolved, That we will ever cherish his memory, and that we tender our heartfelt sympathy and tenderest condolence to his bereaved family and relatives.

Resolved, That a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and that his family be furnished with a copy of the same.

J. G. KING, for Committee.

MARTHA J. ROBERTS was born in East Feliciana parish, La., February 23, 1850; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1870, at Olive Branch church, under the ministry of Rev. W. E. Ballard, of the Mississippi Conference, was married to A. C. Patterson January 9, 1873, and died November 12, 1878. She appreciated the sublime mission of life, and acted accordingly. In all the relations of life, as daughter, wife, mother, friend and neighbor, she was true and faithful, always gentle, but firm and conscientious in the discharge of her duties. As a wife, specially, she was kind, gentle and loving, ever seeking the happiness and best interest of her husband and family. Her friendship was sought and cultivated by all in the community, and she died without an enemy, mourned by all who knew her. She gave no dying testimony, but all felt that none was needed. Years ago she had felt the power of Jesus to save. The battle is fought, the victory is won, she has entered the Master's joy. She leaves a devoted husband and two little children to mourn her absence.

IRA B. ROBERTSON.

MRS. LIZZIE T. NESMITH.—A peculiar sorrow invades the heart of every member of our Sunday-school when we see in the midst of our circle a seat made vacant by the ruthless hand of death. We to-day pay a last tribute to the memory of one of our number. We weave a garland about the tomb of Mrs. Lizzie T. Nesmith. We are made to feel but the more melancholy when reminded of all the peculiarly sad incidents connected with the death of one endeared to us by association, and one who shared so much of our love and esteem. Only a little more than a month previous to her death we bade a last farewell to her beloved companion, whose name is of precious memory to us, and whose noble instincts of character are engraven upon each of our hearts in characters which are enduring.

Feeling thus bereaved, the occasion opens the floodgates of memory, and there comes rushing upon us numberless illustrations of their beautiful characters, kind and generous hearts, and unfaltering devotion to the cause of truth and religion. Young, brilliant and ambitious, their lives were lives of immense possibilities. The gates of a glorious future stood ajar, the realization of their fondest hope was almost consummated. But, alas! closed forever is their book of human purpose, human activity and human obligation.

So it is with human hopes; they dazzle but to dismay; to-day they furnish food for intoxicating dreams and glorious anticipations; to-night their seductive beauty is all lost in ashes with no resurrecting phœnix. In the death of Dr. Nesmith the world has lost a useful man, society a chaste ornament, and the medical profession a standard bearer, who ever carried its banner in the front rank of the profession.

He fell with his armor girded about him, and in his fall was displayed as sublime a heroism as ever immortalized warrior, statesman or divine.

As an offering of affection and esteem to the memory of our sincerely beloved associate, Lizzie T. Nesmith, we, the members of Oak Ridge Sunday-School, adopt the following:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in the dispensation of His providence, to remove from our midst our dear friend and sister; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Sister Nesmith our Sunday-school has sustained the loss of one of its best and most zealous members, and an unselfish friend, and who, while living, was a crown jewel among us.

Resolved, That we tender the relatives our heartfelt sympathy, and, while we deeply deplore the loss thus sustained, thanks be to Him who giveth the victory over death, for the consolation of feeling that ours is the loss, and not our dear friend's, and that she has entered through the gates into the city.

Resolved, That the foregoing be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and a copy sent to the relatives of the deceased, also a copy filed with the records of the Sunday-school.

MRS. NANNIE DOVE,
MISS MOLLIE WILLIAMS,
BEN. JOHNSON,
Committee.

This feeble tribute is paid to the memory of DR. W. B. HARVEY, who departed this life on Monday evening, at eight o'clock, October 28, 1878, aged sixty-nine years.

For many years the writer enjoyed the most delightful intercourse with this valued Christian friend, and was the recipient of his generous kindness, professionally, socially and spiritually.

It is said that "friendship is only a name," but his constancy proved it a beautiful reality, clothed in the spotless mantle of charity, guided by faith and hope. In the sweet by-gone, before our happy home was blighted by sorrow, the good doctor frequently made one of our number, his fine intellect expanding in pleasant converse.

When grief came to us, borne by the angel of death, inruing the merry laugh to tears, our doctor was by the bedside of the suffering one, pointing him or her to "the land where the saved never die," for the cold messenger made no distinction, and his step had become a familiar sound in our household, and when, with slow and measured tread, they bore our loved ones to their narrow home, the doctor was there with helping hand.

When all was over he came again to pour on our bereaved and sore hearts the healing balm of the religion he loved so well, until the dove of peace softly folded her white wings over the troubled soul, lulling it to quiet rest.

The well-known sound of his coming footsteps will be sadly missed. The kind voice which told, in language so tender and persuasive, the old, sweet story of a Saviour's love will no more make music in the willing ear, nor the prison life be gladdened with the agreeable presence of the courteous, finished gentleman.

Many spiritual feasts we have tasted together, for to the writer he came as minister, both to soul and body, expressing only his religious sentiments.

When the tired one grew faint and weary with long waiting, he kindly offered the "bread of life," or a cooling drink from the "fountain of living waters," and so beautifully he told of the "maidless roses that border the soft flowing stream," that the heart of his listener would yearn for the joys of the blest.

In such moments he said if God so willed, how gladly he would throw off this mortal coil and lie down in blissful rest at the dear Redeemer's feet.

While loved ones mourn his loss he realizes the rest for which he sighed, and enjoys the precious promises contained in Holy Writ, of which he lovingly invited all to partake who came under the sound of his voice.

Farewell, my faithful friend, kind doctor! The well-trimmed lamp you held for me that I might better walk by faith, shall ever burn on memories shrine, and when in thought I wander to the sacred spot, your pure life, holy teaching and bright example shall guide me as I journey down the stream of time, and through infinite mercy I may be counted meet to join the holy ones in the heavenly home.

You now strike the golden harp and sing the song of "Moses and the Lamb;" a jewelled crown rests on your brow, and not the least in brilliancy is the gem placed there for numerous acts of disinterested kindness to your friend,

GRATITUDE.

DR. JOHN P. HEATH died, of yellow fever, at Tunica, West Feliciana, La., October 18, 1878, aged twenty-four years. Deceased was a successful practitioner of medicine, who, notwithstanding his youth, had obtained a local reputation that would have been creditable to an older head. He was studious, ardent and devoted to his profession. We do not think we are mistaken in saying that he regarded the practice of medicine as strictly his vocation. To have shrunk from a call, however perilous its answer, would have been in his view a betrayal of his trust, a departure from the path of duty. Duty was his watchword. He applied it to all the relations of life. With this talismanic word inscribed upon his banner, he could not be otherwise than brave—brave in the true sense, he dared do the right. He might have lowered the standard; he might have listened to the call of selfishness; fled from danger, and thereby saved his life; but it would have been at the cost of duty. The idea of deserting his post never entered his mind. When the test came, it found him true to his principles. Day and night he was in the thickest of the pestilence. The noble doctor not only visited and prescribed for his yellow fever patients, but it must needs be that he take upon him the role of nurse, or allow them to suffer. The generous heart responded nobly to this call; patiently and faithfully ministered to the sick, the dying; yea, the dead! until he himself fell a victim. He died, and we mourn his untimely death; but we sorrow not as those without hope, and we take comfort when we remember that his young life was sacrificed on the altar of duty. Many brave, noble hearts were stilled during the late epidemic, but among the bravest, truest, most generous, whose pulsations were forever stilled by the angel of death, we claim a place for Dr. John P. Heath. It has been said that "great men are rare." May we not say with equal truth: good men are comparatively rare; but we unhesitatingly say the doctor was a good man. He was a genial companion, full of love and sympathy. There was no coldness, selfishness or coarseness about him. He was a man of strong attachments, and, no doubt, prejudices too; but they were so controlled and subdued that they did not affect his general character. His sense of propriety was thorough and just. He was a sincere man. He loved truth, and during his whole life maintained this character. His nature was alive and gushing with all noble, generous impulses—kind, affectionate, full of sympathy, he rejoiced with them that rejoiced, and wept with them that wept. Few men possessed a nobler soul than his. The community admired him, the church loved him. His death fell like a shadow upon more than one hearthstone, and the home circle literally bowed down with grief. May the widow's God bind up the broken hearted mother, and may He wipe all tears from the eyes of the bereaved sisters. May the rod and staff of the Almighty support the brothers. May the Comforter grant the oil of joy and wine of consolation to every grief-stricken heart. The preacher has lost a friend, a brother, and the church a model steward. We would feel the loss irreparable, but that we remember it is written: "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" and again: "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." His days of suffering and sorrow are ended. His body rests in a secluded spot far from the busy marts of trade. No marble marks his resting-place, but gentle hands adorn, and faithful hearts keep vigil near that lonely grave. The body rests in hope; thank God for the Christian's hope! Our friend is not lost, but gone before. "Sweet hope for our dead, and for ourselves dying." Jesus has gone before. "Grace and hope span the tomb." Oh, thou God of all grace, sanctify this affliction to our good in time, our salvation in eternity!

PASTOR.

MRS. MARY SLOCUM, wife of J. B. Slocum, departed this life August 10, 1878. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; a true friend, an obedient daughter; a loving companion, and a good, faithful Christian, honored, beloved, and mourned for by many kind friends.

Sister Slocum has passed away. She was one in whom the heart of her husband trusted, whose tender solicitude made her association a crowning joy, and whose sympathetic nature and loving ministrations endeared her to her relatives and friends, for her death possessed no horror. With her faith, supported by dying grace, and her trust in Jesus, she contemplated the coming change, and set her house in order; so when the momentous time came, she arose and trimmed her lamp, and entered with Jesus into the kingdom of God. She grappled with the monster like a hero, spoke of her death as though it was a small matter, and gave good evidence of her acceptance with God. She bade life and friends adieu, and entered the stream with shouts of hallelujah to God and praise to Jesus for the hope of immortality and eternal happiness. A little later she spoke of the bright angels that were about her bed. Thus, with a bright smile, she sank in death. We lost a friend, but will meet her again on the other shore. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.

THE DRAGON FLY.

When brooks of summer shallow run,
And fiercely glows the ardent sun;
Where waves the blue flag, tall and dank,
And water-weeds grow rich and rank,
The flaunting dragon fly is seen,
A winged spindle, gold and green.

Born of the morning mists and dews,
He darts—a flash of jeweled hues—
Athwart the waterfall, and flings,
From his twice-duplicate wet wings,
Diamonds and sapphires such as gleam
And vanish in a bridesmaid's dream!

Sail not, O dragon fly, too near
The lakelet's bosom, dark and clear!
For, lurking in its depths below,
The hungry trout, thy fatal foe,
Doth watch to snatch thee, unaware,
At once from life and light and air!

O brilliant fleck of summer's prime,
Enjoy thy brief fleet span of time!
Full soon chill autumn's frosty breath
Shall blow for thee a wind of death,
And dash to dust thy gaudy sheen—
Thy glittering mail of gold and green!

The Art of Going Away.

We have heard it said that one of the most important social accomplishments is that of entering a room gracefully; but to our mind that of leaving one easily and judiciously is to be preferred. It is painful to see people anxious to beat a retreat from a call or visit, and yet apparently as unable to escape as rats in a trap, although nothing bars their egress, and all persons concerned would gladly dispense with their company. The art or science of departure, both from localities and positions, is worth studying in great as well as little matters. To understand when to bring to an end a morning call or a public career requires, in a lesser or greater degree, the exercise of the same faculty. No visitor is likely to be popular who has not the tact to leave at a proper time a house at which he may be staying; and no prime minister understands his business unless he recognizes the exact moment at which he ought to tender his resignation. Many cases at once present themselves to the mind in which the judicious exercise of the faculty of bringing things to a conclusion is necessary. It is one of the greatest merits of a novelist to know when to wind up his story, and the orato who can sit down at the right moment and in the right way is master of a good half of his art. Preachers sometimes complain that their greatest difficulty is that of concluding their sermons; but in this particular case there is little need for the exercise of any special ingenuity, as an abrupt but early ending is the fault of all others, which is most readily pardoned by their hearers.

A bulky treatise might be written upon this subject, if we had no scruple about violating our own precepts, but we only propose to look at it in some of its social phases. We will not enlarge upon the advisableness of moderation in the length of morning calls, because we lately treated this matter in detail; and to write an essay instructing people how to get away from their friends would be about as useful as an attempt to teach riding by means of a book. It would, of course, be easy to multiply palpable truisms on the subject, after the manner of the writer on etiquette who observed that it was ungenteel to blow your nose with your table napkin. We might, for instance, point out that it is unnecessary for a nervous bore who has paid a call lasting three quarters of an hour to announce his withdrawal by observing that he "fears he must go," for his host would probably mentally reply, in the words of Sir Walter Scott: "Sinful brother, part in peace." Or we might inveigh against the habit to which some ladies are addicted, of waiting to say an interminable quantity of last words after they have risen to leave; but we have come to the conclusion that the regeneration of mankind on these matters is quite hopeless. Although, however, we have little expectation that the virtue of early departure will ever become common, we may point out the popularity of such a proceeding. It is often a doubtful question whether people will be much gratified by one's arrival, but it is almost always certain that they will be secretly glad at one's departure. At any rate, nobody suffers in the estimation of his friends by leaving them with an appetite for his society.

Few people have more or better opportunities of observing the idiosyncrasies of mankind in this matter than owners of country houses. It is often amusing to notice the various methods of intimating an exit which are adopted by different persons in any household of guests. Some will try to break the distressing news gently, as if they were afraid it would overwhelm us with grief, expressing their fears that they "really must go" on such or such a day, probably a later day than they were expected to remain; and it is lucky if the unavoidable regrets expressed by their entertainer do not call forth a reply that they "will do their best to stay a little longer." Others hint indirectly that they are going to deprive you of the pleasure of their company by inquiring where they may obtain flys; while some, on the other hand, say not a word till the carriage is at the door to take them away. Between ignorance as to when some of the guests intend to leave, and the sudden departure of others, a host is often thrown into a state of considerable perplexity. To add to these and the other cares of hospitality, some visitors, especially maiden ladies, are apt to bother him about their intended journey for several days beforehand, expecting him to study "Bradshaw" for their edification. At last, perhaps, they find that they "can't get" to their proposed destination in one day, or, at any rate, in time for dinner, and therefore they determine to remain a few days longer in their present quarters. When the time arrives for a party of the guests to start for the station, one or two will very likely keep their entertainer in a state of nervous anxiety by making no visible preparations for a start; the servants of others will not be forthcoming, although their masters and mistresses are ready, the carriages at the door, and the luggage on top of them. Two or three people will want change, too evidently for the purpose of tipping the servants, and the mind of one will be concentrated upon the mysterious disappearance of his umbrella, that of another upon the non-arrival of a letter which he expected that morning, and which he will wish to be carefully forwarded to a place with an unpronounceable Welsh name. When the host's mind is occupied with these matters, one of his visitors will probably call his attention to a telegram in the morning papers, and, just as he is about to bid a graceful farewell to the most important of his guests, there will very likely be an outcry that somebody's fly has not arrived, and a rush will have to be made to the stables, where there will be a scramble to provide a conveyance of some sort at a moment's notice. The worst case of all is when a departed guest suddenly reappears, hot and flurried, having left some of his belongings behind him. Seizing his lost property, he wishes his host a breathless good-bye, and, springing into his fly with a bounce and a bang, shuts the door, hoarsely calling to his driver to go on as quickly as possible lest he should miss the train. Fortunate and worthy of all praise is he who succeeds in taking his leave easily and courteously, saying the right thing at the right moment, and calmly going away without fuss or hurry.

There is a proper time for everything, and not least for going away. We must not be misunderstood as implying that, as a universal rule, the sooner our guests leave us the better. On the contrary, there are few greater social nuisances than the premature loss of an important member of a well-assorted party. Perhaps everything has been arranged with the best prospect of success when it suddenly turns out that the most desirable guest of all, who had been expected to stay a week, can only remain for a couple of days. The welcome visitor who leaves too soon is a great offender, and his sin is aggravated when it leads to the extra stay of a decided bore. But a considerable knowledge of character is required by the guest who would stay, or go exactly at the right time. It is sometimes difficult to discover whether his host is telling the truth or politely lying when he presses him to remain. The proper hour of the day for leaving is also a matter of some moment. The visitor who goes away at an inconvenient time often gives an immensity of trouble. Many a half-day is wasted by people having to wait at home in order to see a guest off. It is, of course, desirable to use the most convenient trains, but it is not desirable that a whole household be disarranged in order that one man may catch an express. It were better that a guest should be an hour longer on his journey than that he should put his entertainer to inconvenience by starting at an awkward moment; for he should remember that his host's recollection of him, and his visit, will probably be a good deal associated with the occasion of his departure, and it is therefore highly important that that association should be agreeable. One of the greatest difficulties in bidding farewell to a host is to convey to him the impression that you have enjoyed yourself. Expressions of thanks for a pleasant visit are apt to have a stereotyped and conventional ring about them. A hospitable man likes to know that his friends have been happy; but when each of them mutters a sort of little grace on his departure, he feels that they are but paying him an ordinary social compliment, for he knows that they thank their entertainers wherever they go as regularly as they tip the servants. Indeed, we once heard of an absent and nervous man who, as he was getting into the carriage which was to convey him to the station, inadvertently tipped his host and thanked the butler for his pleasant visit.

There are unhappy mortals who are so utterly ignorant of the art of departure that more or less decisive measures have to be taken to induce them to leave at all. It is a distressing episode when a visitor has to be assisted in making up his mind to go away, in much the same manner as a lame dog is said to be helped over a stile. It is hard to say which appears the greater fool under such circumstances—the guest or his host. A man is in a decidedly false position when, having enticed another into his house, he is unable to coax him to go out of it again. If the art of departure is difficult, that of ejection is still harder to learn. The reversal of the engines of hospitality is a very undignified proceeding. There are people who are quite callous to all hints that they have stayed long enough. The deterioration of the champagne, the increasing lightness of the claret, the disappearance of the satin damask furniture under loose covers, and even the feigned indisposition of the host, have no effect on such gentlemen. They say that there is nothing they like so much as to be with you when you are quite alone, nor will anything persuade them to be so faithless and ungrateful as to leave you until you are completely restored to health. As regards the little manœuvre about the wine, they will seize the opportunity for a conversation on the subject of vintages, and put a strain upon your temper and your veracity by making inquiries as to the age of the special fluid with which you are endeavoring to starve them out. We must not conclude without a word on the constantly recurring difficulty of getting our friends to go off to bed. When we enjoy sitting up with our guests in the smoking-room to abnormal hours, how anxiously we watch their cigars becoming shorter and shorter! and how mortifying it is, when we think that the happy moment has at last arrived, and that we are to be allowed to retire to rest, to see them calmly light fresh cigars before throwing away the ends of the old ones. But sometimes non-smokers are little better behaved. Repeated hints that it is getting late seem merely to have the effect of making our visitors congregate on the hearthrug; and, just as we are hoping for a real move, a wretch firmly fixes his back against the mantelpiece, and deliberately proceeds to open the Eastern question. We devoutly wish we could put a stop to his untimely lecture as abruptly as we can conclude an article.—Saturday Review.

Juvenile Literature.

We are not referring to the pernicious, corrupting literature of which so much has been said lately. We know how bad that is, but at present we are not concerned in condemning it. Our purpose is to speak of the floods of unobjectionable literature for the young which are poured out in such seemingly endless succession by the prolific writers of our day. Every book-seller, editor, journalist and reviewer can testify to the amount and voluminousness of this sort of literature. "Aunt Susan," or "Uncle John," or "Cousin Marjory," are forever adding another "excellent and instructive volume" to the list.

Unfortunately there can be too much of a good thing. These good people, in their anxiety to provide milk for babes, mix it with a large proportion of water, and the result is too often wishy-washy. Having read one of these story books is the equivalent to having read a dozen.

The sameness of incidents and characters; the poverty of inventions; the bad grammar at sometimes discouraging to the adult reader, and lead one to wish that a rattler literature could be provided for our children.

Of course there are juvenile books which are a pleasure to old and young. We could name numbers from whose perusal we have risen with new aims and resolves, strengthened for the battle of life. But what we complain of is the overdoing. So many books for which there is no special time or place. And yet these, with the attractive volumes of history, travel, biography, which every one would so benefit and delight for what? For a moment's pleasure, told in a common place way and leaving no impression on the mind of the young reader.

This was when children were so rare as to be universally petted and made much of. Miss Edgeworth's Tales, and one or two others, comprised the whole list. Yet in this range was united with the children's love for stories the shelves from which their elders drew their pleasures, and formed their literary tastes on higher models.

For the very youngest children no book compares with the Bible. Over and over again will the delighted little ones listen to the Scripture narratives, never wearying of the oft-repeated tale, as we know whose duty and privilege it has been to recount these Bible stories.

And what better foundation can be laid against the attacks of infidelity, or the sneers of unbelievers, than the intimate knowledge of God's word. The chapters impressed on the childish memory by reading or recital will be the points best beheld in maturer years, perhaps the very instrument of conversion.

Let us then teach our children more and oftener from the Bible.—Christian Intelligence.

The Grandest Encouragement.

Almost any one can endure a word of encouragement. There is nothing more depressing in a commercial or mechanical establishment, where a young man is trying to do his duty, than to meet with entire silence on the part of his employers, save when he has done something wrong or failed in a specific understanding. And if men need encouragement in secular service, how much more do they need it in the service of God. Let Christian men tell all the joyous things they know, and recite the most exhilarant promises of the gospel, and breathe out of their own life anything by way of encouragement into the hearts of those who may be depressed and despondent. The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ is the grandest practical encouragement any man can have. It is not a mere sentiment, or whim, or phantasy; it is something which a man may enter with his entire physical, mental and moral nature. The religion of Jesus Christ is illumination. There are a thousand things in life that are very dark to us. There are many things in our own constitution that need explanation. We are coming across a hundred things in life that are beyond our capacity of solution. How grand to come back from all the mysteries and the unsuccessful soundings in life to God's Word, and to the glorious gospel, and to find there an explanation for everything. The religion of Jesus Christ is never in all the Bible once represented as darkness. It is a lamp. It is a lantern. It is a daybreak. It is a noontide glory. It is an illumination.—Christian Work.

Culture, if consistently and thoroughly carried out, must lead on to religion, that is, to the cultivation of the spiritual and heaven-ward faculties of our nature. And religion, if truthful and wise, must expand into culture, must urge men who are under its power to make the most of all their capacities; not only for the worth of these capacities in themselves, but because they are gifts of God, and given for that purpose, that we may carefully preserve them.—Sharp.

Living in sensible comforts and joys is rather a part of our reward than of our duty. It would therefore save modest and pious persons a great deal of disquiet if they would learn to judge of their spiritual condition by graces and services, rather than by consolations.—Boyle.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION IN LONDON SCHOOLS.—Under the School Board Act of 1870 it was made optional with the various boards to give Bible instruction to the children in their schools or to withhold it. The School Board for London decided that Bible instruction should be given to every child in the schools of London. Hence, every day, in every school, a portion of the Bible is read, with explanations suited to the capacity of the children. Texts are committed to memory, verses of simple hymns sung, and prayer offered, with the children, by the responsible teacher. That is to say, in 690 departments in the London schools, 188,000 children daily hear a portion of the Word of God. The attendance upon religious instruction is perfectly voluntary, but is nevertheless almost universal. Since 1876 yearly examinations have been held in Scripture knowledge, upon which the attendance has been also voluntary. In 1876 42,000 children attended the examinations. In 1877 the number examined rose to 84,000, and last year the number was 105,000. As a reward for proficiency Bibles and Testaments are given to the successful competitors, of which this year over four thousand were distributed.

At the anniversary of the Free and Open Church Association, held in St. Paul's, London, July 15, the preacher was Bishop Doane of Albany. In the course of the sermon the Bishop declared that it was conceivable that men should assign places in the house of God for money value to any human being, not only for use, but abuse, not only for accommodation, but exclusion. He condemned the pew rent system, as also a method they had in America of building churches on the stockbroker's system, by which every contributor of five hundred dollars was assigned a certain number of seats. This system, he contended, deserved the condemnation inflicted on the money changers in the Temple. Where does this system prevail? Very many churches, it is true, are part or from the sales of pews; but the usage has no speculative element in it, and certainly does not deserve to be called a "stockbroker's system."

—It is announced that the Church Missionary Society has been compelled to take into consideration a proposition for changes in its rules, on account of the trouble with the Bishop of Colombo in Ceylon. By a unanimous vote, Rule XXIX was reconstructed, so as to read: "Each candidate, when duly prepared and finally approved for missionary work, shall go out either ordained or unordained, at the discretion of the committee." The practice heretofore has been to have all the missionaries ordained before being sent out. If they were assigned to any district within the jurisdiction of a bishop of the Church of England, a license was applied for, which was not revocable except for some assigned legal cause. It is not explained how the change in Rule XXIX will protect the Society's missionaries from the interference of meddlesome bishops.

—The Protestant population of Holland numbers now about 2,000,000, against 1,200,000 Catholics and Jansenists. There are five organized Protestant churches: 1. The national church, called the Reformed Dutch, which embraces several Scotch, English, Presbyterian and French parishes. 2. The Reformed Liberal Church. 3. The Lutheran Church, subdivided into the Evangelical Lutheran Church and the restored Lutheran Church that is to say, the confessional. 4. The Mennonite Society, or Baptist; and 5. The Remonstrants. All the churches except the second receive a subsidy from the Government. The national church receives 3,000,000 francs and the Catholics 1,500,000.

—New York City has not so many churches as many suppose. The whole list foots up only 375, belonging to the following denominations: Protestant Episcopal, 73; Catholic, 54; Methodist Episcopal, 50; Presbyterian, 41; Baptist, 31; Jews, 25; Lutheran, 21; Dutch Reformed, 20; African Methodist Episcopal, 9; United Presbyterian, 7; Congregational, 6; Reformed Presbyterian, 5; Universalist, 4; Unitarian, 4; Friends, 3; Miscellaneous, 21. Among the last, one True Dutch Reformed, one Swedenborgian and one Greek Catholic.

It was determined at the last session of the French Wesleyan Methodist Conference, held at Nimes, to adopt a new system of evangelization for France, by occupying as rapidly as possible Lyons, Marseilles, Bordeaux and other great points in that country.

—Nine Protestant denominations have now missions in Mexico. These employ 98 missionaries. There are 137 congregations, 12,000 members and adherents, and 15 Sunday and 36 day schools, with 1,137 scholars.

Our Young People.

MY LITTLE MILLIONAIRE.

'Twas one gold-blue day, in the mid-June weather,
Out of doors to the gay green grass we lay,
My own little boy and I together—
I with my dreams, and he with his play.
"Don't cry, dear mother, there is lots of money"
Close up to my ear, his little voice said,
And he gave me a kiss as sweet as honey,
From the two little lips of melting red.

He pointed me off to the meadow splendor,
Where daisies and buttercups countless grew,
And said, in a tone so arch and tender,
"You, dear, pretty mother, it's all for you!
All the while are my silver, dear mother,
The yellow my gold! Wish! You needn't care,
You can have one thing well as another,
I can pay it all," said the millionaire.

So I kissed the lips that were sweet as honey,
And I wished for all that could ever be;
He paid for the whole with his flowery money,
And just as merry as merry were we.
I have had, little man, my share of pleasures,
Life has given me much to have and to hold,
But, O, you paid for my sweetest with treasures
Of daisy silver and buttercup gold!

Wide Awake.

Living in an Omnibus.

A TRUE STORY.

BY LOUISA M. ALCOTT.

"Chips, ma'am? Only five cents a basket," said a little voice, as I stood at my gate one morning, deciding which way I should walk.

Looking around, I saw a small yellow-haired, blue-eyed boy, smiling at me with such a cheerful, coaxing face, that I took the chips at once and ordered some more.

"Where do you live?" I asked, as we waited for Katy, the girl, to empty the basket.

"In the old bus, ma'am."

"The what?" I exclaimed.

"The old omnibus down on the Flats, ma'am. It's cheap, and jolly, now we are used to it," said the boy.

"How came you to live there?" I asked, laughing at the odd idea.

"We are Germans, and when the father died, we were very poor. We came to this city in the spring; but couldn't get any place, there were so many of us, and we had so little money. We stopped one night in the old 'bus that was left to tumble to pieces down on the flats behind the great stables. The man who owned it laughed when my mother asked if we might stay there, and said we might for a while; so we've been there ever since, and like it lots."

While the boy spoke, I took a fancy that I'd like to see this queer home of his. The Flats were not far off, and I decided to go that way and perhaps help the poor woman, if she seemed honest. As Katy handed back the basket, I said to the lad:

"Will you show me this funny house of yours and tell me your name?"

"Oh, yes, ma'am; I'm just going home, and my name is Fritz."

I saw him look wistfully at a tray of nice little cakes which Katy had put to cool on the window-seat, and I gave him one, saying, as he put it in his pocket very carefully:

"How many of you are there?"

"Six besides the mother."

I just emptied the tray into the basket, and we went away together. We soon came to the flats behind the stables, and there I saw a queer sight. A great shabby omnibus, of the old-fashioned sort, with a long body, high steps, and a flat roof, with the long grass growing about its wheels, and smoke coming out of a stove pipe poked through the roof. A pig dozed underneath it; ducks waddled and swam in a pond near by; children of all sizes, swarmed up and down the steps; and a woman was washing in the shadow of the great omnibus.

"That's mother," said Fritz, and then left me to introduce myself, while he passed his cake-basket to the little folks.

A stout, cherry, tidy body was Mrs. Hummel, and very ready to tell her story and show her house.

"Hans, the oldest, works in the stables, ma'am, and Gretchen and Fritz sell a many chips; little Karl and Lottie beg the cold victuals, and baby Franz minds the ducks while I wash; and so we get on well, thanks be to Gott," said the good woman, watching her flock with a contented smile.

She took me into the omnibus, where everything was as neat and closely stowed as on board a ship. The stove stood at the end, and on it was cooking a savory-smelling soup, made from the scraps the children had begged. They slept and sat on the long seats, and ate on a wide board laid across. Clothes were hung on the roof in bundles, or stowed under the seats. The dishes were on a shelf or two over the stove, and the small stock of food they had was kept in a closet made in the driver's seat, which was boarded over outside, and a door cut from the inside. Some of the boys slept on the roof in fine weather, for they were hardy lads, and a big dog guarded the pig and ducks, as well as the children.

"How will you manage when the cold weather comes?" I asked.

She shook her head, and looked sober for a minute as she stroked the white head of baby Franz, who clung to her gown; then a smile broke over her face, and she answered trustfully:

"I do my best, ma'am, and keep a brave heart in me; for I remember that the dear Gott is a father to such as these; and He won't let them suffer."

"You may be sure of that I said heartily; and resolved that her beautiful faith should be rewarded by finding friends close by her.

"We are saving to get clothes for Gretchen and Fritz to go to school in the winter, ma'am. Karl and Lottie make toy furniture, as the father taught them; and when the bad weather comes, they can sit warm in the 'bus, and make their bits of chairs and tables as well as ever. They can earn but little yet; still they are so good I can leave Franz with them, and old Spitz, the dog, while I go out washing when it gets too cold to work here."

"Perhaps some kind person would take one of the children, and so lessen your care," I said; for I rather coveted pretty Lottie.

"Ah, but no! I could not spare one even to you, best madam. They are my treasures, and I keep them all, all, as long as I can find bread to give them," cried the mother, gathering her flock into her arms, and feeling herself rich in spite of poverty. I said no more, but slipped a bit of money into pretty Lottie's hand, and said good-by.

A happier, healthier, busier set I never saw; each had work to do and did it cheerfully. Often they had hunger and cold to bear, but bore it patiently. Very seldom did any of the pleasant things that children like come to them; but they were contented, and enjoyed playing with oyster-shells, old shoes and broken crockery as much as many children enjoy their fine toys. Few mothers have more loving children, or do more for them than good Mrs. Hummel; and I think I never saw a happier family than those little red-cheeked, yellow-haired Germans, as they gratefully smiled and nodded at me from the steps of their funny omnibus home.

The Flying Machine.

For centuries men have tried to invent a machine by means of which they could safely fly through the air. We have, indeed, in ancient fable, the account of an attempt of this sort on the part of Ixion.

The invention of the balloon brought mankind nearer to this end; and it has long seemed as if the principle of the balloon, applied to floating the human body in the air, would sooner or later succeed.

Professor Ritchell, of Connecticut, now claims to have solved the problem, and to have constructed an apparatus by which a man can sustain himself in the "air as easily as an oarsman guides his boat."

The machine devised by him is light and simple. A bag, inflated with gas, shaped like a horizontal tube, twenty-five feet long and thirteen in diameter, is attached to a small car, composed of light metallic rods, securely fastened together. The occupant sits on a narrow seat, as he would on horseback, and sets himself in motion by means of a fan placed underneath the seat, which he revolves rapidly, the fan making two thousand revolutions a minute.

Another fan, in front of the car, also revolves, and its use is to move the machine backward or forward. A simple system of gearing also enables the operator to turn the machine to the right or the left, as he pleases. There seems to be little doubt of the effectiveness of Professor Ritchell's machine, which is light and easily managed, and has already proved its flying qualities.—Youth's Companion.

A little boy was much puzzled about sins being blotted out, and said, "I cannot think what becomes of all the sins God forgives, mother."

"Why, Charlie, can you tell me where are all the figures you wrote on your slate yesterday."

"I washed them all out, mother."

"And where are they then?"

"Why, they are nowhere; they are gone."

"Just so it is with the believer's sins; they are gone—blotted out—remembered no more."

I read of two little children—a boy and a girl—who used to play a great deal together. They both became converted. One day the boy came to his mother and said:

"Mother, I know that Emma is a Christian."

"What makes you think so, my child?"

"Because, mother, she plays like a Christian."

Live Questions.

The most ephemeral interests are often described as "the live questions of the day." The things that seem nearest to us, and that arise out of some temporary exigency, are thought to be matters of moment. What are called live issues are in reality soon dead, whilst the truly great and vital interests, of unions and thoughts are often treated as things of the past. The questions that have the most vigorous vitality now are precisely those that occupied and agitated the minds of men in the remotest generations. We may apparently drift away from them for a while, and other matters may be on the surface like the changing billows on the sea. The return, however, to the old and deep currents of inquiry and speculation is certain.

It is often on flippant lips that doctrine is effete as the staple of religious teaching. Religion is becoming more and more dissevered from the formulated beliefs of the past. It is a life, a work, a sentiment, or what you will, but there is no place for doctrinal theology. Our well-tried hymns must give place to the chaff of modern evangelism, and our preachers must no longer spend time on the depravity of man, the nature of the atonement, the freedom of the will, and the divinity of Christ. The superficial and the temporary are regarded as the live issues and methods, whilst the questions which lie at the root of salvation are discarded as worn out and to be thrown aside. Popularly, he is the live man who discourses of the current legislation, of the weather, of science and its discoveries and problems, and who avows himself to be the champion of a creedless gospel. The live man is a busy-body, ever on the wing—restless, bustling, moving about whether to purpose or not. He is a live man who is up in the geological and chemical questions of the time, and who draws his themes and illustrations from guide-books and novels.

"A living dog is better than a dead lion;" but are we sure that the lions that have been roaring along the centuries are actually dead? All the questions that have stirred the hearts and consciences for ages are as young and vital now as they have ever been. The new things under the sun are few indeed. There has been progress in doctrine, but the germinal truths are as old as man. The live question of to-day is the question that was alive thousands of years ago. There is nothing older in our fallen world than the doctrine of justification by faith. It has its periods of obscurity, but it breaks out afresh every now and then, as it brings about a resurrection of the dry bones. It was the live question in Abraham's day, in Paul's, in Luther's, and in Wesley's, and it comes to the surface strongly wherever revival power is manifested. Sin and its remedy are the live questions of every generation. There are none that can displace the questions of a coming day, immortality, and the personality and sovereignty of God. The questions are those that always are, humanity, that always topes the conscience, and that ever appeal to the soul. The truth that is freshest and most vital to-day is the truth that aroused and converted men when the gospel was first preached.

Let us not be captivated by this common talk about live men and living issues. They may be the deadest of men and of questions—a galvanized, and not a true life. The most torpifying and spiritually stupefying preaching is often precisely of that sort that affects to deal with the conditions and problems of the hour, and that makes the most ado about the bubbles floating on the current of society. It is well that the great principles and doctrines of religion, and of religious experience also, should remain without change, while many other things in the domain of science, philosophy and civilization are ever shifting and never completed. The heavens are full of dead suns and planets that once burned and flashed in their now dark and undiscoverable orbits. The living questions, theories and opinions prevalent before Copernicus, Galileo and Kepler, are many of them dead forever. The live man is he who sticks to what is ever true and essential in religion, and who recognizes the fact that the living questions of to-day are those that confronted Abel, Enoch, David, and the men and women who lived when Christ died, and rose and ascended. In the highest and best sense there are no really live questions outside the limits of religious truth. What does not affect the character for eternal good—reform it and renovate it—is a dead thing. What does not reveal our relations to God, draw us nearer to him, and bring us into living communion with Christ, and prepare us for eternity, is no more than the dust in the balance. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" is still the searching and startling question. After centuries it is as fresh, and penetrating as when it fell from the Master's lips. The issues propounded in the sermon on the mount have outlived all other questions of that day.

The live men of history have been the men who recalled the church and the world to the old truths and the old doctrines. The great leaders and reformers who have stirred the great deep of thought and of faith have simply brought out the old and profound utterances of divine inspiration. The path to death is that in which these doctrines are covered and smothered by matters not pertinent to the deepest wants of the soul, and where a meretricious dress of affected originality and novelty is thrown over the grand, imperishable and statue-like truths of the everlasting gospel. Neighborhood gossip, the personal column of a morning paper, and the local annals of a cross-road village, have a certain interest and fascination for some minds. The questions agitating Congress and the Legislatures have an interest and importance superior to any other with some. How the world was made, and the testimony of the rocks, and the wonders of protoplasm, are the absorbing topics of many who imagine they are dealing with the questions of the age and of mankind. And yet, as compared with the really deep things of God, the moral and the spiritual, they are as the shallow brook, whose waters are drunk up by the summer heat, in contrast with the inexhaustible river whose waters fertilize an empire.

Louisiana Conference.

As noticed in our last issue the Conference met January 8. The session ended on Tuesday, January 14. This was rather longer than our sessions usually have been. The discussions on the subjects of education, Publishing House, and other important interests, were full and free, and all in excellent temper. In the passage of character every pastor read a full report when his name was called. We like this way. The Bishop, especially, has use for the information it affords, in coming to conclusions in the stationing of the preachers. The light it sheds is needed before the last hours of the session, when the stations are usually read. The missionary anniversary was an account of the great weather poured from Sunday night to Sunday night. Dr. Wilson and Young did the talking, and did it well, as we were informed. The collection was over $100. Dr. Wilson gave us a strong and telling address in the lecture room on missions and preached at the Carondelet Street Church on Sunday morning. Dr. Young preached at Ames Methodist Episcopal Church, Sunday morning, and addressed the Conference in the interests of the Publishing House. Over [illegible] per cent. bonds were subscribed for, which makes [illegible] Conference. As well as [illegible] business published in another column, the collections for missions and for Conference claimants are somewhat ahead of last year. This was to us something of a surprise in view of the troubles from yellow fever and quarantines. There has been some advance in nearly every department. The Sunday-school report, we believe, indicates a slight decline, but this is probably owing to imperfect statistics. In the matter of preachers' salaries, the receipts show a painful deficit, but not worse than last year. Our people, and the preachers also, greatly enjoyed the visit of Bishop McTyeire. He preached to his old pastoral charge, Felicity Street, on Sunday morning, and seemed to have great liberty in declaring "the fullness of the blessings of the gospel of Christ." The preachers were nearly all at Conference, and in good health and spirits. Their presence was felt to be a blessing to our people, and we believe they were very heartily and comfortably entertained. It will be seen that some changes were made in New Orleans. These have been generally received with approval, as become loyal Methodists. Three of our brethren had died during the year, all young men—Phil. H. Moss and Tiff Foster died of yellow fever, and S. H. Schroeder of congestion, but two days before the session began. They were all young men, and most valuable preachers. A memorial service was held in the Conference room on Monday night. A large congregation was in attendance, suitable memoirs were reported and read by the committee, and many feeling tributes were paid to their memories by a number of the brethren. The churches of the Presbyterian, Baptist, and Ames Methodist Episcopal Church, were filled by our ministers on Sunday. And thus another Conference year is ended, and another begun. God bless the itinerant band, and be their shield and guide through the dangers and toils before them. As usual, the brethren passed resolutions approving the editorial management of the ADVOCATE, and promising to work energetically for its circulation. May these and all other good resolutions be kept.

Laying Aside the Weight.

A little boy once said to me: "I've learned a and b, and m and r; I can go to spelling now, can't I?" "Let's see," I replied. "Your name is Johnnie, isn't it?" "Yes." "Well, now, let us see if you can spell Johnnie." "But my name's not in the spelling book, is it?" "Yes, there's a Johnnie in the alphabet whenever there's an alphabet in Johnnie." "Well, I never saw Johnnie in the a, b, c's; where is it now?" "Do you think you can spell?" I continued, "then let us see if you can make a word out of a, b, m, r." What does that spell? Guess." "I don't know," replied Johnnie. "What's letters for, anyhow?" "To spell words." "Then aren't a, b, m, r, letters?" "Yes." "Then what do they spell?" "Nothing by themselves, but if you give me another a, I'll make them spell Abram; and if you will learn this one—h—I'll make them spell Abraham. But that's not at all like Johnnie, is it?" "No; where'll you get Johnnie?" "Here—J-o-h-n-n-i-e. You see you must learn all of the letters before you go to spelling."

There are many Christians who are like Johnnie. They have learned two or three letters of the Christian alphabet, and they want to go to spelling. They have learned a few of the first principles of the Christian creed, and they wish to hurry right away to heaven and claim the prize. Many of these fall by the way, and cry out that Christianity is not the thing it pretends to be. They have not learned that if a man be crowned it must be after he has striven lawfully. No man is at first conscious of the number of the impediments of which he must free himself. Nor are we at first conscious of the necessity of putting forth every energy to win the prize. Let us suppose a man still unconverted, and yet justly sustaining the highest character for morality in the community. He enters the arena for the Christian prize. There, instead of being at the head of the list, he is at the foot. He is not now to run against moral cripples, but he has spiritual athletes as his antagonists. "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world, and spiritual wickedness in high places." He reckons badly if he thinks it will cost him no greater effort to win here than in the world which he has abjured. A boy goes from the headway to college. He was the acknowledged first-honor boy in the headway. He enters a class where there are twenty first-honor boys from twenty other academies. He will not wear his honors so easily at college. He must put out at a pace more rapid than that he had before. The young graduate comes home bearing the first honors of his class. But now he enters a field where fifty first-honor men are striving for mastery. If he thinks honors in the world will cost him no effort, he will wake up some day to find himself hopelessly behind.

Strange that Christians should think that they can win in their race when it costs so much to win in the race after the perishing honors of the world! Therefore the Saviour says: "Strive to enter; for many shall seek to enter, but shall not be able." Therefore Paul exhorts: "Lay aside every weight." There is this difference between the race of the world and the Christian: There only one is crowned; in the Christian race all are crowned who do honest running. But, though they may not all run equally fast, they are expected to lay aside every weight.

Many a Christian disentangles one foot, leaving the other clogged. Such run in a circle, or go "hip-py-te-hop." A long stride and a short one. Irregular in their attendance upon all their duties, they are also irregular in their enjoyments. The devil always trips them by their clogged foot. Temptations always assail their weak points. They always strike the sore toe against the grub. They always get caught "on the blind side." They would get on well if it were not for troubles for which they had not provided. These failings they confess, and expect God and the world and the devil to make due allowance for them.

Others untie some of the weights from both feet. Their running is more regular, but hardly any faster than that of the former class. Their walk is slow and circumspect, and they get to themselves a great deal of self-gratulation for being deliberate. They will get to heaven if it is not St. Peter's bad time before they hallo at the gate. But it would be well for them to have lived in the days of the patriarchs, so that they might have had a better chance in making the whole distance within a lifetime.

Others again loosen the weights, but leave them tied by long cords. This class runs well for a season, but suddenly we see them drawing in the way. They are worse off than those who did not unfasten their clogs at all. They are thrown down where they are only a hinder others, but are themselves trampled by the hurrying racers. Poor bruised mortals, whom their friends crush and the world derides! Their hopes and enjoyments suddenly terminate in despair and woe. Many put off their weights, but do not lay them aside. They lay them right in the race track. How many a Christian experience do we hear which proves a stumbling block! The narrator tells what he once was with a gusto that makes the unconverted feel that there was something manly in sin, something noble in rebellion against God. But they have quit all that now. Yes, but they have left their clogs in the track where a young racer must run; and should he be careful enough to step over them, he will not make as good speed as if they were not there. O that we could learn to lay the weights aside—out of the way where no child's foot would be in danger of striking them! O that we would not take them in our hand, and keep shouting, as we run: "See the weights I have taken off my feet. Let us take them off, and throw them out of sight of the race course." Let them not once be named.

"Lay aside every weight." Johnnie must learn every letter and the force of every one, before he is a speller. So in this Christian alphabet. It may not take every letter to spell our Christian name, but it will take every one to make us able to read the story of life. We may learn enough to make out a word when they are combined, but the ten thousand words with which we have to do are not to be learned until we learn all the alphabet. We may run with some of the weights, but how much easier we could so, how much faster, if we had all aside! We may think we have all aside when we have not many left. We may think a racer loose when they are only tied by long cords. More of them may linger when we have begun to dream of perfection. Barnacles grow on the ship's keel out of sight and we blame the wind and tide for her slow sailing. [illegible] soles of our gospel shoes [illegible] leaden weights that weary us. Do we think of [illegible] Christ [illegible]

Solemn Claims.

The claim of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, [illegible] what [illegible] ter how [illegible] may be [illegible] expedient [illegible] it. There is more of President-making and party policy in the national legislation than any considerations of equity and right. It would seem that Northern Democrats are specially anxious to make a record that will commend them to their section. The Atlanta Constitution, writing of the William and Mary College claim, says:

William and Mary College, of Virginia was burned during the war by the Federal army. Its rebuilding has long been urged on account of its distinguished alma mater, which included Washington, Jefferson, Monroe, Tyler, besides Chief Justice Marshall. The college was the oldest but one in the country, and the claim for reimbursement came before Congress in 1870, by scholarly and cultivated gentlemen in almost every Northern State, Republicans as well as Democrats. No war claim ever came up under more favorable circumstances; it had twice passed Republican houses by large majorities; but it was nevertheless slaughtered last week in the Democratic House by the decisive vote of 87 to 125. In vain did such Republicans as Dr. Loring, of Boston, and Prof. Monroe, of Ohio, urge its passage, in vain did Randolph Tucker show that by the law of nations educational institutions are free from destruction by armies; all in vain was the eloquent appeal of Mr. Goode, for the bill was doomed from the outset. It was used as a test case, and its fate indicates what is surely in store for all other war claims. They are to be remorselessly slaughtered, and that, too, by Democrats. The Democrats who voted against the Virginia bill were Messrs. Warner, of Connecticut; Rosa, Cutler and Hardenbergh, of New Jersey; Patterson, of Colorado; Reelly, of Pennsylvania; Hamilton, of Indiana; Caldwell, of Tennessee; Jones, of New Hampshire; Springer, Morrison, Harrison, Sparks, Hartsell and Townsend, of Illinois, and McMahon, of Ohio. All the Georgia members who were present voted for the bill. The friends of the old college will doubtless try again in the Forty-sixth Congress, but it is more than probable that they will again fail, and that no other war claim will become law. We have only to add that the mourners over this new departure do not predominate in this part of the country.

The Nashville Christian Advocate of January 1, says:

The business of the Publishing House is brisk, and improving. The reduction in the price of the excellent book issued by it has increased the sales. The people are pleased, and the receipts of the Publishing House are enhanced. High prices and small sales will not do. Low prices and large sales is the motto for these times. So the Book Committee and Agent think, and our people concur. Another encouraging feature of the situation is found in the fact that the ability and high standing of the gentlemen composing the Book Committee justify the assurance that the business of the Publishing House will be managed with good judgment, and with absolute fidelity to the Church. The action of the late General Conference clothed the Committee with ample power, and they will use it faithfully. Though with large business engagements of their own, they love the Church, and do not grudge the time and labor requisite for intelligent and efficient supervision of the great interest committed to their hands.

Bishop Keener has now his three sons in the traveling ministry. Samuel Keener, the youngest of the three was admitted on trial at the recent session of the Louisiana Conference. Christian Keener is the Presiding Elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, and John A. Keener is a member of the Alabama Conference, and stationed at Glenville. They are well educated, and excellent preachers. "A wise son makes a glad father." With three wise sons the Bishop ought to be very glad indeed. We congratulate him, and bid the young men God-speed in their noble and consecrated calling.

Several members of the Louisiana Conference were placed under obligations to Capt. Geo. W. Koons for courtesies extended them on the steamboat Mary Ida. This boat runs between Donaldsonville and Bayou Sara, and connects daily with the railroad at Donaldsonville.

We regret to learn, from the Southwestern Presbyterian, that Rev. A. M. Campbell died at St. Joseph, La., December 27. He was formally a Methodist and a member of the Mississippi Conference, but had connected himself with the Presbyterian [illegible] we believe, about three years ago. Communications for the editorial department should be sent to the editor.

Our agents and correspondents are requested to observe the above instructions.

Dr. McFerrin to the Church.

MR EDITOR: Since the first of September last I have visited fourteen Annual Conferences. My special business was the interest of the Southern Methodist Publishing House.

1. To collect accounts. In this I had tolerable success. A good many had been on hard appointments, and were unable to pay. Others had not sold all their books; others had died, and a few had gone back to the world. One thing I tried to impress on the minds of the brethren, and that was to circulate our books and papers, but especially to pay their accounts. It is bad policy, to say the least, to apply money collected for books, periodicals, and other church purposes, in defraying our individual expenses, and run the risk of refunding out of our salaries, particularly when we are dependent on lame stewards, or a slow and very economical people.

2. It was my pleasure to represent the Christian Advocate and our Sunday-school literature; and this is not hard to do. Both are popular, and are gaining ground rapidly. Don't weary, and you will get 30 000 after awhile. Take our bonds, and give us 30,000 subscribers to the Advocate, and we will pay the annual interest, and out of the other profits on the business of the house will create a sinking fund, and in due time wipe out the entire debt of the establishment. The publication of the Sunday-School Lessons in a quarterly meets universal favor. The Magazine, Visitor and Little People are highly prized. Dr. Cunnyngham ought to work with a hearty good will, as he is so highly esteemed. Men ought to write with a vim when their productions are acceptable and useful.

3. Subscribers to our four per cent. bonds come freely. We hope to save the house. I have not met a single person who has uttered a word against the plan of relief. One lady did say that we should wipe out the house; but when she hear the matter explained, she changed her mind and said the institution must be saved. At nearly every Conference ladies have subscribed. At one Conference my landlady was the first; at another, two ladies led off with a subscription—one for a $500 bond, the other a $100. Another lady still took a $100 bond, and said she would do her own housework for a year, and be her own cook, and she is able to obtain help, rather than see the house go down. At one Conference a brother sent a check to the treasurer of the Missionary Board for $1,000, and subscription to the bonds of the Publishing House for $1,000—$500 of this for a benevolent purpose. Yes, sir, I have strong hope that we will carry the plan through. Let everybody help. It will require "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether."

4. The Conferences I found generally well supplied with efficient laborers. In some of the Conferences there is a complaint that some of the young do not study as diligently as they should. The old preachers are dying or wearing out; the young must measure up if they expect to fill the places of their distinguished predecessors; and the old preachers should not give out too soon, nor should the people be impatient to exchange well tried men for those of less experience.

5. The support of the preacher. The hard times set some circuits back; but in others the preachers were better sustained than usual. South Carolina, now ninety-three years old as a Conference, leads the van in many respects. It does one good to hear the most of these brethren report. A people oppressed, but grand in their comparative poverty. In many of the Conferences, Tennessee particularly, there is a great lack of parsonages, or preachers' houses.

Brethren, allow me to say, without homes for your preachers your Methodism will be greatly crippled. On the matter of parsonages I want you, Mr. Editor, to write, and I wish to be heard again.

J. B. McFERRIN.

Nashville Christian Advocate.

"I HAVE exalted one chosen out of the people." This is a precious assurance for the people of God. Jesus is not A being far off; not a stranger to their feelings and experiences, but one of themselves, and therefore able to feel with them and for them. He is said to be "touched with the feelings of our infirmities." The miseries, calamities and sufferings to which human nature is subject are not to Him a mere matter of near-sy and indifference. He has an experimental knowledge of them all. On earth He was tempted like as we are. He endured every variety of want and pain and sorrow, and now in heaven He exercises a tender concern for and His suffering servants here below. He is interested in them, for they are His own, bought with His own precious blood. He is concerned for them as one closely related to them, for He is truly a brother born for adversity; nay, more, He is one with them, for His words to Saul, the persecutor, were not, 'Why persecutest thou my people?' but 'Why persecutest thou me?' This sympathy of Christ with and toward his suffering people is an extensive sympathy—it reaches to all their infirmities; a proportionate sympathy—answerable to every occasion; a perpetual sympathy—as long as He continues High Priest, and we remain subject to infirmities, so long will He be touched with the feeling of them.—Canon Bardsley.

Speak.

What about? Salvation through Jesus Christ, and the necessity for a personal interest in it. To whom? Your relatives, your friends, your neighbors, and any one else with whom you have intercourse, if a favorable opportunity presents itself, or if you can bring about that opportunity. But why urge the matter in this way? Because it is a duty which is so much neglected, sometimes on one plea, and at others on another. A number of persons, some of them the children of Christian parents, have said to me: "No one ever spoke to me personally on the subject of religion until you did so."

Some persons think the life is the main thing, and, if they live a Christian life, that is all they need do. A consistent Christian life is very important, but, in addition to this, we need to let our friends know by speaking to them that we are interested in their spiritual welfare. But it is said that it is so great a cross to speak to another, especially a relative or friend, on the subject of personal religion. But that ought not to be a consideration. We have only to ascertain what it is right for us to do, and then, if need be, take up the cross, and do what is right. Some persons are afraid they will be thought intrusive if they speak personally on the subject of religion, and will meet with a rebuff. Now it is of great importance that we use prudence in this, as well as in other matters, and perhaps it is not often prudent to speak personally in the presence of a third person. But we must not be so careful as to do nothing. We must look for the opportunity, use the opportunity, and leave the result with God. Many persons think that with certain other persons it is of no use to attempt to say anything, as they are so depraved, so hardened, or so indisposed to listen to religious matters, that we could not expect to accomplish anything. But we have no right to come to any such conclusion without at least making a trial. We do not know the real condition of any heart, and to act on this conclusion is to limit the grace of God. I could give numerous instances of persons who might have been passed by on such an assumption, whom the kind, faithful and persevering words of a Christian friend have led to salvation. Still others abstain from speaking because they fear that the inconsistency of their lives will mar the effect of their words. If by this you mean that you are not perfect, it ought not to hinder you from attending to this duty, as by the same rule no one would speak, as none are perfect. But if you are conscious of living inconsistent lives, there is much, very much, in the objection. But in this case there is work for you to do at home, and that immediately. If you profess to be a Christian, and are conscious that you are not living in accordance with that profession, you have reason to doubt whether you are a Christian, and should immediately humble yourself before God, and seek pardon for the past and grace for the future, and thus remove this difficulty out of your way.

While Christians allow so many things to hinder them from speaking to others, it is often the case that persons are wishing to be spoken to on the subject of their religious interests. A Wesleyan Methodist minister in London recently gave the following account of an incident which illustrates this. He said: "One winter's day I had gone out to take an appointment, seven or eight miles from my home. There was in that village a very interesting family who attended the village chapel, but lived at a considerable distance from it, and in the family there were some very interesting young people. I was anxious to get a word with them, but I make it a rule, if possible, not to speak to people about their souls for the first time unless I get them alone, and I have made it a rule not to let anybody go out of my presence if I can help it without saying a word to them if I can get them alone. Many is the prayer that I have put up for opportunities of that sort, and God has answered my prayers. On this winter day, this family was at the chapel as usual. A snow-storm came on, however, during the service, and one or two of the young people of the family came after the service to stay to tea in the house where I had put up my horse, and where I was going to take tea before going to another place. I went into the drawing-room, and there was a young woman, a member of the family I have referred to. The opportunity had come; I had prayed that God would give me a chance of speaking to her personally about her soul. I just said one sentence, when somebody came in, and I could say no more. During the week I received a letter from her to say that she had been praying to God that He would move me to speak to her. Nobody had ever spoken to her personally and individually about her soul, and she was praying that God would move me to do it. I may say that as the result of that sentence then spoken, she gave her heart thoroughly and unreservedly to the Lord Jesus Christ." Therefore, I say, speak when the opportunity occurs, and try to find the opportunity.—W. H., in the Watchman.

The Telephone at a Death Bed.

When Rev. Dr. E. G. Brooks, a late distinguished clergyman of Philadelphia, was lying near death, his doctor, J. W. White, obtained a telephone to divert him in his constant agony. On taking the telephone to his house Dr. Brooks was found so weak and so distressed in his breathing that the physician was reluctant to try it; but the sick man insisted on the attempt. The wires were arranged between the sick man and the dining room down stairs. Dr. White proceeds: "When all was arranged, however, to the best of my ability, I placed one of the mouthpieces in his hand, and told him I would go down and test it, and if the necessary conditions had been met he could hear my voice; but that he would have to ask some one else to reply, as he was too weak to attempt it. Taking the mouth-piece at the other end of the line, I repeated: 'The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of the isles be glad thereof.'

"To my utter astonishment, instantly came the response: 'Clouds and darkness are round about him, righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne.'

"It was the voice of Dr. Brooks, the tones clear and distinct, the intonation and emphasis perfect. I was amazed. But a moment before I had left him apparently too weak and too much oppressed to speak above a whisper. I was fairly startled. I could not be mistaken; but I could hardly believe the testimony of my ear. I repeated: 'O come let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our Maker.'

"Once more, and as promptly as in a church service, the doctor's voice responded: 'For he is our God, and we are the people of his pasture and the sheep of his hand.'

"I then repeated a verse from that grand old hymn of Pierpont:

> No sickness, no sorrow, no pain shall be there,
> The days of mourning are ended;
> No where at sin try again thy soul,
> Sanctified by the patient and tried.

And, just as though it had been arranged beforehand, as promptly as though a set form were being followed, the voice from that bed of sickness took up the strain:

> From every plumb below to the crest,
> The valley and the forest,
> The incense of the heart may rise,
> To all around the skies.

"I next quoted the first verse of the familiar hymn:

> Sing for a faith that can not fail,
> Though pressed by every foe,
> That will not tremble on the brink
> Of an earthly woe.

And the doctor responded, quoting the last verse of the same hymn:

> Lord give us such a faith as this!
> And then, whatever may occur
> We'll taste on here the fulness
> Of an eternal bliss.

"I was anxious that the doctor's strength, which was but weakness, should not be too far taxed, and suggested that he had better allow some one else to speak for him. But he responded: 'One thing more,' and then, in slow, measured, distinct utterance (the tone of triumph unmistakable), he repeated the jubilant testimony of Paul: 'The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But, thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.'

"A strange and solemn sensation stole over me. A few minutes before I had left Dr. Brooks 'sick unto death,' so weak, so oppressed, so distressed! laboring for breath; talking in disjointed utterances; but recently roused, as I had been told, from a sinking spell, which it was feared would have been his last. And now, in tones as clear, as distinct, as well enunciated as I ever heard from him in the pulpit when in health, and yet minimized by that strange, weird, thrilling, telephonic modification—preserving all that is characteristic in the speech of an individual, and at the same time giving the impression of almost infinite distance—came the triumphant exclamation: 'Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.'

"I could but fancy that, during my absence from his bedside, the silver cord has been loosed, the golden bowl broken, and that the exultant 'Thanks be to God,' was the outburst of the freed spirit. And when I returned to his room, and found him still in the flesh, I felt like one who unexpectedly meets him whom he had thought dead."

It is told of Spurgeon that it is his habit to shut himself up on Saturday and that one Saturday a man called and insisted on seeing him. "Tell him," said the visitor to his servant, "that a servant of the Lord wishes to see him." The message was delivered, and the following answer returned: "Tell him that I am engaged with his Master."

A Scotch minister, meeting one of his parishioners, asked him how he was pleased with the sermon that he had preached the previous day. On receiving a reply in the affirmative he inquired if she understood it. "Eh! mon," exclaimed the lady, "would I have the presumption—"

A gentleman had a letter [illegible] "I will give [illegible] any one who [illegible] and when an apology [illegible] asked, "Are you [illegible] general answer was [illegible] the reply invariably [illegible] "I shall be satisfied, and [illegible]

CATARRH

Thousands suffer with catarrh in the [illegible] most complaint. It is an accumulation of the [illegible] frequent soreness of the throat, dryness or [illegible] down the throat, ringing or deafness in the ears, dimness of sight, memory impaired, dullness and dizziness of the head, or, when the disease is fully developed, symptoms unmistakable. In its advanced stages, attended with pains in the back or side, and often the chest be ill-at-ease. Indigestion usually attends Catarrh; nothing tempts the appetite; some have all these symptoms; others only a part. Very frequently the throat, nasal passages, and lungs are attacked in consequence of the scabs or crusts coming from the head into the stomach.

All persons thus afflicted take cold easily, and are [illegible] at the nostrils; the breath sometimes reveals to all around the corruption within. The patient has frequently lost all sense of smell. The disease, if not arrested, [illegible] with pain in the chest, lungs or bowels; startles often; he hacks and coughs, has frequent [illegible] with pain in the chest, urged by his doctor to take this or that, perhaps cod-liver oil is prescribed. Perfectly ridiculous! The foul matter [illegible] be reached by [illegible] and into the poor jaded stomach. The patient becomes nervous, the voice is [illegible] hysterical; he feels disheartened; memory loses her power, judgment [illegible] to do anything from [illegible] hang overhead; unfitness [illegible] to be would be a relief, and many even do put the threat [illegible] their sufferings.

THOUSANDS ARE DYING

CONCLUSION.

Farm, Garden and Household.

The value of the land and cows in the United States employed in furnishing milk, butter, and cheese is not less than $1,300,000,000, or the sum of nearly half the national debt at its highest point.

The production of cheese is estimated at 350,000,000 pounds per annum, and of butter about 1,500,000,000. Of the former 150,000,000 pounds will be exported this year and about 25,000,000 of the latter. The value of the two is about $350,000,000, or $50,000,000 more than the wheat crop of this country, three times more than the oat crop, four times more than the potato crop, one-seventh more than the hay crop, one-third more than the cotton crop, and but one-fifth less than the corn crop. The number of cows in the United States is over 13,000,000, which is six times the number in Great Britain, over twice the number in France, two and a half times more than in Prussia, and more than in the countries of England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Russia, Finland, Austria, Hungary, and Switzerland combined; although these countries together contain four times the population of the United States. The proportion of cows to the inhabitants here is twenty-nine to each one hundred persons.

The production of cheese and butter have increased thirty-four per cent. this year, and the exports have been in like proportion. The cheese and butter exported this year have paid freight to the amount of over $1,000,000 to the ocean commerce of this port, or a sum almost sufficient to support a line of weekly steamers. These articles pay to the railroad companies over $5,000,000 annually for transportation, and the articles of milk pays nearly as much more. Loaded on railway cars, ten tons to each car, the butter and cheese produced in the United States in one year would fill 22,000 cars and make a compact line 135 miles long.

MUCK ON SANDY SOILS.—In some portions of the Southern States, where they are slow in adopting new methods of culture or hints leading to experiments, they are beginning to find out that muck hauled upon sand soils tends to increase their productiveness. This is no new thing. We recommended it, as did correspondents, five-and-twenty years ago, and pointed out instances that had been attended with marked success. Even pure clay hauled upon light sandy soils and intermingled, has been followed by excellent results, the land increasing its crop fully fifty per cent. Where clay or muck is as convenient of transportation as manure, there is no question but its application as here suggested would prove of the most decided advantage. Even in gardens, where the soil has become exhausted by long-continued cultivation, a dressing of clay is far better than a coat of the best manure.

My soil is gravelly sand. Have usually raised from about eight to fourteen acres of potatoes annually. In dry seasons, or on poorish soil, the large tubers have done the best; but I am well satisfied that the idea that some have that potatoes will "run out," by planting small tubers, is a perfect fallacy. My smallest have held their own and come out just as favorably as any. But for the last several years, I have not been able to get what could be called more than a decent-sized potato from any of them.—Western Rural.

DROP COOKIES.—Four and one-half cups of flour, two and one-half of sugar, one of milk, one of shortening half butter and lard, three eggs, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, a very little nutmeg, and a few caraway seeds. Rub the sugar and shortening to a cream, beat the egg till very light, and stir thoroughly after adding the other ingredients. Drop on buttered tins, and bake quickly.

None but a lazy teamster will allow the harness or yoke to remain on teams while they eat their noon-day meal. Teams will perform more labor on the same feed if given time by grease then water every two or three hours. The water should stand in the stable, if practicable. It should not be given on any account.

Gas tar is a good preservative for preserving posts, and where obtaining a large quantity of lime would not be necessary, it might be applied hot to warm, dry wood, without injury. In this way we have found it to increase the durability when the wood is set in the ground, or in contact with it.

SWEET POTATO PIE.—Slice sweet potato and then apple, spread thickly with butter, and grated nutmeg, with a crust, and bake.

THE NEW YORK SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: To present all the news in a readable shape, and to tell the truth though the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the Truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper of the people. It is not the organ of any person, class, sect, or party. There need be no mystery about its loves and hates. It is for the honest man against the rogues every time. It is for the honest Democrat as against the dishonest Republican, and for the honest Republican as against the dishonest Democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterances of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly when men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this republic was founded for the people. Whenever the Constitution and constitutional principles are violated as in the outrage the conspiracy of 1876 by which a man not elected was placed in the President's chair, where he still remains, it speaks out for the right. That is the SUN'S idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in the year opening the year 1879.

THE SUN has fairly earned the hearty hatred of frauds, frauds and shams of all sorts and sizes. It does its best to deserve that hatred, and does it with a will. Its war upon the conspiracy of 1876 by which a man not elected was placed in the Presidential chair, where he still remains, it speaks out for the right. That is the SUN'S idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in the year opening the year 1879.

In this respect there will be no change in the year opening the year 1879.

THE SUN is printed for the men of to-day, whose common sense chafes with the fictions of to-day. It has faith in the virtues of to-day. It has faith in the discussion and the ability to solve its problems. The prompt, fullest and most accurate intelligence of whatever is the newsworthy event of the day. To this end the editorial force of the establishment is constantly recruited to its well known intelligence, for probably will be found in no other newspaper office in the world so much practical good sense as in the SUN office. Its editorial staff is not a body of mere theorists, but is composed of men who have had practical experience in the affairs of life, and who know how to tell what they have seen and heard.

We have no room to say more about the SUN, as a general newspaper. Its character is well known, and we must leave them to speak for themselves. The DAILY SUN is sold at 2 cents per copy. Price by mail, postage paid, 55 cents a month, or $6 50 a year. Including the Sunday paper, the price by mail is 65 cents a month or $7 70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is a large paper of 48 columns. Price by mail, postage paid, 70 cents a year. Address I. W. ENGLAND, Publisher of THE SUN, New York City.

SCIENTIFIC.

—AN American correspondent of Nature notes the varying experiences of observers in different countries in the relations between plants and insects. In England the clover does not produce seeds unless cross-fertilized by humble bees; but in America, where clover has been protected from these bees, the clover seeds as well as when exposed. The same writer shows that bees do not habitually visit the same flowers as they bloom; but make a selection from time to time of such as best suit their immediate wants, keeping to that mainly during that day or period when the favorite is abundant. In this way some that in some seasons may be freely visited may be neglected another, when a more favored flower is abundant An illustration is given in the case of the common chickweed. In most seasons this is not abundantly in bloom until there are other flowers—say willows or other early things; but the past winter was rather open—enough to bring forward chickweed much in advance of other things It was abundantly in bloom early in March. In other seasons, when the Draba verna was to be had in abundance, the early bee was glad to get to these flowers; but this season it neglected the Draba when it could get chickweed from which to gather pollen. Other illustrations are given, showing that bees make selections of flowers according to their necessities, and that this choice is not the result of color, fragrance, or any element which one may suppose to act on instinct; but is an actual deduction from reasoning powers, which finds out by experience which is the best to be done and then profits by that experience.—Independent.

TIN MINES.—The Mines of Cornwall, for a long time thought to be the only tin mines in the world, are finding serious rivals in the tin deposits of Tasmania. Four years ago the value of the exports of tin ore from this island was $35 000, while last year it amounted to nearly $1,500,000. One of the most productive regions is the Mount Bischoff district; but this has now been eclipsed by the discovery of a tin mountain at Mount Heemskirk, on the west coast. The "wash-dirt" is some twenty feet thick, and produces about 25 per cent of tin; but the existence of solid seams of the metal, traversing the mountains in veins several feet in depth and width, has been demonstrated. Some "nuggets," weighing several hundred weight each, have been found, yielding nearly cent per cent of pure metal. Mixed with the tin, too, is a small quantity of gold, about ten ounces to the ton, not sufficient in itself to render it worth seeking, but adding considerably to the tin miner's profits.—American Architect.

Celebrated American
WORM SPECIFIC OR VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,
DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE
will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. Dose, as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility, are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas five grains first precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitation; in fact perfectly dissolved.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

VOLUNTARY TESTIMONY.
Extract from the Baltimore "American," December 21, 1878.
"The Pulvermacher Electric Belt is recommended for general use for the following reasons: First, for its wonderful properties for the cure of diseases of the kidneys, stomach, liver and bowels generally, for, its extreme simplicity, and the fact of its being applied outside, precludes all possibility of any injury being done to the patient, as an external remedy is universally acknowledged to be safe. Another advantage is the facility with which the progress of the disease and cure can be watched, and if the Belt be not quite in the right place, it can be very easily readjusted so as to cover the parts affected. The Pulvermacher Electric Belt, and its perfection, has been hailed with delight, not only by the sufferers who have regained health, enjoyment, and a new lease of life through its beneficent qualities, but by the medical profession, who very frequently prescribe its use to their patients."

PULVERMACHER'S
are endorsed and approved by the most eminent medical and scientific authorities in the world, by the Faculties of France, England, Austria, Prussia, Belgium, and America, and by well-known writers, who refer to the extraordinary cures effected by Pulvermacher's Electric Belts and Bands, in upwards of one hundred medical and philosophical works.

Futile Gambetta.

The two freest of the great nations of Europe and Britain and France, and singularly enough, the presiding spirit in each is a Jew. Disraeli and Gambetta control in a great measure not only the destinies of western Europe, but of the Turkish empire. France has always taken a deep interest in Syria, and, maintained a protective attitude toward the Holy Places and Mount Lebanon, and she also has a deep interest in Egypt and the Suez Canal. It is something singular that the two wealthiest nations of Europe should both be virtually governed by Jews, and both take a special interest in Palestine and other Bible lands.

The advent to great power of these two members of a hitherto persecuted and despised race reminds the world of Joseph, Daniel and Mordecai, each of whom ruled the most powerful empire of his time. But the parallel between these ancient and modern Hebrew statesmen ends with their ability and eminence. The old Hebrews were men of faith and prayer, worshiping the true God in the way of his own appointment. Concerning the faith and prayer of the modern Hebrew statesmen we are not informed. Disraeli professes, we believe, to be a Christian. Gambetta, we presume, continues to be an Hebrew Jew. Whatever their profession, they must look with profound contempt on the mummeries and pilgrimages of Roman Catholics, and the imitation ritual in use in a portion of the Church of England. They must also uphold equal rights, religious liberty and popular institutions. As Queen Esther and her uncle Mordecai came to power at a particular time to save the Jews in Persia from annihilation, so these two eminent modern statesmen may have come to power at this time for some great purpose. Such, for instance, as the restoration of the kingdom of David and Solomon to its ancient greatness, and the gathering together from all lands of the Jews willing to return to it. Such a union, even if it did not become Christian, which we are led by Scripture to expect, would be an immense improvement on the Mohammedan tribes of Arabs, Turcomans, Druzes, and others now occupying that important region. It would also probably effectually bar Russia's further advance in that direction. And its power would doubtless extend rapidly, for as an eminent Jew recently said: "We would know how to manage those tribes."

All this appears visionary at present, but stranger things have happened, and there appears to be a remarkable preparation going on in various ways, probably unconsciously to the actors, for the fulfillment of important prophecies. Nothing more extraordinary can take place than an adventurer like Disraeli governing by their own choice all the old ground of Judea and the Bishops of England.

Rough work the polished. Look at the pebbles on the shore! Far inland, where some arm of the sea thrusts itself deep in the bosom of the land, and her girdled by the mountains, sheltered from storms, the pebbles on the beach are rough and beautiful. It is where long white lines of breakers roar, and the rattling shingle is rolled along the strand, that the pebbles are rounded and polished. As in nature, so in art or in grace. The more the diamond is cut the brighter it sparkles; and in what seems hard dealing, their God has no end in view but to perfect his people.—Dr. Guthrie.

While in the act of ascending the pulpit recently, a Milwaukee clergyman was stung between the eyes by a bumble-bee. His eyes became so much swollen that he couldn't see his notes, and the result was he preached the most eloquent sermon of his life.—Courier-Journal.

BENSON'S CAPCINE

POROUS PLASTER.

This article is one which really possesses extraordinary merit. By combining reliable physicians in your own locality you will find that the above is true. It is far superior to the ordinary porous plaster all the so-called electrical appliances, and to all external remedies whatever, and contains entirely new elements which cause an instant pain at once, straighten and cure where other plasters will not even relieve. For lameness and weakness of the back, diseased Kidneys, Lung and Chest difficulties, Rheumatism, Neglected Colds, Female affections, and all local aches and pains it is simply the best remedy ever devised. Sold by all druggists.

Price 25 cents.

Snake Poison at Second Hand.

A Mr. Bray, who lives at Six-Mile Canon, left a cane at the town of Sutro, and asked a friend, who was going to Sutro, to get the cane. The friend started home with the cane, but on the way came upon a rattlesnake. He struck the snake with the cane, and broke the cane in two. He then began punching the snake's head to pieces with the splintered end of the cane, and finally killed it. When he got home he told Mr. Bray about breaking the cane. Bray said he was glad the pieces were brought to him, as he could put them together. He took the two pieces and fitted them in place, and then sat down to his dinner. He had a small sore on his hand, and soon began to complain of a terrible jumping pain therein. In a few minutes it became evident that he had gotten some of the poison of the snake into the sore by handling the cane. He was put through a regular course of treatment for snake bite, and in about three days came out all right. The poison affected him as though the snake had bitten his hand.—Virginia City (Nev.) Enterprise.

Every man is more able to explain the subject of an art than its professors; a farmer will tell you in two words that he has broken his leg, but a surgeon, after a long discourse, will leave you as ignorant as you were before.

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS

THEY ARE WORTH THEIR

WEIGHT IN GOLD

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Less Spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I gave (until forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

REV. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Acne and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and with certainty will relieve that important organ from disease, and restore it to normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh will render the use for some of these Pills of especial benefit to those who are troubled with dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and impaired health and strength in the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice. But if it has become habitual, one Pill should be taken every night for many successive nights, to produce the desired effect. When a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow

THE MASTER'S TOUCH.

In the still air the music lies unheard;
In the rough marble beauty hides unseen
To make the music and the beauty needs
The Master's touch, the sculptor's chisel keen.
Great Master, touch us with Thy skillful hand:
Let not the music that is in us die!
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us; nor let,
Hidden and lost, Thy form within us lie!
Spare not the stroke! do with us as Thou will't!
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred!
Complete Thy purpose, that we may become Thy perfect image, Thou our God and Lord!

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—Scout Girard, in the Reno inquiry, gave a long account of the movements of the troops on the day of the Custer massacre and the situation of the battlefield, and mentioned various orders given. He believed the fighting force of the Indians was 2,500 to 3,000.

Heard several volleys, from fifty to one hundred shots each, on the other side of the village, about the time the order was given, "every man to his horse." Reno's force, at that word, left the wood where they were stationed, and in ten or fifteen minutes saw Custer's command, or what he believed to be that command. He thought a force of one hundred and fifty men ought to have held the Indians in check for some time.

FORT ROBINSON, Jan. 18.—A courier has arrived and reports the savages assumed the most inaccessible position of any from which recently they held the troops at bay. Five soldiers, in trying to ascertain the Indian's position, got within short range of the Indians, and one soldier was killed. Capt. Wessels, believing the Indians could not be dislodged without great loss, sent to the Red Cloud Agency for a dozen Sioux scouts.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Jan. 19.—The break in the direct cable which occurred on the fourth instant has been located in water from twenty to twenty-five fathoms deep about six miles from Tor Bay. Arrangements are progressing to repair the break.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 19.—A dispatch to the Journal states that the whole business portion of Allenville, Ky burned yesterday.

RALEIGH, N. C., Jan. 21. The legislature elected Z. B. Vance United States senator for six years from March 4. He received one hundred and ten votes. Judge R. P. Buxton, Republican, received fifty-one votes.

JACKSONVILLE, Jan. 21.—At Tallahasse to-day the legislature elected Wilkinson Call United States senator to succeed Conover.

BOSTON, Jan. 21.—George Stillman Hillard, lawyer and author, is dead.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, Jan. 15.—The commercial excursion party from the United States arrived at Vera Cruz on the 12th, and were cordially received by a committee of merchants of Vera Cruz and the City of Mexico. They arrived at the capital on the night of the 14th. The government prepared liberal entertainments for the party. The press commented on this peaceful invasion of Mexico with the utmost satisfaction.

Senor Avilas has finally left the department of foreign affairs. His successor is not yet known.

An agent of the Portuguese government is expected here soon to reestablish diplomatic relations between Mexico and Portugal.

The State authorities have closed a Catholic convent and monastery, which had been surreptitiously established at Queretaro.

A rich gold mine, apparently worked in past ages, has been discovered in Mount Lazarus, in the State of Vera Cruz.

The next coffee crop of Cordova is estimated at three million pounds.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—The Times' Berlin correspondent is assured that Russia is strenuously endeavoring to obtain a prolongation of the occupation of Turkey beyond May the third. Austria is favorable, but it is improbable that the other powers will consent.

A Berlin dispatch to the Times says: It is rumored Prince Bismarck is preparing a bill authorizing the opening of letters at the frontier.

Thomas W. Rooker & Co., Glamorganshire, iron masters, failed. They owe the Bristol and West of England Bank £600,000.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—Renter's dispatch from Rome states that in addition to the proposed apointment of several vicars apostolic in parts of America destitute of episcopal churches, the Vatican intends to establish several new bishoprics in the United States, and institute a new hierarchy different from the present one. The Pope has sent a circular to bishops outside of Europe, with a view of extending the collection of Peter's pence in all countries of the world.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—The North Wales Miners Association has resolved to vote £7 to every member of the union who desires to emigrate to America, and £14 to emigrants to America.

Notices were posted on Saturday by iron ship building yard and foundries in Liverpool and the district around, of a reduction of wages of seven and one-half per cent. after the 31st of January. It is thought the men will strike.

At a meeting of the Great Northern Railway employees, held in London to-day, the men pledged themselves to oppose any reduction of wages. The decision of the directors of the board will be announced Tuesday.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The Standard's correspondent at Rome says the Jesuits have sent the Pope a kind of ultimatum, reciting the evils resulting from their exclusion from the government of the church. The Pope continues firm, and many of his friends fear the consequences.

BERLIN, Jan, 21.—Bismarck has sent the Privy Council for Finkelnburg to Vienna, to arrange with Austria sanitary authorities common measures against the spread of the plague westward.

Louisiana Legislature.

The bill repealing the act chartering the Lottery Company finally passed the House yesterday, to make its next appearance in the Senate. The vote stood sixty-three yeas to twenty nays, thus showing the absence of fourteen members, most of whom, however, were engaged in committee work. Quite a large number of bills were introduced, indicating no attention of early adjournment. In fact, the number now in the hands of the committees is as large as is ordinarily seen during any regular session, and if all are to be acted upon it will take no inconsiderable time.

Among the many bills introduced yesterday was one which evidently emanated from a man deeply imbued with the principles of temperance. His bill prohibits the sale of all intoxicating liquors, except by druggists, in quantities of less than one gallon each time.

The committee appointed to investigate the accounts of the State Printer for 1878 met yesterday and examined the experts, Col. Gerard Stith and Mr. John S. Walker, of the Picayune. Their evidence was substantially the same as that given by them to the Attorney General, when the Grand Jury report was on the tapis, and referred to the technicalities of printing.

Mr. H. W. Green was again put on the stand, and was asked by Mr. Dupre as to who instigated him in preferring charges against the State Printer before the Grand Jury. Mr. Green refused to answer, and, being told by the chairman to answer, he again refused. It was then resolved that the committee should report Mr. Green in contempt, on Monday, and have him brought before the bar of the House.—New Orleans Picayune, January 19.

Memphis Conference.

The Memphis Conference held its session, December 4-9, at Jackson, Tenn.—the yellow fever having made it expedient to change the place of meeting from Paris to Jackson. Bishop Paine presided, though he did not preach on Sunday—Dr. A. W. Wilson, secretary of the Board of Missions, filled the pulpit, and the secretary of the Conference, R. H. Mahon, says "he did it well." We doubt it not. The secretary has furnished the book editor with the minutes, save the memoirs of seven ministers deceased, and the numbers in detail, which will come in due time. Admitted on trial, 11; J. M Major into full connection, and ordained deacon; E. T. Hart received by transfer. Local preachers elected deacons, 6; ordained, 8; elders elected, 1; ordained, 2; traveling preachers elected and ordained elders, 5; superannuated, 6; white members, 29 511; colored, 14; Indians, 2; local preachers, 271. Contributed for foreign missions, $3,403 70; for domestic, $987 15; total, $4,390 85. Next session at Mayfield, Ky. Vote on ratio: yeas, 93; no nays.

Woman's Missionary Society.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: It has been made my duty to request a place in your paper, that the attention of your readers may be called to the organization of the Alabama Conference Woman's Missionary Association at Mobile during its session in December, 1878. It is an executive association, and has for its object and work the organization of auxiliary societies in the Alabama Conference, upon the plan and idea projected at the General Conference in May last.

The names of the officers of the Association are as follows: President, Mrs. Jefferson Hamilton, Mobile; Vice Presidents: Mrs. Mary Hart, Mobile; Miss Sallie Byrd, Selma; Mrs. M. Haltyclaw, Montgomery; Mrs. M. M. Young, Eufaula; Treasurer, Miss Jennie Dorman, Mobile; Recording Secretary, Mrs. T. Toma, Montgomery; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. E. F. Chilton, Opelika.

This organization is a nexus between the General Executive Association at Nashville, Tenn., and auxiliary societies in the Conference. It will hold its meetings annually, elect officers, and make its report to the General Executive Association at Nashville. Its only object is to arouse and interest our sisters in the Methodist Church in behalf of woman in heathen lands, "Woman working for woman." We cannot now present to our sisters all that is meant or involved in this noble enterprise, but hope so to impress them by this simple announcement that they will be ready to co-operate with us at once by forming societies, and doing all in their power for its promotion. We expect, also, and earnestly desire the hearty co-operation of the press—the religious press I mean, of course. Without it we cannot do our work well, nor at all. We can send papers of organization to all auxiliary societies, and aid them in getting to work; but they need more than this.

It is a lamentable fact that our people are not in Christian sympathy with missionary work, and no effort will succeed, or last for any length of time, until their attention is called to this branch or root of Christianity more particularly than ever before.

They need knowledge first of missions; where located; then of missionaries; who they are; then of results.

The Adversary has his sentinels standing at the door of every Christian's heart, with his watchword on his tongue: "Charity begins at Home." And it is only the voice of the press that can put him to flight.

Let it send out books, papers and tracts that the people may read, and "who so readeth let him run."

The fruit of this labor will be a revival of true religion in our own midst. The best way to bring a church up to its full height of Christianity now is to go to work in China. Please excuse the length of this notice.

Respectfully and truly,

MRS. E. F. CHILTON,
Corresponding Secretary.

OPELIKA, Jan. 20, 1879.

Work and Pay.

MR. EDITOR: In human industries the sure prospect of liberal pay is a strong incentive to earnest and faithful work.

In the commercial world pay is regulated by supply and demand. If the supply be abundant, and demand small, the price is low; but if the demand be great, and the supply small, the price is high.

These rules and regulations, however, do not hold good in all the domains of human effort. Often the amount of pay is not in proportion to the service rendered. Frequently the amount of pay is in proportion to the skill of the contractor or collector. One man works hard all his days, and has but little, in the way of material compensation, while another plays half his time, and amasses a vast fortune. It is said of a lawyer that he charged a client $25 for legal advice covering one-fourth page of foolscap. Said the astonished client: "Twenty-five dollars for this small bit of advice?" "No," replied the lawyer, "not for that small bit of advice, but for all these books (pointing to his library) through which I have read, to give you this small bit of correct advice." In this instance skill was successful.

When we turn our attention to ecclesiastical affairs we see that the commercial law of demand and supply does not always regulate pay, nor even the just law of quid pro quo. In this department of labor the amount of material remuneration does not always indicate the value of labor expended, much less the quantity. If material compensation constitutes the standard by which to judge the workmen, then St. Paul, John Wesley and Bishop McKendree were poor laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. In hundreds and thousands of instances the pay in dollars and cents is no index to the value of the work performed. This proposition may be illustrated by the following unwritten "scrap of history:" During the year 187— a certain presiding elder in the Alabama Conference filled all his appointments on the —— charge, and did a good deal of work besides in protracted meetings, and for all these services received, in the way of material compensation, the sum of $65. The year following the same presiding elder on the same pastoral charge attended three Quarterly Conferences, spent six days and seven nights officially, and preached only eight sermons, and for these services received $108 70—$43 70 over and above the former year, and a little over half the amount of work performed.

From the above instance (out of many that could be given) it is shown that pay in dollars and cents cannot be looked to as a satisfactory standard by which to value the work of the preacher.

VILLULA, Ala., Jan. 16, 1879.

Acknowledgement.

MR. EDITOR.—Dear Sir:—I should like, through your columns, to acknowledge the receipt of a box from Natchitoches, containing clothing of all description, besides many remnants of cottonade, domestic, shoes, stockings, &c., &c. This most timely and generous donation was made by a society, formed some three or four years ago; first, (if I mistake not) by collecting a few persons for Sunday-school and singing, which, growing in numbers and interest, has, by the blessing of God, been the means of doing much good. They have, within that short period, furnished the house in which they meet to worship with chandelier, lamps, and pulpit furniture, a neat silver communion service and baptismal bowl, and one hundred and twenty-five dollars towards the maintenance of the Church. They have now assumed the rent of the parsonage and a portion of the Church expenses, while attending to several charitable claims outside the Church. They are now provided with a resident pastor (Rev. Dr. Hough), who is most acceptable to the people, and doing much good in their midst.

Some few weeks since this goodly band met together and prepared this box of well made clothing for some of the needy of our city. When it arrived, on consultation with the pastor of the St. Charles Avenue Church and some of its leading members; the contents were distributed among forty-five or fifty persons, and could the donors have seen and heard the gratitude expressed by word and look, I am sure they would have been compensated for their labor of love. In giving publicity to the efficiency of this "Church Aid Society," and this last generous deed, you may incite others to "Go and do likewise."

Surface Work.

The Christian Neighbor would guard against this in religion, and says:

Preachers and other teachers in religion and morals should strive against what is too plainly a tendency of the times—superficiality or surface work. So fast is the age in other things—nearly every thing—it were a marvel if religious knowledge and experience did not catch the disease of a progress that is but another name for dilution or superficiality. To spread out and make a show seems, with many people, to be more an object than to have the faith and experience of catechumens and disciples rooted and grounded in the love of God. To do the work of the Lord thus "deceitfully," is very much like some ploughmen who will "scratch over" four acres of ground whereas the labor thus spread out would not more than plough one acre as it should be done. Such people will talk and boast of how many acres they have ploughed in a day, but the ground, the "fallow ground" is not broken up. And the evil of such "slighty" work will be manifest in dry weather—when the sun shines with a burning heat. A good ploughman will, in case his plow should accidentally "skim" over a few feet of ground, command his horse to "whoa," and draw back his plow and send it in, and, if any odds, break those few feet of earth a little deeper than behind him. People should plough deep and close in religious matters, as well as in the stubble-field.

The Review.

The General Conference appointed a committee to have in charge all matters pertaining to a "Review," and to do, or authorize to be done, whatever might be deemed best touching that matter. At a meeting held at Atlanta at the close of the Conference, the undersigned was appointed chairman of the committee charged with all correspondence and management of the "Review," except the editorial department. The Rev. J. W. Hinton, D. D., of Columbus, Ga., was elected editor, and the Rev. R. A. Young, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn., Secretary and Treasurer. Immediate steps were taken to ascertain what could be done; various propositions were carefully considered, differences of opinion adjusted, and difficulties uninteresting to the public overcome. But the way is now open, and the prospect is flattering. The "Review" will be published by our Publishing House at Nashville; the first number will be issued in January, and promptly every three months thereafter.

Terms $3 per annum in advance. All subscriptions to be sent to the Rev. R. A. Young, D. D., Nashville, Tenn. All communications in reference to the editorial department must be addressed to the Rev. J. W. Hinton, D. D., Columbus, Ga.

We intend to make the "Review" worthy the great ecclesiastical body it represents, an able exponent of advancing thought and culture, a vindicator of truth both old and new, and a fearless defender of the "faith which was once delivered to the saints."

We make an earnest appeal to the bishops, presiding elders, and preachers generally, to present the claims of the "Review" on all appropriate occasions, and in every proper way to aid the committee in placing this important work on a safe basis.

Feudal Civilization.

Dr. Fowler, editor of the great official organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, "The New York Advocate," has been making, says the Southern Methodist, some invidious comparisons between the Northern and Southern civilizations. If he will consult Dr. Talmage, he will ascertain that the very city in which he lives is the pestilential pool in which is generated much of the mephitic gas that is tainting the tissues and fouling the blood of America. Let him read up the history of the Tweed ring if he would learn of the greatest political robbery of the age. Let him reflect upon the daylight robbery of the jewelry store by Broadway banditti. Let him snuff the feculent odors of the Stewart tomb-rifling. Let him peruse the Police Gazette and the Tabernacle sermons. Let him sift through the sieve of his mind the meal of the Beecher calumny, and see if he hasn't left much bran. Let him climb the rickety stairs of the "tenement houses," beneath whose smoked rafters and dripping roofs the sewing girls make a shroud for themselves while making shirts for gentlemen and trousseaux for brides. Let him visit the schools and see how sparsely they are attended, as compared with the truant mob of bootblacks, newsboys, and gamin of the streets and slums. Let him "walk down Broadway" after the gas is lighted, and behold the Cyprians who flaunt their seductive scarlet in the faces of strangers and under the very noses of the "men on beat." We undertake to say, the whole South, including the negroes, does not aggregate as much crime as New York city and Brooklyn. A row in a rural district, a riot in a county town, a murder in a Western county, are very objective, every one knows of it. Such a feud as exists in Breathitt county is a matter with which every one becomes acquainted. But in New York garrets and cellars lanes and thoroughfares, crimes are stealthily committed, nightly, of which the world never hears. How many victims of assassination have been plunged from the wharves and anchored to the bottom of East River? Where in the South have ever been found such demons as Dr. Webster, the murderer of Dr. Parkman; Fischer, the sextou, who slew the girl visitors to the tower of his church, and the boy butcher who gloated over the gore of his slaughtered? In what atmosphere was Free-love, Spiritualism, Free Religion, and the like social abominations born, and in what air do they breathe? When did the South ever produce such a social Amazon as Mrs. Woodhull? Who prints the corrupting books, with the lewd cuts, and the transparent cards, and where do they find a profit-paying market? When did a Southern community ever send a professional prize-fighter to the National Congress? What fertile fancy suggested the "Black Crook," "The White Fawn," and similar spectacular dramas? Who bequeathed us this legacy? What Southern city can duplicate the Five Points? What civilization is it that crowds Blackwell's Island and Sing-Sing with youthful and ageful criminals? What Southern family would ever have sought for money to rifle its ancestral line of all honor and honesty, as the Vanderbilt heirs are seeking to do? And what, pray, was at the root of Stokes' murder of Jim Fisk? What, too, of the Bennett-May duel?

But the catechism is too long for our column. "Physician, heal Thyself." Will the gifted editor of the New York Advocate preach from this text?

It is with flowers as with moral qualities—the bright are sometimes poisonous but, I believe, never the sweet.

DON'T STOP MY PAPER.

Don't stop my paper, printer,
Don't strike my name off yet;
You know the times are strigent,
And dollars hard to get;
But tug a little harder,
Is what I mean to do,
And scrape the dimes together,
Enough for me and you.

I can't afford to drop it;
I find it doesn't pay
To do without a paper,
However others may;
I hate to ask my neighbors
To give me theirs on loan;
They don't just say, but mean it,
Why don't you have your own?

You can't tell how we miss it,
If it, by any fate,
Should happen not to reach us,
Or come a little late;
Then all is in a hubbub,
And things go all awry,
And, printer, if you're married,
You know the reason why:

The children want their stories,
And wife is anxious, too,
At first to glance it over,
And then to read it through,
And I to read the leaders,
And con the book reviews,
And scan the correspondence,
And every scrap of news.

I cannot do without it,
It is no use to try,
The other people take it,
And, printer, so must I;
I, too, must keep me posted
And know what's going on,
Or feel and be accounted,
A fogy simpleton.

Then take it kindly, printer,
If pay be somewhat slow,
For cash is not so plenty,
And wants not few, you know,
But I must have my paper,
Cost what it may to me,
I'd rather dock my sugar, I
And do without my tea.

So, printer, don't you stop it,
Unless you want my frown,
For here's the year's subscription,
And credit it right down,
And send the paper promptly
And regularly on,
And let it bring us weekly
Its welcomed benizon.

Diversity of Gifts.

"Many men of many minds" is one of the first chirographical lessons that I learned, and it is a remarkable fact that the most important lessons or truths are always simple and easy of comprehension. Much may be learned about the moral and intellectual standing of any community or nation of people by the aphorisms which have obtained universal currency among them. If the aphorisms of any nation or age were carefully collated it would constitute a key to the moral and intellectual status of that nation or age.

The aphorism, "many men of many minds," is not confined to any one nation or age of the world; it is one that has obtained universal consent, and the reason why it is so is that its truth is daily and hourly exemplified in the multifarious actions and pursuits of the human family. Its truth was deeply impressed upon the mind of St. Paul when he said to the Corinthians: "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are diversities of administrations, but the same Lord." And the importance of this "diversity of gifts" is shown by what he further says: "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."

If man had been so constituted as to have been able at the first glance to comprehend and exemplify every truth connected with the Holy Scriptures, with astronomy, geology, mathematics, and all the other sciences, and at the same time so well versed in rhetoric and logic as to enable him with St. Paul to proclaim truths in their most dazzling light—with the voice of thunder hurl the javelins of the law at the wicked, and then, with an overflowing heart of love, point to the Lamb of God, and say to those who, by his pointed javelins, have been pierced to the heart: "He is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world;" if one minister of the gospel, or one class of ministers, could now acquire all these prerequisites, there would be no necessity for a "diversity of gifts" in the ministry and laity of the church. If such were the case, one minister could preach, exhort and pray to suit every man; but this is not, nor ever will be the case. Therefore, the same necessity now exists for "diversities of gifts" as in the days of St. Paul. Hence it is that God calls men to labor in His vineyard, from the rich, the poor, the learned, the illiterate, and of every order of talent, from one even to ten, and no man thus called of God has a right to bury his talent, or suffer any other man, or set of men, no matter how many talents they may have, to bury it for him.

Now take a walk with me into yonder well dressed vineyard, and behold the diversity of work that was and is yet necessary to be done. First, the ground had to be cleared, the brush and brambles to be burned, the ground broken up, and inclosed with a wall, the vines planted, and as they grew it was necessary that they should be trained and properly pruned. During all this time the ground had to be worked, so as to hinder the noxious weeds and briars from injuring the health and growth of the vines. We will suppose then that the stewards of the owner of this vineyard, now loaded with grapes, ripening for the vintage, and who had in their service, up to the present time, all the necessary laborers to prepare the ground, build the walls, plant the vines, and keep everything in repair—the brush removed, the weeds and briars destroyed, the vines pruned, and the grapes ripening in the sunshine of prosperity, that they will no longer call upon them to perform any more work; and if they wish to work they may go to some other vineyard that is not in such good repair as this, and if they do not seek work in some other place we will report them to the owner as worthless drones. What I ask would be the result of such a course? Those who had thus labored might for a season linger about their beloved vineyard, and look with deep interest at the crumbling walls, and the luxuriant leaves, fast spreading in every direction, not only concealing the fruit from the healthful rays of the sun, but also causing those that were ripening to decay, and others that were not so well matured to drop off.

It should be borne in mind that by the vineyard we are to understand the church of Christ, and that the Methodist Church constitutes one ward of that vineyard; and here it may be remarked that the organism of the Methodist Church is well calculated to call out and utilize all the gifts and graces of the Spirit. This vineyard has been brought to its high state of cultivation at the cost of a great amount of labor. Many have worked hard in it, for a long time, in removing the brush, building the walls, planting the vines, and removing the superfluous leaves, so as to give the rays of the Sun of Righteousness a chance to ripen the fruit. But much still depends upon the stewards, or itinerating ministers, in order to secure a good vintage in the future. It will not do for them to begin to conclude that, as the walls and hedges are in good repair, the weeds and briars cut down, they can now do all the work themselves. As good and faithful stewards, they should do all the work they can, not only in the pulpit, but also in their pastoral work, and then lay out work for others, and encourage them in the performance of the same. By such a course a "diversity of gifts" and graces will be called into exercise, and a glorious vintage secured.

God will not suffer his plans to be frustrated, for a great length of time, without showing His disapprobation, either by withholding blessings or by direct judgments. Consequently, if the church or those who have the oversight of it so act as to frustrate any of the wise plans of the Almighty, it may be expected, at least, that His blessings will be withheld. The question is often asked: "Why is it that we cannot have a revival? Our preacher is a talented man, he is a good orator, preaches sound doctrine, and labors day and night in his Master's cause; his sermons are edifying, and listened to with interest, still souls are not converted. True, he may be a man of ten talents, but where are the "diversities of gifts" recognized by St. Paul, which has been and always will be essential to the prosperity of the church. We might as well suppose that a man could run a race successfully with his feet bruised and mangled, as to suppose that a powerful and successful revival could take place in a church where some of her members, no matter how feeble they may be, are bruised and wounded in their feelings, or feel that they are cut off from the sympathies and brotherly love of the church. To have a revival the church must be one. A union of sentiment, of sympathy, and of brotherly love, must exist in every member of the body. "The eye must not say to the hand, I have no need of thee; nor, again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more, those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary." The local preachers and stewards may be considered the hands and feet of the church, the class-leaders the ears, the membership the body, and the itinerancy the head and eyes; and as the head and eyes direct almost every movement of the physical man, and when in a normal condition, always sympathizes with other members of the body when in a suffering condition. So the constituted authorities, the head and eyes of the spiritual body, should sympathize with all the other suffering members, and shield them as far as possible from injury, and preserve them in a healthy condition.

When the church gets to acting as it did in the early days of Methodism, on the principle that every member has a work to perform, that the man with one talent is as much bound to work in the city full, the mountain region, or sparcely populated country, as the man who has ten, when the man of ten talents pushes those forward who have but one, and offers encouragement to them in their labors of love, then we may look for "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Fifty years of close observation and experience in the ministry has convinced me that in churches where the laity, both male and female, were pushed forward and encouraged in exhortations and prayers, and especially where sisters were called on to pray in public, and where they held female prayer-meetings, that there was always more life and power of religion than in other churches where only a select few were called on to exercise in public.

A question then arises here. How shall we, as a church, bring out and utilize the now dormant gifts and graces of the membership? Once, as an efficient factor, we had class-meetings and frequent love-feasts, by which even the gifts and graces of young members were developed, encouraged and utilized. Fifty years ago, when Methodism, as expressed by Chalmers, was "Christianity in earnest," when there were more sisters that would pray in public, and tell what the Lord had done for them in love feasts, than there are brethren now that will take up the cross, it was not unusual for sinners to be awakened and converted at ordinary appointments, at prayer-meetings and class-meetings.

May the Lord grant that the suggested head and eyes of the church may inquire for the successful way for the prosperity of "Zion with their faces thitherward."

Errors of Authors.

AND OTHERS ALSO.

In a former article I mentioned ten popular errors which are quite current among us, and continue the list. It will be observed these are not only errors destructive of a proper understanding of the church, but far worse, they support the only pedestal or tap-root upon which Romanism and all high churchism rests. And so their importance is vital. The list continues:

11. When Pilate sought to release Jesus the great body of the Jewish people cried out: "Crucify him; his blood be upon us and our children." And this imprecation was answered by the destruction of the temple and dismemberment of the Jewish state.

Answer. The cry, "Crucify him," was the reckless exclamation of a little handful of rabble at the governor's door, where there could have been but a very few persons. Its connection with the siege of Jerusalem, forty years after, is mere fancy.

12. Prior to this time all worship was confined to the temple at Jerusalem, but now, in the new or Christian Church, men may worship anywhere.

Ans. At that time, and for hundreds of years previously, congregational worship was common everywhere, as it is now. There were several hundred churches then in Jerusalem alone. There was no change in this respect.

13. The Saviour not only abrogated the Jewish religion, but the church also, and set up a new and different one.

Ans. Jesus, so far as we know, never entertained an unfriendly feeling toward the church of his fathers. On the contrary, he loved and supported it to the hour of his death. A new church was never dreamed of in that age. A new church is not only historically untrue, but philosophically impossible. This great error is the sole and exclusive pedestal of all Romanism and all high churchism.

14. This new church was framed with new laws, new conditions of membership, new officers, new government, new ritual and new principles. It began with a few members, twelve or twenty or so.

Ans. He prescribed nothing of the kind.

15. The Saviour set up a new ministry on a new basis with a new commission, the old being dissolved, and the ministers all being deposed.

Ans. On the contrary, the ministry continued uninterruptedly. There were thousands of ministers then, as now, all over the church.

16. The new ministry of the new church was, at the first, composed of the apostles exclusively.

Ans. There the Romish primacy, prelacy, apostolic succession and high church principles follow naturally and plausibly, if not necessarily.

17. At the first meeting of note of the new church 3,000 were converted and joined the church.

Ans. It is entirely gratuitous to suppose that any of the 3,000 spoken of at Pentecost were then converted. They are generally spoken of as pious people. They were church members, with no intimation against their piety. As to their joining the church, that could not be, because they were already in the church.

18. The Lord also established new sacraments.

Ans. This involves an absurdity, as well as being historically untrue. New sacraments would imply a new deity, or new human nature, or both. He appointed new modes of administering the same old sacraments. Christ having appeared, to which event the old modes pointed forward, they must necessarily be changed.

19. Some of the first Christians apostatized and lapsed back into the religion of the Old Testament.

Ans. It is absurd to suppose a person to backslide into the religion of the Old Testament. The religion of the Old Testament is the religion of the New. You might as well say a man lapsed from the religion of John to that of Paul.

20. The Jews, at the time of Christ, were all the lineal descendants of Abraham. The Jews of the present day are their descendants, constituting their entire posterity, and holding their religion—that is, the religion of the Old Testament.

Ans. The Jews—that is, the members of the church at the birth of Christ—were probably not one in a hundred descended from Abraham's family in both the male and female lines. Both the law and the practice was that they intermarry with everybody who would come into the church. Modern Jews are not the posterity of the Jews of that day, but only of that branch which apostatized from the ancient faith by repudiating Christ, which was probably half or less of the whole church.

21. Jesus being divine, and the Head of the church, the founder and framer of its government and laws, the test of the identity of a church now must be its conformity to the original model. This model and government we gather from the New Testament.

Ans. There was no original model, no divine frame work, no new church, divine or human. So far as concerned laws of church government, the Saviour left the church as he found it. The church is, therefore, not a corporation, not an institution—that is, it was not instituted at a time and place—but is the natural and absolutely necessary product, outgrowth or emanation of individual religion in the hearts of the people. All branches of the church, Romish not excepted, do, and always did, make their own laws of external government.

This list of popular, but none the less dangerous errors, could be extended indefinitely. They all diverge from a single, central point—a single, central error—a fundamental blunder; it can hardly be called an opinion. This blunder is that Jesus Christ founded a church and introduced a religion.

Romanists fell into this error as honestly and as innocently as Protestants did; or, in truer language, they fell into it honestly, and we Protestants took it from them without a word of inquiry. It is not true that papists set up the fact and principles of a new church and new religion for the purpose of building the papal system upon it, but it is rather that papists, four hundred years ago, did not discover the blunder, and their church system grew naturally, plausibly, and, I may say, necessarily, out of it.

Look a moment at this naturalness and necessity. The formation of a new church means something. At the very least it means that on some certain occasion the Saviour, or some one or more persons authorized by him, organized a few persons—it could not possibly be very many—into a society, prescribing some laws of government in the nature of a charter, which were to be perpetual, to govern the external affairs of the company. A head officer was necessarily appointed; else it was not an organized government. This office was to be perpetual, and the incumbent to have perpetual succession. Hence the primacy. That is a primacy; and if any man denies this primacy to the Bishop of Rome I ask him to point out to me the true, legitimate incumbent.

Granting the historic fact of the formation of a new church, the primacy, or at least a primacy, is an unavoidable sequence. It is, therefore, demonstrable that the man who holds the new church theory, and does not find a universal primate elsewhere than in Rome, is a papist, or an inconsistent reasoner.

And more: This divinely-made society—call it a church—is a divine revelation, differing in form only from the verbal revelation in the New Testament. It is certainly of equal, if not superior, authority. It is superior in that it preceded the written, in the order of time, a few years. This, however, I should not regard as important. But the "church" is a revelation.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MISS BETTIE LOCKETT, daughter of Lucius J. and Bettie K. Lockett, was born in Marion, Ala., May 20, 1858, and died at the residence of her uncle, Maj. A. M. Fowlkes of Marion, December 26, 1878, aged twenty years, seven months and six days.

In infancy she was baptized into the Protestant Episcopal Church, but receiving her religious training in the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, she joined the latter, on profession of faith, May 9, 1875. She was an active and efficient member of the Sunday-school and choir of the church, and took an active part in all those church enterprizes which devolve upon the ladies of the church. She was an intelligent, cultivated lady; in disposition hopeful, cheerful, vivacious.

In March, 1878, she left Marion to visit her aunt, Mrs. J. K. Armstrong, in Decatur, Ala., and in July removed with Rev. J. K. Armstrong and family to Grenada, Miss., expecting to occupy a position in the Female College in that place, to the Presidency of which Brother Armstrong had been elected. In August the entire family were prostrated with yellow fever, which resulted fatally in the case of Brother Armstrong and one of his sons. Miss Lockett survived the fever, but did not recover her usual health and vigor. During three months of isolation, among strangers, cut off from home and friends, she remained with the survivors of the stricken family, awaiting an opportunity to return to the home of her childhood.

"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick," and while her heart yearned for home her bodily strength wasted away. On the 15th of November she reached Marion, in company with Mrs. Armstrong and her children, but the relief came too late. It was soon discovered that her decline had progressed too far to be arrested. From that time she sank rapidly, until death released her from the body.

It was the painful duty of the writer of this memoir, as her pastor, to visit her on the day on which it was deemed necessary to inform her of the approach of death, and to converse with her concerning her preparation for the life to come. I feared, as did her relations, that it would be a fearful struggle with her to transfer her hopes from earth to heaven, but I found her so calm, so RESIGNED, SO TRUSTFUL, SO CONFIDENT, that I left her bedside feeling that the visit had been a blessing to myself rather than to her. For her death had no sting. A few days later she calmly fell on sleep, and kind, friendly hands laid her mortal part in the grave, in confident hope of the resurrection unto life eternal.

DR. JOHN R. APPLEWHITE, son of the late Rev. James Applewhite, one of the early itinerant preachers in Mississippi, was born in Marion county, Miss., February 21, 1818, when that part of the country was new and thinly settled, with here and there an old field school of a low grade, and none of a higher order. Beside this, at an early age the care and providence of his father's family, in a great measure, fell on John and his younger brother, their father being absent on his circuit twenty-eight days in every month. But none of these things seemed to discourage the sterling boy. After toiling all day for the support of those he loved, at night, by his pine-knot light, he would pore for hours over such books as imparted solid and useful information. Thus in boyhood and early youth he formed those habits of industry and self-reliance, and acquired that energy of character that would insure success in any walk of life he might be called to occupy. Some forty-five years ago his father moved to Carroll county, and settled near the present town of Valdew. In that and adjoining neighborhoods Bro. Applewhite spent the greater part of his life, and by pursuing his chosen vocation, the practice of medicine, and tilling the earth, he acquired a handsome property, the greater part of which was swept away by the late war. But he girded himself again for life's battles, and was soon surrounded with more than a competency.

Some four years ago he moved to Oregon, but the hand of disease was laid upon him. That fell destroyer of the large brained—paralysis—claimed him as its own, and he returned to the home of his early manhood to die among loved ones, and, though his mind wandered on many subjects yet in regard to his future well-being, it appeared to be unimpaired. On the twenty-sixth of October, 1878, after commending his wife and four little children to the care of a covenant keeping God, he breathed out his life in full assurance of hope. Bro. Applewhite was twice married—first to Miss Margaret Bonner, by whom he had four children. His second marriage was with Miss Rachel Williams, who, with four interesting little children, survives him. He was a man of strong feelings, warm in his friendship, and decided in his antipathies a kind husband and an indulgent father, and for many years had been a member of the Methodist Church, South, and also of the Masonic and Odd Fellow fraternities. But he is gone, and his body now sleeps in the family grave-yard beside the remains of loved ones, there to await the resurrection of the just.

AT THE fourth Quarterly Conference for Fort Deposit circuit, Union Springs district, Alabama Conference, held at Fort Deposit, November 30, 1878, the undersigned having been appointed to draft resolutions, expressive of the sense of this Conference, concerning the death of BRO. THOMAS E. BRANSCOMB, who died at his residence in Lowndes county, Ala., October 21, 1878, submit the following:

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God, in His wisdom, to remove from us our beloved brother, Thomas E. Branscomb, a member of this Conference from the organization of the circuit to the day of his death; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Branscomb the church has lost a consistent and exemplary member, whose daily life was a testimony to the purity and power of the religion of Jesus; an earnest, diligent and effective steward, whose aim and constant effort was to do his whole duty in that responsible office, and a Sunday-school worker whose heart was in his work.

Resolved, That while to us this Providence is deeply mysterious, and we see not how his place in the church and community is to be supplied, yet we bow with submission and resignation to our Father's decree, and rejoice in the assurance that He has called our brother "from labor to reward."

Resolved, That we will earnestly pray God to raise up a man from among us who may be qualified to fill the place left vacant by Bro. Branscomb's removal.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our brother's family, with the assurance of our great sympathy for them in their bereavement.

JOSEPH RICHARDS died, of yellow fever, at his residence in Sharon, Madison county, Miss., September 17, 1878. He was born in Laurence county, Miss., March 6, 1819; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1867. During two years' pastorate I became intimately acquainted with him, always admiring his Christian deportment; possessing many qualities that are so essential to build up a Christian character—quiet, unassuming, peaceful and true—one that could be relied upon at all times, and faithful in every position of trust in which the church placed him. At the time of his death he was a steward, recording steward, secretary of the Sunday-school, and trustee.

His walk and conversation, day by day, was that of a Christian, ever careful to speak evil of no man, but to be gentle, showing all meekness unto all men. Bro. Richards leaves a wife, troubled and afflicted, yet not in despair, having a hope in the resurrection and life to come, asking our prayers that she may have faith and patience to triumph in Christ and say: "Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulations." If his wife, friends and the church have sustained a loss, our loss is his gain. In his dying moments, realizing a Father's hand, and a Father's love, he exclaimed: "Whom the Lord loveth, He chasteneth." How expressive? Then passed over the river, and, no doubt, is at rest under the shade of the trees.

RALPH BRAMLEY.

MRS. F. C. ECLIECK died at the residence of her mother, Mrs. Newsom, in Nashville, Tenn., July 28, 1878. The daughter of an old friend, the late S. R. Davis, of Summerfield, Ala., the writer knew her from childhood.

She was first my pupil, and afterward an associate in teaching, and in both relations excelled. She was one of the few persons intimately known of whom I can recall neither failure nor fault. Her Christian course began in early childhood, and was consistent, uniform, beautiful. She illustrated Christian character with equal grace in the extremes of worldly fortune, and died the gentle, genuine saint she was through life.

Only five years a wife, she left her husband desolate, while she rejoined their babe that preceded her. Thus the families of earth are sundered.

But to Christian households this dread eclipse is only transient. Beyond "the dark valley" are unending joys, a perpetual home, and unclouded skies.

MRS. INDAUER S. ODUM, wife of J. E. Odum, and daughter of J. J. and S. M. Singeltary, died, October 16, 1878, in Rapides parish, La., aged twenty-seven years, five months and twenty-four days. She made a profession of religion in her sixteenth year, and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when she died. After her marriage she became a child of affliction, suffering much every way, and very soon sank down to rise no more in this life. She bore it like a Christian. I was with her in her afflictions, and talked to her about her pending dissolution. She was not afraid to die. She leaves one child. I think she is with the redeemed in glory.

JULIA OLLIA BARR, eldest daughter of J. B. and Sister Barr, died in Rapides parish, La., June 1, 1878, aged seven years. She had been consecrated to God by baptism in the early part of her short life. Ollia was one of my little friends. I was sorry when she died, but God knows best when to take his little folks to heaven. I thank God for a plan of salvation that saves the children. May God comfort the bereaved parents is the prayer of their pastor.

Saints and angels robed in glory
Listen to the sweet refrain
Of the never ending story
Once begun on Judah's plain.
Then in chorus grandly swelling
Rises one triumphant psalm,
Earth and heaven the notes are telling,
"Hallelujah to the Lamb!"

A TRIBUTE.

BY ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

Blinded I groped—you gave me sight.
Perplexed I turned—you gave me light.
You speak into a thousand ears:
I pay you tribute hid in tears.
I pay you homage in the hopes
That rise to scale life's scathed slopes.
I give you gratitude in this,
That, midway on the precipice,
You never trod and never saw,
Where air you never drank strikes raw,
And wan upon the wasted breath,
And gulfs you never passed, gape death,
And crags you gained some sunlit way,
Frown threatening ever me to-day,
That here with bruised hand I cling,
Because I heard you yonder sing
With those who conquer. If through joy,
Then deeper be our shame who toy
And loiter in the scourging rain,
And did not pass by strength of pain.
Laggard below, I reach to bless
You who are king of happiness;
You are the victor, you the brave,
Who could not stoop to be her slave.
Downward to me, rebuking, fling
My privilege of suffering.
I take and listen. Teach me. See!
Nearer than you I ought to be;
Nearer the height man never trod.
Nearer the veiled face of God.
I ought and am not. Comrade! be Unconscious Captain unto me.
Unknowing, beckon and command;
I answer you with unseen hand.
You read in vain these lines between.
And, smiling, wonder whom I mean.

Sunday Afternoon.

Epidemics and Their Sanitary Bearings.

When such a scourge as yellow fever visits our country, and shows the virulence we find at New Orleans and such inland penetration as has driven away most of the population of Grenada, we may well pause and study its significance. Epidemics have great gravity, from various aspects. They mean all the terror that there can be in bereavement. They mean such stagnation and derangement of business as entails financial disaster upon citizens of every grade. They mean great searchings for causes; and even when these are obscure they point to various conditions which add to intensity and fatality. How, sometimes, they have changed the whole course of history! With the "Black Death" of the fourteenth century forty millions of people perished in the East alone. Twenty-five millions, or one-fourth of all the inhabitants of Europe, died. The people fled from the attendants; and even St. Augustine was once stoned in the street, on suspicion of being a plague physician. The traveler looks with wonder at the St. Maria della Salute, the appeasing cathedral of Venice; and many a statue, like that Vienna, tells of the awful sense of fearful judgment.

Although we are far away from the Southwest, yet our countrymen are in peril. We are to remember too that the disease has not always been a stranger in the North. New York City had its early and terrifying experiences. La Roche has given its history from 1699 to 1853. The great Philadelphia epidemic of 1793 had its description written by Dr. Rush. Up to 1820 it continued to reappear, with more or less intensity, in Philadelphia, and then there was an absence of over thirty years. The limited visitation of 1853 included but a few hundred yards of city area. It is but an intensified representative of scarlet fever, diphtheria, malignant, bilious fever, and other diseases whose origin is from without. It is conveyed by infective particles, and so may be carried from one point to another. The sick person—as distinct from his clothing, surroundings, etc.—is not thought to transmit it; and so it is said not to be contagious, but infectious, or to be caught from the secretions or surroundings. It is on this view that such active disinfection is carried on as has seemed greatly to limit the disease in New Orleans in the outbreak previous to the present one. In hospitals, where everything pertaining to the case that presents itself for admission is burned, and only the individual admitted and secretion well cared for, the disease does not spread to attendants. This teaches us much as to our sanitary control of all diseases which are transmissible in the sense of being infectious, but not in the sense of contagion, or communication by contact with the individual. It is because of the natural association of the sick man with his infective surroundings that the laity confound the two; but in a sanitary view the distinction is very preservative. The people at large do not know how, as to the prevention of cholera, small-pox, and some other diseases, they are continually indebted to some of our thinking, working, executing health officers. The trouble, however, with most of our epidemics is that they find such excellent soil in which to propagate, and at their start such inactivity for prevention. The public do not hear much about them until under headway. In 1873 the epidemic at Memphis began about August 15, moved very slowly, and had as the infected district the worst four acres to be found in the United States. It was the "Happy Hollow" below the bluff, into which, amid a degraded population, trickled all summer the sewage of Memphis. This is the language of the health officer: "During the hot summer months this accumulated mass of filth had been festering and rotting in the sun, exhaling mephitic gases, which in themselves are potent enough to induce infection, only needing the germ of yellow fever to be sown to yield all the fearful fruits of this great epidemic. This was a period of inaction on the part of the city authorities." When a bad weed gets prolific luxuriance by such cultivation, it spreads even to less fertilizing fields. Amid such culture, it is hard to keep these foul seeds from doing great havoc. But we can limit their productivity, their fatality, by securing the most discouraging conditions for their propagation. Cleanliness and disinfection greatly aid. So would the running away of the population, as it would diminish the susceptible material; but, alas! this often spreads the disease to other communities. A third method—not yet largely adopted, but proposed by one of our physicians, and advocated by some others—is that of personal sanitation of the individual, by putting the system, through hygienic and medicinal methods, in such a condition as that it will resist the infective particle which is always inhaled when the disease is taken. It is well for us all to know that the zymotic diseases are now being studied with a hopefulness most encouraging, and that most of them are "within the range and the duty of human control." They are preventible, but difficult to prevent, because the infective particle, like swarms of animalculæ, is hard to trace; because people will not use beforehand the means of prevention; and because they must become epidemic before we can excite the authorities to proper attention. We are studying the natural history of diseases, as others are studying that of birds, fishes, and all insects, and with results equally exact in observation, classification and description. Some day cities and States will come to realize that there are cheaper scavengers than epidemics; that not to create a disease is better than to combat it. The want of our country to-day is health boards free of politics, responsible for their applied sciences to men fitted to be their critics; financial freedom in proper spheres, and yet with close business accuracy; and such appreciation of health as a great civic trust as that it shall enter into the calculations of the statesman as a controlable material interest.—Independent.

Educating too Much.

Prof. Monier Williams, in his book on "Modern India and the Indians," gives a hint in regard to popular education that we in the United States might take, if it be not too late. He cautions against too much education, as tending to render young men unwilling, if not unfit, to pursue the trades of their fathers. He holds that offering to all children and advanced education tempts them to seek their livelihood by some other than manual employments, and so disturbs the working of the natural law of supply and demand. You force upon the labor market a host of educated men for whom there is nothing to do, and you deprive the country of workmen greatly needed.

In this country we see the influence of this system in such results. Our public schools now give to the children of the poor, and to the great middle class, an education that includes ornamental and many other branches. Children who have had a course of lessons in these studies are not willing to go from school to making baskets, or brogans. And they can find nothing to do in the line of business for which they are now fitted. They want situations in stores, banks, or professions. These places are filled. There is not any demand for clerks or lawyers. The supply is greater than the demand. If an advertisement calls for a young man to fill a situation in an office, or store, a troop answers the call. But in vain is the search for apprentices to a trade. No one wants to work who can get his living by his wits. If parents educate children at their own expense, and then cannot find congenial employment for them, the fault is with the parents. But if the State, at the expense of the taxpayers, supports a system of education that destroys the balance of the social system by producing more of one class of laborers than is called for, and diminishing the production of another, the consequence is disorder, disappointment and misery. The State itself trains its children for a department of service in which only a small part of them can be employed. It disqualifies a large part of its children for that service in which they are largely required. This makes misery.

There is no sphere of honest labor that is not respectable. And if the children of the people are not forced by hot-house education into seeking employment in spheres which are thought to be more genteel than such as are called menial, thousands who are now struggling or starving for want of adequate employment would be earning a sure and respectable support in an honest employment.

It is probably too late for us in this country to go back upon our system. We shall continue to teach music and mathematics and a score of other branches of fashionable or popular education, to the children of the people, making the taxpayers pay the enormous cost, and thus we shall do a positive injury to the many, greatly benefit a few, and by turning upon society an innumerable number of young people who will not now go into menial or manual labor, and who cannot obtain anything else to do, we shall, as we do now, force the supply of educated labor beyond the demand, and so injure those whom we seek to benefit.

The easy reply to this statement is that an educated young man is just as able to go out to a days' work as if he were not educated, which is very true. But give him education and he will not take to such employment, nor be happy in it if he does. A laundress sends her daughters to the public school, and they learn all the sciences and add the accomplishments. Neither they wish, nor their mother for them, to take in washing after they have had this advanced education. If they could obtain something better to do, and in which their education would be useful, we would by all means give them the education. But if they are now raised above the calling of their mother, and have no other in which they can be useful, their education has done them harm and not good.—N. Y. Observer.

Hearts Overworked.

No organ in the body is so liable to be overworked as the heart. When every other part of the body sleeps, it keeps on its perpetual motion. Every increased effort or action demands from the heart more force. A man runs to catch a train, and his heart beats audibly. He drinks wine, and the blood rushes through the reservoir faster than was ever intended by nature. His pulse rises after each course at dinner. A telegram arrives, and his heart knocks at his side. And when any one of those "excitements" is over, he is conscious of a corresponding depression—a sinking or emptiness as it is called. The healthy action of all the members of our frame depends upon the supply of blood, received from the central fountain. When the heart's action is arrested, the stomach, which requires from it a large supply of blood, becomes enfeebled. The brain, also waiting for the blood, is inactive. The heart is a very willing member, but if it be made to fetch and carry incessantly—if it be "put upon," as the unselfish member of a family often is—it undergoes a disorganization which is equivalent to its rupture. And this disorganization begins too often nowadays in the hearts of very young children. Parents know that if their sons are to succeed at any of those competitive examinations which have now become so exigent, high pressure is employed. Hence young persons are stimulated to overwork by rewards and punishments. The sight of a clever boy who is being trained for competition is truly a sad one. The precocious, coached-up children are never well. Their mental excitement keeps up a flush, which, like the excitement caused by strong drink in elder children, looks like health, but has no relation to it; in a word, the intemperance of education is overstraining and breaking their young hearts. If in the school-room some hearts are broken from mental strain, play-ground and the gymnasium others succumb to physical strain. "It is no object of mine," says Dr. Richardson, "to underrate the advantages of physical exercise for the young; but I can scarcely overrate the danger of those fierce competitive exercises which the world in general seems determined to applaud. I had the opportunity once in my life of living near a rower. He was a patient of mine, suffering from the very form of induced heart disease of which I am now speaking, and he gave me ample means of studying the conditions of many of those whom he trained both for running and rowing. I found occasion, certainly, to admire the physique to which his trained men were brought; the strength of muscle they attained; the force of their heart; but the admiration was qualified by the stern facts of the results." But, indeed, it is not by overwork so much as by worry and anxiety that our hearts are disorganized. "Laborious mental exercise is healthy, unless it be made anxious by necessary or unnecessary difficulties. Regular mental labor is best carried on by introducing into it some variety." Business and professional men wear out their hearts by acquiring habits of express-train haste, which a little attention to method would render unnecessary.

Poets and Flowers.

Of living English poets, Mr. Tennyson alone shows any real love for flowers. And this love is scarcely shown so much in the well known song in "Maud" as by little touches here and there—the "long green box of mignonette," which the miller's daughter has set on her casement edge—the "wild marsh marygold," which "shines like fire in swamps" for the happy May Queen; or the water lilies which blossom round the island of Shalott. And who can forget the stanza in "In Memoriam?"

"Bring orchis, bring the foxglove spire,
The little speedwell's darling blue,
Deep tulips dash with fiery dew,
Laburnums, dropping wells of fire."

Of American poets, Mr. Longfellow has, rather strangely, written nothing very memorable about flowers; but there are some pretty verses of Mr. Bryant's, and an occasional good line of Emerson's, as where he speaks of the gentian as "blue-eyed pet of blue-eyed lover," or tells us that

"Every aster in my hand Goes home loaded with a thought."

As we once again look round upon the "bards" that have sung, it is clear that their favorite blossoms have been the rose and the daisy—the one recalling all the delights of the summer garden, the other all the freshness of the open field—one loved for its beauty, the other cherished for its constancy.

"The rose has but a summer reign,
The daisy never dies," says Montgomery, in one of the best known of his poems. Cowslips, violets, daffodils, and "the beautiful Puritan pansies," as Edgar Poe calls them, are probably the next favorites. Painters have done more for lilies than the poets have.—London Athenæum.

"This is the message which we have heard of Him"—but what can it be, announced with such emphasis? Simply this—"that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." It seems, at first, almost a truism; but reflect, and ponder it. Things seem dark to us, but not to Him. Were there no darkness in us, there would be no unbelief, no jealousies, hatred, no secret sins.—Browne.

Some one speaking, in the hearing of the late Daniel Webster, of the sublime poetry of the Old Testament, the latter at once seriously replied: "Ah! my friend, the poetry of Isaiah and Job and Habakkuk is grand indeed; but when you have lived, as I have, sixty-seven years, you will give more for the fourteenth or seventeenth chapter of John's Gospel, or for one of the Epistles, than for all the poetry in the Bible."

Our Young People.

BABY'S PRAYER.

Lowly bowed the golden head,
Reverently bent the dimpled knee;
And the sweet lips softly said,
"Gentle Jesus, pity me."

Pity these, O gentle child,
Kneeling in thy robes so white;
Yes, a Saviour, meek and mild,
Hears the baby's prayer to-night.

And bright spirits He will send,
Guardian angels they will be,
Jesus is the children's friend;
He will love and pity thee.

How oft through life's long chequered way,
When tossing o'er life's troubled sea,
World worn pilgrims sadly say,
"Gentle Jesus, pity me."

When from His fold we chance to stray,
Of His commands forgetful be;
Let us, like baby, softly pray,
"Gentle Jesus, pity me."

The Stranger's Story.

BY E. H. CRAIG.

"That boy will break my heart!" was the passionate exclamation of a respectable-looking woman, as, with an appealing look, she addressed a strange gentleman who passed by at the time. A large overgrown boy, of more than fifteen years, had leaped over a fence the moment before, and now, feeling himself beyond her reach, stood laughing defiantly at his mother, who had undertaken to reprove him for some mean conduct. Without making reply, the stranger turned a severe look upon the boy, which had the effect of checking his mirth and changing his color a little and then advancing to the rails and resting his arms upon them, related the following story, which might have been profitable to both his hearers:

"There is, perhaps, nothing more painful than to see children, and especially large boys, who ought to know better, uncivil and disrespectful to their superiors, but particularly so to their parents. When I was a boy myself, I regret to say, I fell into the very same sad fault, for which I was not alone blameworthy. I was considered remarkably smart for my years, and my singularly wise sayings and doings delighted admiring friends; I suppose I was looked upon by my parents as a young Solomon. They generally brought me into the parlor for the express purpose of entertaining company. But I remember that I was wise enough to understand and mark well all the praises they heaped upon me. All my wisdom was gathered from my friends, and yet they gave me credit for originality in everything I said or did. By these aids I soon discovered my great importance, and this made me very impertinent—a pest and a scourge to my parents.

"When I had grown up to the age at which I ought to have been a pleasure to them, I was disobedient and sadly disrespectful. When I think of the irreverence I was guilty of, and which they tolerated in me for a moment, I feel to this day crimson with shame. And if I thought it could make amends for my youthful vileness, I should like to undergo now the floggings which I ought to have received then. I was permitted to call my father such slang names as 'governor,' 'the boss,' 'the old man,' 'John,' and such like, to his very face, and he heard it good-naturedly and laughed. That most sacred of all names, mother, was seldom applied to her who loved me more than any other human being; I usually called her 'the old woman,' or 'Mary,' humorously, of course, and thought it looked well.

"This bad training showed on me everywhere else. At school, the teacher was a firm man, a first-class disciplinarian, and kept me in my place well; but I disliked him for what I styled his severity, and behaved as disrespectfully and disobediently as I well dared. I was afraid of an open conflict with him, knowing that, in that case, I must have fared poorly. In secret, however, I did what I could to disaffect the other scholars and make them disrespectful. In this I succeeded admirably, especially among the larger boys. We could plot mischief against him and sneer at him behind his back. His rebuke made us angry and revengeful, and we consoled ourselves with the hope of paying him for it when we grew up. In the meantime we enjoyed ourselves delightfully in making game of him, much to the entertainment of the scholars generally. I was the prime mover in these annoyances, and it never occurred to my mind that my heartless conduct could receive a sudden and unexpected check.

"On one occasion he reproved me. Thinking myself master of the situation, I tossed my head in defiance, and sneered contemptuously, looking for the approval of my rude companions. But before I had time to think what I was doing, the teacher made my ear ring with a blow of his open hand. I staggered a little, but instantly recovering myself, and shrugging my shoulders in contempt, dared him to repeat it. He commanded me to leave the room; glad of the opportunity, I went, and closing the door with an impudent farewell, ended my school education.

"In Sunday-school I was even worse. I knew that my teacher had no means of enforcing his instruction, except by moral suasion. I was irreverent, even in the most sacred things. I turned my pious teacher's instruction into ridicule to make the others laugh. More than once I used bad language to his face, and I am now convinced that he was a man of more than ordinary grace, or his temper could not have brooked my conduct for a moment. Yet, strange to say, I never knew of his having made any effort to obtain my removal out of his class. I think his prayers were answered, however, by my suddenly leaving the place. I went to business and was there but a month when my bad manners were directed towards my employer. He told me quietly that I might go home to my father; I went. I tried several other places with a similar unhappy result—unhappy for me; happy for my employers.

"I had now grown up to be a young man and knew that I was losing my time, that I could never be worth anything in the world. In weeks of despondency I had time to reflect. I saw that I had been turned out of school for my insubordination; that I had been disrespectful to my Sabbath-school teacher, though he desired my best interests; that my ill-breeding had turned me out of three or four situations, and prevented me from even occupying others. I next saw that if ever I expected to do well, I must govern my temper, suppress my insufferable pride, which had developed by this time into impudence, and practice obedience and respectfulness to my superiors. The disgrace of having been turned out of several situations, to the certain knowledge of my acquaintances, mortified me. To friends I explained, when opportunity afforded, that it was not my fault, but that of tyrannical masters; but no use; they had their own opinion, which was the correct one. My ill fortune had its good effect upon me. After the exercise of patience and practice of self-culture for a long time, I succeeded in obtaining another situation. When entering upon it, I made up my mind to 'try better conduct, and be as respectful as possible to all around me. I was able to keep my place this time, and learned that steadiness, honesty, and respectfulness to superiors, were indispensable to a young man's success.

"Young man," he continued, "if you wish ever to prosper in the world, you must begin by obeying the Fifth Commandment, which is 'Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.' If you neglect this, take care that you come not under the curse which declares that 'The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it.'"

The "Rocket" Paying Tithes.

"Rocket!" Wasn't that a singular name for a sled?

In vain Aunt May remonstrated. "Surely," said she, "your sled will not go up like a rocket." In vain she suggested, "The Leopard," "The Reindeer," "The Firefly," "The Flash." None of these suited Master Edward's taste.

"I know when it will go like a rocket," he said. And thus his new Christmas gift received its name.

That evening, after his first day of coasting, Edward and his dear Aunt May were sitting by the twilight fire, talking over the pleasures of the day.

"Aunt May," said he, with eyes sparkle, "I made the 'Rocket' pay tithes to-day."

"You did," she said. "How? What do you mean?"

"Why, don't you remember, auntie, what you told me the other day about the Jews? You said it was a rule among them to give a tenth part of all their possessions to God; and that you thought we, who have been taught more about Him and more about the Saviour who has come to us, ought to do as much."

"But, Eddie, how could you give a tenth part of your sled to God?"

"Well, auntie, you know you explained to me one other day the meaning of those words of Jesus, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto Me.' And I thought if I gave rides on my sled to some poor children who didn't have any, it would be the same as paying tithes, wouldn't it?"

"Yes, Eddie, I think God would certainly accept such an offering."

"And so," he continued, "every time I took nine rides, I gave one to ragged Joe. He hasn't got any sled, 'cause his father drinks, you know. Or to Bob Millman. His father and mother are both dead, and I felt sorry for him. Then poor Peter Roy is lame, so he can't coast a sled by himself, and I took him right before me in my rides—first him and then Benny Wright, 'cause he's so little he didn't know how to steer a sled if he had one. Sometimes," added Edward softly "I didn't wait to take nine rides."

"What, then? You gave the poor boys two instead of one?"

"Yes, auntie, two rides right together; and I think they were the best of all."

As the boy said this, his curly head resting on Aunt May's lap, his eyes looking thoughtfully into the fire, he felt her hand pass tenderly over his forehead; and God in heaven heard the prayer that went up at that moment from her heart, that He would keep her darling thus, and teach him by many more such experiences how, always, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."—Children's Friend.

Biblical Puzzle Story.

A little girl whose name was the same as that of David's grandmother, and who was as old as Jairus' daughter when she was raised to life, was to celebrate her birthday in the same month, and upon the same day of the month, as that upon which the ark rested upon Mt. Ararat. In the morning when she awoke she found several birthday gifts waiting for her. Her father's present was like that which Joseph directed should be put in the mouth of Benjamin's sack, her mother gave her the same kind of article that Pharaoh gave to Joseph when he set him over all Egypt; her aunt, who lived in a city whose name was the same as one of the seven churches in Asia, sent her something like that which Job wished his enemy would write; and her brother sent her a little pet animal like those which the Jews offered in sacrifice. She was very happy with her gifts, though she wished somebody had given her a pair of ornaments such as the Ismelite women gave Aaron, and of which he fashioned the golden calf. In the afternoon two of her little friends came to see her, one of whose names was that of Samuel's mother, and the other the same as that of Lazarus' sister who sat at Jesus' feet. Their present was an article like that used to pick up the fragments in when the five thousand were fed; and it was filled with the same thing that the spies brought from Canaan. After playing in the house awhile they went out and did what the boys and girls will do in the New Jerusalem; they went into a place like that in which Adam and Eve were put, and played under the shade of a tree like that under which Joshua put a great stone. After they had played till they felt as Sisera did, when he went into Jael's tent, they came in and sat down to the same thing which Simon made for his friends. There was upon the table something which if cast upon the waters will return again, and some of the things which Abraham and Sarah set before the three angels; and for dessert they had some of the things which Jacob sent to Joseph in Egypt; and what Abigail brought David; and after awhile they went home. A Christian Child.

When I was a little girl, long ago, I walked by my mother's side, holding her hand while she talked with a neighbor on her way from church. I took no notice of their talk till I heard my mother saying, "I think Sophy is a Christian."

I was astonished. Sophy a Christian! She was very near my own age, and I played with her every day, and never knew that she was a Christian. I had been well taught, but still I had in my inmost soul a feeling that a Christian child should be very sober and quiet, and not care for play, but only for reading the Bible and other good books. I said nothing, but determined in my heart to watch Sophy and see if she acted like a Christian.

She did not know I was watching her as I played with my dolls by her side; but I remember today that she seemed cheerful and happy, and as much interested in our play as usual. She helped me kindly when I needed help; I saw her face flush as she kept back the impatient word when I vexed her; I noticed when she went without complaint to do an irksome task; and I knew when she retired for secret prayer. I was convinced that she was a Christian, and longed to be one myself.

So, though she knew it not, Sophy witnessed for Christ in her daily life. And so may every Christian child with Jesus' help, witness daily for him, speak of his love in the prayer meeting, and live for him at home and everywhere. "Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure and whether it be right."—The Christian Mirror.

The Sowers.

In their new fields and in their old, they have gone forth for another year. The parables of the sowor and of the tares, should be well studied by them at the beginning, and also in the progress of their work. At the beginning that they may not be discouraged by the obstacles which are sure to arise, and in the progress that they may not be surprised at the hinderances which the work itself seems to develop. With his field definitely assigned him, and with his seed-basket in hand the thing to be doue is plain. He is to go forth and sow. This is the simple line of duty. There may be some art in the work. All hands are not equally deft in scattering the seed. There is room for the exercise of judgment and discrimination, but there is no human skill or wisdom that can assure us that there shall not be some apparent loss.

These are the chances that the husbandman takes. The wayside, the stony places, the thorns, are in the account, while he looks to the good ground for a return for his labor. In getting a harvest from that he can afford to lose what is seemingly inevitable. He would choose to have nothing but good ground, and that every precious grain should grow to perfection. These waysido hearers are very trying, and to witness the withering and the choking of those that received the seed in stony places, and among thorns, is often well calculated to drive the preacher to despair.

The Great Teacher knew this, and he has prepared his servants by placing before them the troubles which they must encounter. The proportion of the good ground to the bad is not given. It is more or less in different fields. These hinderances are to be looked for. As far as may be, they are to be guarded against. Both preachers and hearers are warned and instructed. Some of the seed has never sprouted; some that grew off hopefully has withered. Every pastor can identify these illustrations in any year's experience. He can call them by name who answer to the several classes so graphically depicted. He may mourn over them, but his rejoicing is in those who have heard, understood, and are fruitful.

The tares present a still more gloomy view of what the gospel has to encounter in the world. The wiles of the devil are revealed as opposing the truth. While the Son of Man is sowing, the devil is counter-sowing. In the same field, and side by side, the powers of darkness and of light are struggling for the mastery. It is natural that a spirit of impatience should arise in the heart of the gospel-worker. To be thus circumvented and thwarted by Satan would seem to be a reproach to God and to his Son. Surely divine power ought to be put forth to pull up the tares. The armies of the living God should be commissioned and sent to uproot, by force, these intruders. The field is the world, but it is God's world, and not the devil's. Certain forms and aspects of evil arise in the shadow of Christian institutions, and owe their vitality and power for mischief to their semblance of the good. The tares are the children of the wicked one, but not all of his children. They describe a class, whether in the church or out of it, resembling, and yet antagonizing, godliness.

What is passive and what is active are displayed in these teachings as obstacles and discouragements to the gospel sower. Some of his work comes to nothing, and all of it has to contend with the subtle and tireless activity of Satan. The sower comforts himself with the thought that the good ground is secure, but he has disclosed to him immediately the startling fact that there are other and evil sowers in the field. He is wrestling against principalities and powers, "and against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." In all of these parabolic disclosures the sowers of salvation have a useful manual. They have before them what appears to be, and what is, in reality, a very plain and simple duty. But there is in it care, toil, anxiety and watchfulness. Let them not be surprised or discouraged when these revelations and predictions of their Lord are realized in their experience.

Let them be careful to sow the good seed of the word, the pure, unmixed and unadulterated gospel. Preachers may not be able to keep the thorns out of the church, nor the tares out of the world, but they can keep both out of their sermons. The sower in natural husbandry is most careful about the purity of the seed he sows. The spiritual sower must be equally careful. For the comfort of all we have this: "He that goeth forth and weeping, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

Sound at the Core.

Our Missionary Secretary, Dr. Wilson, said, in his address to the Louisiana Conference, that the missionary spirit was the core of Christianity, and that where the church was not sound in this respect there was neither health nor effectiveness anywhere. All this we steadfastly believe, and we put it in print that all our readers may think about the matter. He cannot be a sound Christian who is not constrained by the love of Christ. Individuals make up the church. A few of them are imbued with the missionary spirit, while the most are but little concerned about the conversion of the heathen. They have little thought of the kingdom of Christ beyond their own weekly prayer meeting, the support of their pastor, and the maintenance of the gospel in the locality in which they live. There are probably tens of thousands who do not care a button for China or Mexico. They imagine that it is as much as they can do to take care of themselves, and, until this is done, it is unreasonable to ask them to contribute to foreign missions. Had the apostles and their Christian contemporaries been of their mind, the gospel would never have spread much beyond Jerusalem, and they would themselves be heathens to-day.

That people give little for missions is only a symptom. The disease is at the core. The money is not the important thing at all. It is the lack of interest, the almost utter indifference that is alarming. If people have the right spirit, what they can give will be given without much urging. Instead of being straitened in our operations for want of money, the real trouble should be how to lay it out. The present state of things would be reversed if the core of the church were sound. The overflowing and abundant contributions would demand enlargement of the work. The new wine of a true missionary spirit would burst the old bottles of past methods and measures, and compel expansion. Cannot something be done to awaken an interest, and to arouse the conscience of the church? In the stations, why not devote one prayer meeting in the month to missions? and why should not several sermons a year be preached on the subject in every charge? Our preachers must give more attention to the matter, or there will be little improvement on the past.

It may be a disadvantage to preach on the subject only when a collection is to be taken. The effort should not be so much for money as for the enlightening and awakening of a right Christian conscience. What we should seek is that people have right views and feelings, and that they simply do their duty. The advocate of missions is on the true ground when he tells his hearers that the money he wants is the least of all. The more vital interest is that they be constrained by the love of Christ, that they adequately realize their responsibility to God, and that they do their duty as followers of Christ.

The chief business of every church is missionary. Its existence and organization are a base for advancing the work of God, and for aggressive operations. The Capua of the militant host is this resting in home-quarters, and losing sight of the conquests which the Captain of our salvation calls us to achieve. An enervated and feeble life is certain to obtain when the faith and effort of the church are withdrawn from the conversion of the world. The robust, energetic and self denying spirit which missionary enterprise develops infuses power into the entire body of Christ. Let the heart be stirred by an enthusiasm on this subject, and the whole system will be warmed, thrilled and beautified by the glow of health. It will quicken and vitalize every department of church work. The pastors will be better supported, Sunday-school interests will be revived, and revivals in the home fields will be promoted. If we would save ourselves we must aim at the salvation of the world. The chief thought of our churches now is simply to save themselves, their children, and the community about them. A handsome church, a bright and attractive Sunday-school, an entertaining preacher, and altogether a snug church home for our own comfort and enjoyment, are the sum of our plans. The real mission of the church is overlooked, and therefore the richest blessings are withheld.

Not sound at the core, there is something of decay in every part. A type of religion is being fostered that is selfish, narrow and enfeebling. Our people are being straitened in their own bowels when God would have them "arise, walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it;" and when he brings them forth abroad, bids them look toward heaven, and tell the stars, and declare to them, as to Abraham of old: "So shall thy seed be."

Read and Respond.

We very earnestly desire that our agents and subscribers furnish the ADVOCATE with items of interest from all sections of the church. The state of the church, methods of finance, what is being done in the way of church and parsonage buildings; accounts of revivals, the condition of the country, the crops, and everything that is likely to be of interest and of advantage to the church. It is manifest that such items of local church news can only be obtained for our columns by those who are on the ground. We shall be glad to hear from all, and frequently.

Especially would we urge our brethren in charge of schools and colleges within the bounds of the patronizing Conferences to keep these important educational interests before the people by supplying us with occasional communications representing their condition and needs. If any of them have not been fully represented in the columns of the ADVOCATE it is no fault of ours, as we have published everything sent us. It would be well for those at the head of these institutions to furnish us such data as they wish published, or to select persons suitable to do it. In furnishing accounts of commencements the matter should not be left to chance or haphazard, but let some competent person be selected who will do the business promptly and with judgment.

Our columns are, of course, open for contributions from all who have something to say. There are many gifted men and women in the church whose pens ought not to be idle. As a rule, we cannot publish very long articles, nor is it often expedient to publish serials. All contributions are necessarily subject to the judgment of the editor. His duty to the church and to the subscribers is to furnish them with the best paper he can, and to protect them from what is either hurtful, uninteresting or useless. They are supposed to pay for matter worth reading, and what is of no interest to the most of them should not be permitted to occupy much space. We can use articles from one-half to one column long promptly and with advantage when longer articles are necessarily delayed or declined. We are sure that our contributors will help us in their department by writing, and that they will, as far as may be, aid us in filling part of our columns with a varied and attractive array of original matter.

The Living Sacrifice.

Christianity is eminently a spiritual religion, and in this differentiated from all other religions. True Christianity has its "form" as well as its spiritual power, but the superstitious religions had nothing but "form." These material and sensual religions reared magnificent and costly temples, they had venerable and splendid priesthoods. They worship had smoking altars, fragrant incense, and swelling strains of music; but it was not the worship of the spiritual nature. They offered in sacrifices birds and animals, they hung the walls of their temples with votive offerings of silver and gold, but did not offer their affections and their consecrated lives. But the religion of the Bible demands the spiritual worship of a spiritual God. This sacrifice is not to terminate in local and temporary act, but the acceptable sacrifice is to be "a living," a life-long sacrifice. We are not in our auspicious times called to die for Christ—men have been, but it may be said, this has been exceptional, and has not entered into the contemplation of the great plan—rather we are to live for Christ—a thing may be quite as hard to do. A great authority in the science of human nature has said: "Men will pray for Christ, quarrel for Christ, fight for Christ, and even die, imagining it was for Christ, in short, do anything save live for Christ."

A consecrated life is a living sacrifice, saying ever: Not my will, but thine be done. It is a laying ones self upon the altar of God. "I give myself away; it is all that I can do." All my time, my talents, my wealth and substance consecrated to the praise and service of God, and through all life. A living sacrifice, a consecration of all my activities to God. Nothing dead, nothing silent, nothing still, but alive, vocal and alert; a life of prayer and love.

Such a sacrifice, such a man, is ever saying, by his whole intention and his entire influence: "Religion is the truest thing, the wisest thing, the best thing, and the most important of all things."

If a living sacrifice is the demand of God, and if we have justly conceived and described it, it remains to inquire are our lives "a living sacrifice." Anything less is a "blemished offering. It has some ill-favoredness, and is an abomination to the Lord. The first and great commandment is: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." Does any cursed idol lurk within, and strive to rival God, then turn it out: you are the temple of the Holy Ghost, and you may not innocently or safely defile God's temple.

W.

Well Explained.

That disparity seems to be a good sign and not a bad one. The Wesleyan Christian Advocate clears up the matter in the following article:

"The Christian Advocate, (Nashville) of January the 4th, has the following paragraph:

"'In looking over the statistics of the several Annual Conferences we are struck with the disparity between the number of Church members and Sunday-school scholars. For example, here is one Conference in which over forty thousand Church members are reported, and only fourteen thousand Sunday-school children. Considering the average number of children in Methodist families, this is a small showing. What is the cause? We hope this inquiry will put many to thinking.'

"We had been thinking before we saw the above, and had read the same figures with joy and hope. Thus: Suppose all the children in the Sunday-school, say from seven to eighteen years of age, are members of the Church, as they ought to be. Is not that a gratifying fact? But, in such a case, the children of the Sunday-school, being all counted as members of the Church, would go to increase the number of Church members, and increase the disparity between the number of Church members and the number of Sunday-school scholars. Now as you lessen the number of Church members among the Sunday-school scholars you lessen that disparity, other things remaining equal. But you have a much less desirable state of things. We are disposed to take this hopeful view of the disparity in question from the consideration of well-known facts. Some ten years ago, when the revival of the Sunday-school work began in the Church, South, there was a simultaneous revival of effort for the conversion of the Sunday-school children. Then followed a strong conviction that we had been negligent of duty towards the children in respect to their conversion. Sunday-school magazines and papers were filled with well written articles favoring the effort to secure the conversion of the children. Pastors, too, began to report to Quarterly Conferences and District Conferences, the number of Sunday-school scholars converted during the year, and the number of unconverted children in their Sunday-schools. Therefore, while we have not the statistics for a mathematical demonstration of our solution, we have good ground for the hopeful opinion that we express. We verily believe that the proportion of Sunday-school scholars who are members of the church is fifty per cent. larger to-day than it was even ten years ago. In most parts of our country the time is past when parents discouraged their children from professing religion, and joining the Church on account of their being so young. Thanks to the blessed Spirit, who has given us a better understanding of our Saviour's words: "Feed my lambs."

"Nevertheless, if in any Conference there is neglect of the children, and the disparity alluded to grows out of a failure to look up the children and get them into the Sunday-school, we would not in the least blunt the sting of the Christian Advocate's inquiring rebuke."

Notice.

Please to direct all communications on business simply to "the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," 112 Camp street.

Communications for the editorial department should be sent to the editor.

Our agents and correspondents are requested to observe the above instructions.

Our Nashville cotemporary, Dr. Fitzgerald, has a good word in behalf of Presiding Elders. As he is not on a District he has a right to be heard. He says:

We read with pleasure the accounts sent us of the generous provision made for the preachers in charge. The people are doing the right thing in the right way for their pastors. But what of the Presiding Elder? He is put off from the perquisites that help the men on stations and circuits. Being always on the wing, he seldom gets a marriage fee. Donation parties and loads of provisions are not for him. He belongs to the whole district in general, but to no part of it in particular. He relies solely on his claim assessed upon the several charges. If it can be paid he can squeeze through, but with no margin. If it be withheld or delayed there must be trouble. This office bearer in the Church, who represents so fully its itinerancy, should not be crippled or embarrassed by failure to meet promptly his just claims. Do not send him on his toilsome rounds with an anxious and burdened heart. Pay him his due, and send him rejoicing on his way; pay him his due, and send him flying, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth.

From China.

The following from Bro. Lambuth is published in the Nashville Christian Advocate:

SOOCHOW, CHINA, Dec. 3, 1878.

J. W. MANKER, Esq.—Dear Brother:

I wrote you in October that our third quarter's draft had reached us. The fourth quarter's draft is already due, and will be needed in January next. This will be the last of the appropriation of 1877-78. I am anxious to get the first quarter of the appropriation for 1878-79 by the first of April next, if possible. I want Brother Parker to commence on his house at that time. Please let me hear from you. We are all well. The Lord is with us and is blessing this work. Miss Rankin is with us, and has commenced her work in earnest. What a joy it brings to our hearts to see one and another coming to help us in this glorious work! And now the news of Brother Reid's coming to help us; and bringing his dear wife with him; we can only praise God for all this good news. And to feel, too, that dear Christian friends are praying for us and holding up our hands! Praise be to our God!

Yours in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

A committee has been formed in Rev. Dr. Post's church, of St. Louis, to ascertain what families in it take no religious paper or magazine, and to call their attention to the importance of supplying themselves.

The above is clipped from an exchange. That committee is called for in many charges. It would be a good work everywhere to canvas for the religious paper. That is a good mark to work to: A religious paper in every family. When all the pastors and working members resolve upon it, the work will be done.

Mrs. Cynthia Nixon, widow of the venerable Thomas Nixon, late of the Mississippi Conference, died at the residence of her son-in-law, James E. W. Cook, near Cayuga, Miss., November 5, 1878. Sister Nixon was in her seventieth year. Her end was peace. An obituary notice will appear next week.

A PROPOSITION.

MR. EDITOR: Please say to the brethren of the Mississippi Conference, and all concerned, that Bro. J. E. Jagers and I will be two of one hundred to give $10 each to have Bro. Jones' History of Methodism in Mississippi published. We are exceedingly anxious to see the book in print while Bro. Jones is among us. Let all who will give the amount specified send their names to the ADVOCATE at once.

Your brother,

HOLLY SPRINGS, MISS., Jan. 15, 1879.

The Rev. J. H. Scruggs, Aberdeen, Miss., writes, January 8, that Bishop Paine's health is feeble—we infer that while it may not have improved, it is not worse. May we hear soon that his health is improving! Our correspondent writes further that the Bishop's wife has been dangerously ill, but, under the blessing of God, she was thought to be out of danger. We sympathize with our excellent sister, and at the same time rejoice to learn that she has been spared to her family and friends.—Western Methodist.

TO THE BRETHREN OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Please write to Bro. William H. Watkins, at Jackson, giving him your present postoffice address, also the amount of money you paid for publishing minutes, so he may know where to send your minutes.

HOLLY SPRINGS, MISS., Jan. 15, 1879.

Indirect Preparation.

Bishop Simpson's fourth Yale lecture was on the above topic. We quote from the conclusion of the lecture as follows:

Various plans are pursued in collecting and preserving materials. The use of scrap-books and commonplace books cannot be too earnestly commended for preserving such items as may come under your notice, and for which you may have need of ready reference. In reading it is well to have a pencil in hand and a note-book convenient, not only for the sake of quotations, or for marks of reference, but what is still more valuable, to preserve the thoughts which are suggested to your own minds, rather than stated by the author. As an element of preparation, the pen should be freely used. I speak not now of the question of written or extemporaneous sermons, but of that facility in writing which a minister should possess. This habit is absolutely essential. You should write much, and strive to write well; yet, first, write much. All nature is luxuriant in infancy. What an immense number of leaves crowd each other and fall away, what a profusion of buds and flowers, ten times more than any tree can develop in fruit; so it is with the young writer—write first, trim afterward; pour out your thoughts as they occur, even should their order not be the most harmonious, or the connection the most perfect. The more rapidly you write, the more naturally. The great difficulty with many is that their ideal is so high, their standard so perfect, that they fear to write at all. They commence, and are discouraged. While correcting one sentence they lose the glow which would have given warmth and beauty to the next. Write much, if you only write letters or articles for the daily or weekly press. Write frequently on theological topics, and occasionally write sermons—whether you deliver them or not—for the purpose of securing proper form and length, and the proper relation of the various parts.

The studies of a minister should not be confined exclusively to theological reading. He should, as opportunity serves, make himself master, as far as may be, of the general principles of every valuable science, especially of mental philosophy. He should also love to roam throughout nature. Everywhere there are marks of his Father's hand. The rocks of the earth, the plants and animals of its surface, the currents of the sea and of the air, and the great globes that move through space, all display the wisdom and power of the great Creator. The minute as well as the vast may furnish lessons of value and illustrations which will both interest and profit. A minister should, as far as practicable, intermeddle with all wisdom, yet so as ever to keep Christ as the great central figure. He should also keep in view the work which he is performing—the erection of a great spiritual edifice. All subsidiary knowledge is but as the scaffolding.

The range of knowledge is so wide, the wants of congregations so varied, and the current of public opinion so changeable, that every department of literature and science may become tributary to the preacher's influence. In my childhood and youth I had a constant passion for study. To some extent I examined the chief languages of western Europe. It was with me a simple curiosity; but I have since found that every branch of study has come to my aid. It has been my lot to hold Conferences or ministerial meetings in all those countries whose languages I had studied. I was not able to talk to any extent in those languages, but I read them, and could soon understand the deliberations of my brethren.

In keeping abreast of the day, let him not spend too much time on the daily press or the lighter class of magazines. It is one of the triumphs of Christian civilization that we can have news at our breakfast table from all parts of the globe; but the daily press is not of itself an unmixed benefit—it tempts the student to dissipation of thought, and oftentimes his morning hours wear rapidly away while he is reading matters which interest him, but which are not essential to his important work. Like the bee, he should know how, in a few moments, to extract the honey from the flower, and then fly on without stopping to count the number of the petals, or to dwell on the beauty of the coloring. He should be like the business man who rapidly glances over the most important items, and then confines himself to the duties of his counting-room or office. In scientific and theological reviews there are frequently articles of great value, which the preacher cannot too carefully read and ponder; but while he is interested in the lighter reviews, and pleased with the style and structure of articles, he is very liable thus to spend his moments, which ought to be devoted to more solid reading or to pastoral duties.

Still it is difficult to fix any precise rule on this subject. The times breathe a free spirit. A wide range of topics is discussed in the daily press. Among the masses there are minds stirred with thoughts of great value. The preacher must not unfrequently grapple with specious forms of errors which are prevalent among the people; he must understand the arguments which are employed to sustain them, and which captivate so many. The more thoroughly people find him posted in matters of interest to them, the greater will be his influence over them; yet that influence will be of little value unless it helps him to draw them to the Saviour.

The subjects for preaching cover an immense realm, and only a glance can be cast over them. Negatively, the object of the pulpit is not simply to teach or enforce morality from any heathen or natural standpoint; it will teach a high and pure morality, but it will present it as the issues from a heart changed and purified and filled with love to God and man. Morality that springs not from the heart is like a tree from which the limbs that bear bad fruit are pruned and cut and cast away. Christian morality is the life of a young tree, permeating every limb and twig, and producing beautiful flowers and healthy fruit. The tree itself must be changed in its nature. "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." Nor is the object of preaching the correction of mind by the explanation of its laws. No amount of knowledge or metaphysics can change the human heart. The knowledge of machinery will not correct its errors, or set it in motion. Nor is the great theme of the ministry to be natural religion. Motives of value and power may be drawn from nature. Men may be taught the influence and results of their actions, but neither these nor the voice of nature have power to change the currents of the human soul. Much less should the minister preach himself. The pulpit is the place for the Master. The teacher utters divine thoughts, and he who brings himself, in the form of supposed argument, oratory or rhetoric, for personal exhibition, degrades and pollutes the sacred desk. Luther said: "I myself know nothing of Luther; will know nothing of him. I preach nothing of him—only Christ. The devil may take Luther (if he can.) If he leave Christ in place, it will be well with us too."

The great question for the pulpit to ask is that propounded by the Master himself: "What think ye of Christ?" and the answer which it gives to the world, which still echoes the question, must be a clear exposition, not only of his character, but of that character manifested in the salvation of men. When John sent to ask questions concerning Christ, instead of answering them directly, he appealed only to his wonderful works, which proved him to be the Son of God.

The minister should grapple with great themes, and not occupy the time of the people with trivial subjects. The interests of eternity may to some individual, rest on the issue of a single sermon; and in some form, directly or indirectly, every sermon should lead to Christ. With what wonderful topics is the pulpit permitted to deal! The character of God in his omnipotence, omniscience and omnipresence, the responsibilities of man as a creature of God, formed by his divine hand, bearing the impress of his glorious image, breathing of his own breath, the object of a Saviour's death, the possible Son of God, and joint heir with Jesus Christ, who is the Creator and Lord of all, his responsibility as shown in his domestic and social relations, in the leadership of thought, the investigation of science, and the government of the world. Then, too, his glorious destiny; his conflict with and triumph over death and the grave; the resurrection of the body, strange and incomprehensible as it may be, and an immortality coeval with the duration of God himself. Then, too, the thought that his destiny is in his own hands—that, accepting Christ and obeying the divine law, he may dwell beside the throne of God himself; but that, rejecting Christ and the offers of mercy, he "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." These are topics of immense moment, and which interest every one of his hearers. How pitiable is it to hear leaders of thought say that they cannot tell whence they came, nor whither they are going; that life, in its origin and its end, is wholly involved in mystery, and that eternity has no voice which has reached the sons of time.

Springing out of these great questions is the whole circle of human duty. All men are our brothers, because we are the offspring of a common Father. We cannot deny or ignore that common brotherhood, or shrink from its duty, without grieving the Father of us all.

Not only must the various topics of preaching be carefully studied and selected, but the relation of these parts, each to the other, is a matter of no small moment. The law of God, in its great and solemn injunctions, should be distinctly set forth. Our congregations should be gathered as around the base of Mount Sinai, while from its summit is heard the voice of God in those commandments which are unalterable and eternal in their character. The effect of these utterances will be that consciences shall be awakened, and hearts shall tremble. Some will say with Moses, "I do exceedingly fear and quake," when they behold the majesty of the law, the purity of God, and their own impurity. Others may be repelled, and will say: "Let not God speak to us any more." Some will object to the sternness of the law, and will say: "Prophesy smooth things;" but still that law must be preached. It brings the sinner to a recognition of his sins in having transgressed God's holy law, and shows him the fearfulness of the doom which is impending over him. The law must be followed by the gospel; the awakened sinner must be pointed to the Saviour, that he may see and feel that, deep as are the stains of his transgressions, the blood of Christ can wash them all away. There are many preachers who love to dwell on the gospel alone. They talk sweetly and beautifully of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of Christ. This is well. It is more than well—it is essential. But sometimes they go beyond this, and disclaim against the preaching of the law—intimate that it belongs to a past age, a less civilized society; that men now can best be moved by love alone, and rely wholly on its attractive power. Such a gospel may rear a beautiful structure, but its foundation is on the sand. No true edifice can be raised without its foundations being dug deep by repentance toward God, and then shall the rock be reached, and the building shall be through faith in Jesus Christ. The law without gospel is dark and hopeless; the gospel without law is ineffident and powerless. The one leads to servitude, the other to antinomianism. The two combined produce a godly out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

—Ex Governor Curtin is publishing some papers on Russia in the Christian Union, of which the following is an extract: "The Bible is an open book in Russia. You see it everywhere; there is no restraint. All religious worship is free. When the Emperor Joseph II, of Austria, visited St. Petersburg he was asked by Catharine, who was then the sovereign, what struck him as being the most remarkable thing in St. Petersburg. He said the Nefska Prospec, which is the great street, the 'Broadway' of the city. 'Because,' said he, 'at every fifty yards a man can worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. Swedish, Armenian, Roman Catholic, Lutheran, German, Reformed, English Episcopal Church, the latter regularly connected with the Bishopric of London, and Greek Cathedral and churches are all in that street, and protected by the government in the full enjoyment of their faith and belief. In the English Episcopal church, during the entire Crimean war, the Emperor Nicholas never interdicted the prayer for the Queen, and the British people resident in that city, who are generally very prosperous, were never interrupted in their business or limited in their rights of person or property. How long a Greek priest could have remained in London, and prayed for the success of the Czar over the Queen at that time, is a question easy to be answered. In a sense, an Oriental sense, the Russians are a very religious people. Whatever may be the defects of their religion, the Russians believe it thoroughly. It is a very crude kind of religion, and the worship is attended with a great deal of parade, music, and chanting; but the worshippers are very sincere. The priest has very little influence—indeed, almost no influence at all. The Russian takes his religion, he does not care whether the priest is sober or drunk. It is the religion he respects. The priests do not influence sentiment, nor do they attempt it. Many of them, it is true, are learned, highly cultivated men, devoted to their duties, and command the highest measure of veneration and respect. But there are others who are unlettered, of gross habits and bad morals, who do not deserve or receive such consideration."

—The statement has been made that the proclamation of the Queen Ranavalona II. of Madagascar, freeing the Mozambique slaves, has not been carried into execution. But the fact seems to be that it has been executed as far as could have been expected. Rev. J. Pearse gives the following account of his inquiries in one of the outlying provinces, where the proclamation was likely to be most disregarded:

"Nine months have passed away since the public reading of the proclamation; and, so far as my personal observation goes, the liberty then announced to the Mozambique slaves has been generally accepted and is fully enjoyed by them. Not to depend, however, on my own general observation since reading Mr. Street's letter, I invited one of the most respectable of the Mozambiques in this town to call upon me he is a member of our church, and the following are the questions I put to him and his replies to them: 'Are you free?' 'Yes.' 'What made you free?' 'The royal proclamations, made last year.' 'Are any of your companions free?' 'Yes.' 'What made them free?' 'That which made me free.' 'Do you know any Mozambiques here or round about here who are still slaves?' 'I do not know one adult; but there are several children born in this country, whose parents are dead or not known, and who have no tattoo marks upon them, as we adults have, and about them the owners dispute and have not given them up.' 'Of all the Mozambiques in Ambatondrazaka, how many do you know who are still with their previous owners?' 'One woman with and one woman and her child with.' 'Have they been forced into staying with their late owners, or is it their own choice to stay?' 'I do not know, but will inquire.' Having made inquiries, he returned, saying: 'They say that it is entirely their own choice, and they acknowledge that those with whom they are staying have no power whatever over them, either to sell them or to compel them to work for them.'

"I have made inquiries of another Mozambique, and he assures me that not one who has the tattoo marks upon the person, the distinguishing feature of the Mozambiques, is still held in slavery here; but, at the same time, he corroborates the remarks of the other man that there are children born in Madagascar, and having no tattoo marks who have not been given up by the owners."

—The Catholic priests take advantage of the presence of large numbers of Indians at New Westminster, British Columbia, to have special services for them. On a recent Sunday there were two masses, the church being overcrowded with Indians, some kneeling outside. They heard sermons in Chinook and sang the Lytie, Gloria, and Credo.

—The activity and energy of the Seventh Day Adventists are shown in the extent and results of their missionary labors. In each of their thirteen annual conferences there are missionary and tract associations, which circulated the past year millions of pages of tracts and periodicals and paid 170 families missionary visits. These societies report 3,102 members as the result of their labors.

—The question agitating the Free Church of Scotland now according to an advertisement of the "United Kingdom Anti-Papal League," is "Shall God's appointed music of the harp or the Devil's music of machinery prevail in the churches of Scotland?" If the latter, the nation will be made to walk with Popery that a Papist may then ascend the throne. To fight this battle, funds are required."

—The three leading Presbyterian churches of Scotland raised, last year, £70,000.

SELECT NOTES ON THE INTERNATIONAL SABBATH-SCHOOL LESSONS FOR 1879. Explanatory, illustrative and practical. With maps and chronological chart; table of signification, and pronunciation of proper names. By Rev. F. N. and M. A. Peloubet. Boston: Ira Bradley & Co.

The work is a handsome octavo of 251 pages. The scriptural text of the lessons is given with the usual references. The notes are voluminous, and in the main excellent. Some of them are not in accord, however, with our Methodist theology, but they are generally pertinent and valuable expositions. The illustrative notes are particularly entertaining, and will prove of great use to teachers. The work is for sale by our esteemed friend and brother, D. L. Mitchell, Presbyterian Depository, 94 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, $1 25.

—The Western Farmers Almanac, published by John P. Morton & Co., Louisville, Ky., is a very handsome publication, and filled with reading matter, both entertaining and useful. This is the fifty second year of its issue. Price, only ten cents.

—Appleton's Railway and Steam Navigation Guide for January has been received. This valuable publication is revised and issued monthly. D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price, twenty-five cents.

—Rev. Dr. Ahrens has laid on our table a copy of the minutes of the German Mission Conference. A handsome pamphlet, but all in the German tongue.

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE.—This work is before us, and those who send five cents to James Vick, Rochester, N. Y., for it will be disappointed. Instead of getting a cheap thing, as the price would seem to indicate, they will receive a very handsome work of 100 pages, and perhaps 500 illustrations—not cheap, but elegant illustrations, on the very best of calandered paper, and, as a set-off to the whole, an elegant colored plate, that we would judge cost twice the price of the book.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.—No 1805 of the Living Age, for the week ending January 18, contains an instalment of George MacDonald's "Sir Gibbie," and of Sarah Tytler's "The Bride's Pass;" an article by Prof. Goldwin Smith, on "The Greatness of England;" the conclusion of "Holidays in Eastern France;" "The Phœnicians in Greece," by A. H. Sayce, from the Contemporary Review; "A Worldlet within the World," Spectator; "Poor Creatures," Saturday Review; "The Death of the Princess Alice," Spectator, and the usual choice poetry, etc. The publishers still present to new subscribers for 1879 the six numbers of 1878, containing the first parts of MacDonald's "Sir Gibbie."

For fifty-two numbers of sixty-four large pages each—or more than 3 000 pages a year—the subscription price $8 is law; while for $10 the publishers offer to send any one of the American $4 monthlies or weeklies with the Living Age for a year, both postpaid. Littell & Gay, Boston, publishers.

MARRIED.

MELTON—EVERETT.—At the residence of the bride's father, Dr. George C. Everett, January 9, 1879, at Emory, Miss., R. H. Melton and Miss E. E. Everett, all of Holmes county, Miss.

ATTENTION of farmers and planters is called to the advertisement headed Good News. Mr. Clymer has good references, and his proposition is worthy of a trial. See advertisement on this page.

PAGES of names of our leading citizens testify to the great benefit to be derived from the use of the New Louisiana Remedy, and this home production is no doubt the greatest cough syrup of the age. It is guaranteed to contain no poison, is splendid for children, as well as adults, and now is the time to prove its efficacy by calling on your druggist for it. See advertisement in another column.

THE KOWANCO AUTOMATIC WINDMILL is said to be the cheapest made, and is protected by two patents. Certificates and testimonials of its value are mailed to parties interested, with an illustrated catalogue giving full particulars of its merits and superiority of other windmills, of which the leading features are lightness, strength and durability. See advertisement in another column.

SCHOOL BOOKS are a necessity, and many schools and teachers are seriously inconvenienced from lack of supply or facilities for procuring what are so essential to the advancement of their pupils. By the advertisement of the book depot, in another column, it will be seen that Mr. G. T. Lathrop makes that branch a special feature of his business, and offers inducements for regular supplies to the educators, as well as the derives of the Southwest. There is also a matter of interest to teachers or schools, drawing teachers, in his advertisement in another column of this issue.

Farm, Garden and Household.

USE OF MILK.—There is one article of diet which all persons may take under all conditions, and that, is milk. There are those who say they cannot take milk that it makes them bilious, etc; but that is not true. A person who is sick may take milk with the greatest possible advantage, because it contains, in a form easy of assimilation, all the elements essential for maintaining nutrition. It is the natural aliment of the young animal, and certainly answers a good purpose for the old animal, provided it is used properly. New milk, I do not hesitate to say, may be taken, as far as dyspepsia is concerned, in any and every condition. Perhaps it will require the addition of lime water, if milk acidity of the stomach is present; and perhaps a little gentian may be requisite to stimulate the stomach somewhat; and it may be necessary to give it in small quantities, and repeat it often, but ice-cold milk can be put into a very irritable stomach, if given in small quantities and at short intervals, with the happiest effects. We have now come to believe, contrary to the teaching of our fathers, that cold water, even ice-cold water, is a most beneficial drink, and, therefore, permit our patients to have it as often as they may wish, provided too much is not taken at one time. Now ten, which is a wholesome beverage, and withal, contributes somewhat to scandal, is very comforting, especially to a sick woman, and may be given without harm, if it is sufficiently diluted with milk. When made very weak—just strong enough to give flavor,—well supplied with milk, and perhaps a little sugar, it gives the patient a trifle of nourishment in a very palatable form.

CHICKEN SALAD.—The fowls for this purpose must be young and fine. Boil them and cut the meat, free from skin and fat, cut up into small pieces not larger than a half-inch square. Wash and split two large heads of celery and use the white; cut it also in half-inch pieces. Mix the chicken and celery together, and put in a salad bowl; cover and set away until just before you want to use it, then cover with mayonnaise sauce.

PLAIN BUTTER PUDDING.—One small baker's loaf, from which cut off the crust, and pour over the rest of the loaf one quart of boiling milk, which should be new; let it get perfectly cold; then beat it to a pulp, and stir in a small teacupful of flour, keeping the latter free of lumps; beat well in four eggs; and just as it goes in, one yeast powder should be stirred in. The eggs can be dropped in from the shell, beating all together, or the whites and yolks whisked separately and then added. Serve the pudding with hot sauce.

EARTH IT GARDEN PLANTS.—In the cultivation of garden crops the hoe and rake should be continually at work. Weeds should be taken in hand before they are barely out of the seed-leaf, and one-half the usual labor of vegetable gardening will be avoided. Hoeing or earthing up of most garden crops is of immense advantage in nearly every case. One would suppose that in our hot climate that culture would be much more beneficial; but a fair trial, say of every other row, or a bed of cabbages, will show a great difference in favor of the earthed up plants.—Western Rural.

TO MAKE YEAST.—Take three large potatoes, pare and grate them into an earthen bowl, add two tablespoonsful of sugar, and one of salt. Put two quarts of water into a porcelain kettle and when it boils put in one small handful of hops, let it boil while preparing the potatoes, strain the boiling hop water into the potato and stir thoroughly. When cold, add one teacupful of old yeast.

COOKING EGGS.—In boiling eggs don't boil them. Put them in boiling water and set the vessel on the hearth, and let it remain seven or eight minutes. This will cook the eggs clear through, just as it ought to be, without hardening the white near the shell. This hint is worth a barrel of eggs, except to those wretched mortals who take their eggs solid, and know no better.

STEWED BEETS.—Take the beets thinly, and cut in thin slices as many cut some onions, and put all together in a stew pan, with a little pepper and salt. Rub a bit of butter in flour and put it smooth in hot water, pour this over the beets; must cover them well and let it stew until the beets are quite tender. Then add the beet-seed time it will be ready. Wash and young one, or pour well over with it. Serve hot.

A cement made of gum shellac one part, and aqua ammonia ter parts will cement rubber.

THE NEW YORK SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed everyday during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: To present all the news in a readable shape, and to tell the truth though the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and of everything save the Truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper of the people. It is not the organ of any person, class, sect or party. There need be no mystery about its loves and hates. It is for the honest man against the rogues every time. It is for the honest Democrat as against the dishonest Republican, and for the honest Republican as against the dishonest Democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterances of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly when men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this republic was founded for the people. When ever the Constitution and constitutional principles are violated, as in the outrage now consummating at Albany, by which a mail not elected was placed in the President's office, where he still remains, it speaks out for the right. That is the SUN's idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in its programme for 1879.

THE SUN has fairly earned the hearty hate of all rascals, frauds and humbugs of all sorts and sizes. It hopes to deserve that hatred not less in the year 1879 than in 1878, 1877, or any year gone by. THE SUN is pelted by the mendacious day whipped cur-rents elderly with the villains up-to-date. It has both the disposition and the ability to attack, it renders the promptest, fullest and freest of accurate intelligence of whatever in the world is worth attention. To this and the increase and ongoing of well established prosperity will be liberally employed.

The present disjointed condition of parties in this country, and the uncertainty of the future lend an extraordinary significance to the events of the coming year. To predict with accuracy and clearness the exact situation in each of the varying phases, and of its import according to the well-known methods, the principles that should guide us through the labyrinth will be an important part of THE SUN's work for 1879.

We have the means of making THE SUN, as a political weapon, a terror, and a general newspaper more entertaining and more useful than ever before, and we mean to employ them freely.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the DAILY SUN, a four page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 55 cents a month, or $6 50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7 70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1 20 a year, postage paid. The SUNDAY SUN is filled with the choicest literature, tales, poems, sparkling miscellany, and the best matter of the week, while its reports of markets, its agricultural department, and its sermon, are unsurpassed. The WEEKLY SUN is largely read by the many farmers than any other publication. A high story with other valuable features, is given away each week. The Weekly SUN is read by half a million people, and its circulation is steadily increasing. Terms, postage paid: One copy one year, $1; two copies one year, $1 70; four copies one year, $3 20; ten copies one year, $7 50; twenty copies one year, $14; and one extra copy to the getter up of each club. Address, I. W. ENGLAND, Publisher of THE SUN, New York City.

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Byrd's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Byrd's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies, while the skin is the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory result. Three bottles for $5; if to accompany the order and balance to be paid when premium is delivered.

SCIENTIFIC.

EFFECT OF ELECTRICITY ON VEGETATION.—Probably every one who has entered a wood or a forest has noticed the stunted or scraggy growth of the underwood, and the cause of that peculiar condition has always been attributed to the fact that the shrubs or smaller trees were overshadowed by the foliage of the larger ones, and deprived of the light and air necessary to their full development. M. Grandeau, professor of the Ecole Forestiere, states that his researches on the subject led him to the conclusion that, although a certain effect was to be attributed to that cause, it was not sufficient to account for the great depreciation in the vegetation. After long reflection he came to the conclusion that the large trees acted as conductors of electricity, and thus deprived the undergrowth of an element necessary to their full development. In order to test his views he tried a series of experiments on various plants, but we need only to refer to one, which, although not the most striking, will fully elucidate the principle he advances, the means he employed, and the results obtained. In April, 1877, he took two tobacco-plants, each weighing 3 1-2 grammes, and having four leaves. They were both planted in boxes containing mold of identical quality, and placed side by side in a position favorable to their growth. But one of them had placed over it a cage, consisting of four iron rods 1 meter 50 centimeters high, who joined at the top, and covered with wire gauze, which permitted the free circulation of air, light and water, but completely protected the plant from the action of atmospheric electricity. They were left uninterfered with until the middle of August, when the results obtained were as follows: The plant in the open air had attained a height of 3 feet 5 inches, while the other was only 2 feet 4 inches; the former weighed 273 grammes, and the latter 140 grammes; when dried their respective weights were 30 grammes and 15 1-2 grammes. Similar experiments made with maize and wheat gave precisely analogous results, so that M. Grandeau has come to the conclusion that the electricity of the atmosphere is equally necessary to vegetation as sunlight, air and water.—Galignania's Messenger.

—In a communication to the British Association on Left Handedness, Dr. H. Muirhead thinks that peculiarity depends on which half of the brain takes the lead. Left-handedness once begun in a family is likely to run in it. Left-handed people, he had noticed, had the left foot one-third to one-eighth of an inch longer than the right.

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

AND DISEASES ARISING FROM IT.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains often of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low, and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he dislikes every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them exist, yet examination of the body after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

Dr. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, in cases of AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the best happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated; every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression Dr. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S Liver Pills bear the signature of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 2ND Camp Street.—This Institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE. Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicte of the late R. G. Raoul, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors to Mme Loquet Leroy, whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEART BURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHE as caused by acidity of the stomach.

The pleasant taste and milk-like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The susceptibilities of this preparation, and its perfect suitability are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop, magnified 25 diameters. The first the Calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved crystals and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable properties; in fact perfectly dissolved.

Be sure to get Milk of Magnesia. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

What is Christ to Us?

He is our Way, we talk in Him. He is our Truth, we embrace Him. He is our Life, we live in Him. He is our Lord, we choose Him to rule over us. He is our Master, we serve Him. He is our Teacher, instructing us in the way of salvation. He is our Prophet, pointing out the future. He is our Priest, having atoned for us. He is our Advocate, ever living to make intercession for us. He is our Saviour, saving to the the uttermost. He is our Bread, we feed upon Him. He is our Food, we enter it by Him. He is our Shepherd, leading us into green pastures. He is our true Vine, we abide in Him. He is the Water of life, we slake our thirst from Him. He is the fairest among ten thousand, we admire Him above everything. He is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of His person, we strive to reflect His likeness. He is the Upholder of all things, we rest upon Him. He is our Wisdom, we are guided by Him. He is our Righteousness, we cast all our imperfections upon Him. He is our Redemption, redeeming us from all iniquity. He is our Healer, healing all our diseases. He is our Friend, relieving us in all our necessities. He is our Brother, cheering us in our difficulties.—N. Bishop.

GOD'S CALL TO REST.

"And they heard the voice of the Lord in the cool of the day."

At morn each day God's angel wakes,
Kindles his lamp in heaven;
And its rays he flings
On both serfs and kings;
So his call to labor is given.

His lamp goes out; he lieth down,
And bids men follow him now.
From the warehoused street,
From the fishers' fleet,
From the plain and the mountain brow.

And though the voice be soft and low,
As soundless as the dew,
'Tis the Friend above,
'Tis His call of love,
Who through rest maketh all things new.

Then heed it well, and quiet be;
Follow this lead of heaven,
And in kindly shade,
That thy God hath made,
Take the rest to weariness given.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MACON, Ga., Jan. 20.—A special to the Telegraph and Messenger says a fire in Talahassee, Fla., destroyed the Episcopal Church rectory and school-house. The loss sustained is $8,000.

NIAGARA FALLS, Jan. 23.—The Vice-regal party spent yesterday visiting the scenery about the Falls. At Luna Island her Royal Highness set foot on American soil for the first time. The party then went to Prospect Park, which was beautifully decorated with flags and arches, and descended the inclined plane to the ice mound below the American Falls; they then crossed on the ice bridge to the Canada side.

RICHMOND, Jan. 24.—The East Hanover Presbytery to-day, by a vote of fifteen to six, removed the sentence of suspension from Dr. E. T. Baird, late secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, who was suspended last year for alleged irregularities in connection with the funds of the concern, and restored to the office of the gospel ministry.

GALVESTON, Jan 27.—A special to the News, from Luling, says: A tornado struck the town of Lockport, Sunday evening, demolishing forty houses, including churches, court-house and the Masonic hall. One child was killed and several persons badly hurt.

FOREIGN.

ROME, Jan. 23.—The Vatican will shortly take steps to re-establish relations with the Mexican Government. Should negotiations prove unsuccessful, the wants of the Mexican church will be supplied in the best manner possible, without the intervention of the government.

LONDON, Jan. 23.—A Vienna dispatch says: It is expected that the importation of woolens, leather and other Russian products, likely to carry infection, will shortly be prohibited.

The Sanitary Commission is instructed to take all sanitary measures, without regard to trade interests. A case of plague is reported at Nijni, Novgurod.

LONDON, Jan. 23.—Severe cold weather prevails. Much suffering and destitution is reported in all parts of Great Britain.

MARSEILLES, Jan. 23.—Ex-President Grant and family embarked to-day on board the French mail steamer Labourdonnais, for India.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—The Times, in its financial article this morning, says: On account of the dearth of good investments people are beginning to look towards United States four per cent. bonds. We believe the syndicate has already sold to jobbers and others here a considerable portion of the amount it has just contracted for.

TIRNOVA, Jan. 24.—The constitution for Bulgaria has been ratified by the Czar of Russia, and has arrived here. It will be translated into the Bulgarian language and committed to foreign consuls and the Bulgarian Assembly. The time consumed in translation will retard the meeting of the Assembly to the 10th of February, when it will be opened by Korsokoff, Russian Governor of Bulgaria.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—According to the British Medical Journal, great alarm prevails in Eastern Europe over the spread up the Volga river, in Southeastern Russia, of an extremely fatal disease believed to be the plague.

It is thought to have been brought to Russia by two regiments of Cossacks returning from the war in Turkey. The disease was regarded at first as a variety of typhus fever, and neglected, but its mortality soon compelled the logical authorities to take steps for its restriction. Rigid quarantine was enforced against Astrakan, where it originated, but the panic stricken inhabitants of that city fled in all directions and scattered the germs of infection over the province of Samara and Saratov, lying along the river Volga, higher up.

In spite of all efforts at restriction, it soon reached Tsaritzin Baritzin, an important trading town on the Volga, connected by rail with the whole of Russia and Eastern Europe, and finally appeared in Nijni Novgorod, only a few hours distant from Moscow. Some Russian newspapers consider the diseases only a species of malignant typhus fever; but the St. Petersburger Medecinische Wochenschrift, of January 11th, says it cannot be doubted, from the tenor of communications to official papers, that it is plague. Dr. Zoiekauer and Prof. Botkin conclude from its rapid spread and extraordinary mortality (there being few if any recoveries,) that it is the plague in its worst form. The most rigid quarantine is enforce against infected towns and villages, which are divided into districts and not allowed to communicate with one another.

The Vienna Medical Review states that about one-third of the physicians in Russia died during the late war, and insists upon the importance, in the interest of the whole of Europe, of sending medical assistance to Russia and helping her to keep down her malignant enemy.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Advices from Rio Janeiro to the 7th state that drought and small-pox are increasing in the north and east provinces. Four hundred and seventy-three deaths from small-pox have occurred in the capital of the province of Ceara in twenty days ending December 21st.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 26.—The Russian and Turkish governments have agreed to a clause of the definite treaty of peace, stipulating that the Russians shall evacuate Turkey within thirty-five days of the signature of the treaty.

Pre-Millenarians and the Kingdom.

A series of very powerful and convincing articles has recently appeared in Zion's Herald, by Rev. Dr. Daniel Steele. The sixth article of the series is as follows:

We object to the pre-millenarian theory because its definition of the kingdom of Christ makes it an institution altogether different from the church, and entirely in the future. A glance at the diagram will show the church as coming to an end on the earth before the kingdom is set up. The Chiliast represents the kingdom as coming only at the descent of the King in person, and as then set up suddenly by almightiness without the aid of human agency. But when we look into the New Testament we find no such difference in the use of the terms "church" and "kingdom." They seem to be used interchangeably. The kingdom is to be established by preaching, and it is to develop gradually till its ultimate triumph. The generation to whom John the Baptist and Christ preached were urged to repent because the kingdom of heaven was at hand. We fail to see the cogency of this motive if the kingdom was not to be set up till after 1,800 or 18,000 years. St. Paul writes a thanksgiving epistle to the Colossians, in which he expresses his gratitude to the Father "who hath translated us into the kingdom of His dear Son." Christ himself spoke of the kingdom of God as within, or among, His hearers. The disciples were taught to pray for its complete triumph on the earth. Parables illustrative of its slow progress, but ultimate universality, were spoken. The kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard-seed, which becomes a tree so great that the birds lodge in the branches. The astonishing development of Christ's kingdom from small beginnings through long ages is here plainly taught. It is perfectly puerile to assume that these birds are foul birds of prey, symbolizing the gigantic corruptions of the Christian church. Yet we have again and again met with this exegesis in the writings of modern millenarians.

In Christ's comparison of the kingdom to leaven deposited in the meal, He intended to teach the gradual diffusion, the pervasive and assimilative power, and the universal prevalence of the kingdom of heaven. Every unprejudiced reader, even in the Infant Sunday-school, sees this meaning in the parable. How do the Chiliasts dispose of this parable? The wise ones do as the Scotch preacher did with a passage which he could not harmonize with predestination: "My brethren, let us look this verse square in the face and pass on." But some millenarians are not wise enough to follow so good an example, but confidently expound it thus: "Leaven always is used in the Bible to represent evil or corruption." Hence in the language of Rev. H. M. Parsons: "The parable of the leaven represents the results which will be manifested in the same kingdom during the age from the corruptions introduced by those who are within the church. The meal will be leavened with heresies and perversions during all this dispensation." Rev. W. T. Machny, who was imported from England to strengthen the Prophetic Conference, stood up in the Clarendon Street Baptist Church in Boston, November 21, and endorsed this exegesis, adding that "Christ speaks of only three kinds of leaven—that of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy; that of the Sadducees, which is infidelity; and that of the Herodians, which is worldliness." This I declare to be the leaven of the parable, the working of which can be seen everywhere in the church."

One knows not which to wonder at the most—the shallowness of this piece of sophistry, or the presumption of the man who attempts to impose it on a cultivated Christian audience. "Let us examine it for a moment." What is it that is like leaven, the symbol of corruption? The kingdom of heaven. What do the three measures of meal represent? The church. What is the lesson of the parable? The progress of corruption and deterioration in the outward visible church. How long is the leaven to spread? Till the whole church is corrupted. When is the kingdom of Christ to be set up? After the leaven of corruption, the kingdom of heaven, has completely ruined the church by its "heresies and perversions." Well may Dean Alford say: "It will be seen that such an interpretation cannot for a moment stand, on its own ground; but much less when we connect it with the parable of the mustard-seed. The two are intimately related. The latter was of the inherent, self-developing power of the kingdom of heaven as a seed containing in itself the principle of expansion; the former (the leaven) represents the power which it possesses of penetrating and assimilating a foreign mass, till all be taken up into it. And the comparison is not only to the power, but to the effect, of leaven also, which has its good as well as its bad side; and for that good is used, viz.: to make wholesome and fit for use that which would otherwise be heavy and insalubrious." This gifted annotator, a strong Chiliast, but not run mad with millenarian vagaries, proceeds at length to show the power of the gospel leaven. 1. To penetrate the whole mass of humanity. 2. The transforming power of the "new leaven" on the whole being of individual. Says Trench: "In fact, the parable does nothing less than set forth to us the mystery of regeneration, both in its first act, which can be but once, as the leaven is but once hidden; and also in the consequent renewal of the Holy Spirit, which, as the ulterior working of the leaven, is continual and progressive." Thus we array these scholarly and sober expositors against the strange and erroneous exegesis of millenarians so intent on removing a difficult text out of their way that they foist upon it a meaning never intended by Christ, in order to make Him teach their doleful doctrine that the church is becoming more and more corrupt, the world is hopelessly shipwrecked, and the pentecostal dispensation is a stupendous failure. From such a dismal view of Christianity, and from such a misinterpretation of a plain parable, giving a hopeful view of the expansion and universal prevalence of the kingdom of heaven established by Christ, we beg to be delivered.

We believe with Neander that the relation of the church to the kingdom is that of a species to a genus, or of a part to a whole. The church is the kingdom begun.

The millenarian conception of the earthly kingdom of Christ, entirely different from His present spiritual reign in the church, is strikingly like the Jewish idea of the Messianic kingdom, founded on a literal interpretation of the prophecies. If their gross literalism is at last to be realized in an earthly and visible kingdom, we do not see the culpability of the Jews in rejecting the Nazarene, who failed to exhibit those signs of Messiahship which their own prophets had taught them to expect when His kingdom should be set up. For it has been well said that there is no perspective in prophecy. Hence it was absolutely impossible for the Jews to discriminate between Christ's first coming to found His church, and His second advent to found His kingdom. The brightness of the earthly kingdom so entirely eclipsed the colorless, spiritual kingdom, or church, that the Hebrew nation seem to be justified in discarding the spiritual kingship of Jesus Christ, who was attended by no such signs of world-wide temporal dominion as the millenarians now find in the Old Testament prophecies. But there is no such vindication of the Jews possible, because their culpability lies in the fact that while there is but one kingdom of Christ on earth, and that is spiritual, they were, as a nation, not dwelling in the spiritual altitudes which would have enabled them to view the Star of Bethlehem in its true character, undimmed by the clouds of sensuality and worldliness. Hence, on the commonly-received view that the church is the spiritual kingdom of Christ, and the only kingdom which He will establish on earth, the ancient and modern Jews have no excuse. On the theory of the Chiliast, they have an excuse for rejecting Him who came to them without the prophetic insignia of a king.

Another very curious fact in the millenarian scheme is that the nearer the Second Advent, the less influential is it to induce in the Jew submission to Christ. Let me amplify this point: My commission is to preach the gospel to every creature. This includes the Jews. Let me suppose that I have a congregation of Hebrews whom I wish to lead to Christ. My first effort would be to gain an intellectual assent to the proposition that Jesus is the true Messiah, by reasoning with them in Pauline style out of the Scriptures. Having produced an intellectual conviction, I should next proceed to sway their wills to an immediate acceptance of the Nazarene as their personal Saviour. What would be my great argument? "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, with His mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power." My Israelites, in terror, ask me if this is a final and irreversible sentence for disobedience to Christ. I tell them, with tears, that it is even so. Under the power of the Spirit attending the word, some are constrained to bow the knee to Christ crucified, who had been a stumbling block to them all their lives. Knowing the terrors of the Lord, I have saved some. But suppose that I had called in a millenarian to do this critical work of presenting motives to sway their stubborn Jewish wills? His course of argument would be thus: Repent of your sins, and receive Jesus as your Saviour and Lord, because He is soon coming to set up a kingdom, gathering the Jews, at least a third of them, to Jerusalem, where they will all be suddenly converted, and be the chief promoters of His kingdom among the Gentiles. "How long," ask they, "before this great event?" "It may occur to-day; all the signs indicate that it is near," is the answer. "If this is so, we think that we will not put ourselves to the inconvenience and suffering of the persecution of our brethren for embracing Jesus. We will wait and take our chances of being alive and of being converted en masse when Jesus comes. This will be easier, and will be attended by no persecution by a stubborn remainder." Thus the nearer the Second Advent, the less is its motive power for the Jew to believe in Christ.

Can such a system of doctrine be true which thus weakens the grand motive to evangelical faith? The common or orthodox view of the second coming of Christ to pass final sentence upon the race, affords just as great inducements to repent to the Jew as to the Gentile, and the motive in both cases is intensified by the near approach of the Judge eternal.

Fraternity.

Dr. Whedon, of the Methodist Episcopal Church Quarterly, and Dr. Wiley, president of Emory and Henry College, Virginia, have had some controversy lately. From Dr. Wiley's letter to Dr. Whedon, which Zion's Herald refused to publish, and which we find in the Richmond Christian Advocate, we quote:

The facts ought to be known widely, especially through the Methodist Episcopal Church. Here they are—briefly but truthfully stated:

In the city of Knoxville, Tennessee, the church edifice belonging to the Southern Methodist Church was used by the United States' troops during the late war, and after the war application was made to the government for damages done thereto. Damages were allowed to the amount of $3,600. This money was paid in the form of a check to a preacher who is now in good standing in the Holston Conference of the M. E. Church. Preachers and members of this church say that six hundred dollars of this money was used in repairing the old Southern Methodist Church building, and that the other three thousand went towards paying for a lot of ground on which the Clinch Street Methodist Episcopal Church in the city of Knoxville now stands. A suit was brought by the trustees of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church, for the recovery of their old church edifice and for the $3,600, which suit was afterwards compromised, the Southern trustees being anxious to build a new church, and preferring to get out of court, even at a heavy sacrifice, rather than to wait the slow issues of chancery.

In October last the Southern Methodist Holston Conference held its session in the new Southern Church edifice on Church street in the city of Knoxville. During the session a member of the Conference moved to send fraternal messengers from this body to the Holston Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at its next session. In the debate on this question, I opposed the motion and among other reasons assigned some of the above stated facts. You will observe that this old church property and the $3,600 belonged to the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church and not to the Methodist Episcopal Church. Now, before Dr. Whedon grasps the whip again will he take his pen and show to the public when, where and how the church acquired the moral right to this property and to this money? Will he contend that the differences between the parties were all adjusted when the compromise was made? Will he or his church declare that legal compromises or suits withdrawn from court dockets, cancel moral obligations? I cannot favor a move toward Christian fraternity with a body that ignores the first element of genuine piety, "to do justly," nor will I grasp the hand of a man, fraternally who has taken money, belonging, of moral right, neither to him nor to his church, and who will not deliver it to its rightful owners; no, not even though his presiding elder, at every session of his Annual Conference, when the question is asked, "Is there anything against him?" shall say, "Nothing against him;" not even if, in turning the pages of Bishop Simpson's Cyclopedia of Methodism, I should see the likeness of this same man in company with the great and good of our land? Fraternity? I am for it; but it must be Christian fraternity.

And as the Methodist Episcopal Church supposes fraternity can come by means of legislation, allow me to suggest that when the Mission Committee shall assemble next year, in their rooms, 805 Broadway, that Dr. Whedon step in from his office and when the question is up for appropriations to the South, call the attention of the committee to this $3,600 with interest, for the Southern M. E. Church in Knoxville. Since the Methodist Episcopal Church there will not pay it, had not this Mission Committee, or the Methodist Episcopal Church at large, better look to it?

It is fair to presume, from the high position which Dr. Whedon has been holding for many years in the Methodist Episcopal Church (having been placed there by his General Conference,) that he represents the leaders in his Methodism. His moral, as well as his intellectual make up, qualifies him admirably, in their judgment, for superintending this fraternity business; and so, courting the Northern we-are-the-people element, "by out-doing," ever and anon, "its worst utterances," he has done more probably than any other man to make fraternity little better than a name. Then again, he has watched from his high position the movement of the ecclesiastical machinery so long as to believe that the springs of its power are somewhere in himself, and if he should disappear its wheels would stand still. May I commend to his consideration the fable of the old cock that discovered that the sun rose always soon after he had finished his morning crowing: therefore, the sun rose because he crowed. Long continuance in a high position may impair the logical faculty. If my old professor will allow the suggestion, I will say beware of supercilliousness.

Again, he begs me to "count him out" when I select my men "for the honor of my fraternity," for I had said that I preferred to take them one at a time, and not in a body. Let me assure him that I "counted him out" years ago; and began to do so at the moment I read this passage in a letter which he wrote me in the year 1866:

"If this is Southern Methodism it may go to the devil, where it belongs."

I had written him about the plans and animus of our church at that time. Nor did I count him in again when he sent that loving telegram from the New York East Conference in April, 1866 to New Orleans, asking our General Conference then and there to pray with them. Reading as I have, through all the year since, his deliverances touching the South and fraternity, I have not been able yet to "count him in."

A large Missionary Convention, under the auspices of the Methodist Missionary Board, gathered in the Central Methodist Church, on Seventh avenue, New York City, on December 16. The spacious church was filled. Meetings were held in the afternoon and evening. General Clinton B. Fisk presided, and addresses were delivered by Bishop Harris, Dr. Reid—one of the Secretaries—Rev. Drs. J. P. Newman, C. H. Fowler—editor of the Christian Advocate—and O. H. Tillany. On December 1st the debt of the missionary treasury was $91,967 88, against $102,383 86 on December 1st, 1877. The decrease has been accomplished more by a reduction of the appropriations than by an increase of the gifts of the churches at home. Bishop Harris delivered an address of special practical value. The following extract from a full report in the Christian Advocate deserves general attention at this time:

"To administer the affairs of this Society judiciously and satisfactorily is a work of great difficulty, delicacy, and responsibility. In order to its successful accomplishment, two things must be kept steadily in view, namely:

"1. To occupy such mission fields, and employ such a missionary force, as to require the outlay from year to year of the whole amount contributed for missionary purposes. Yearly contributions are made to meet yearly demands, and they are to be used, not hoarded. A large accumulation of unused funds in the treasury would be, not even excepting a debt, the greatest calamity that could befall us. It would then appear as if the liberality of the church had outrun the plans of Providence and the wants of the world, and the fountains of her munificence would be dried up.

"2. To avoid large and unmanageable debts. Temporary loans to meet temporary deficits in the income at certain times of the year may be allowed. Corresponding surpluses at other times of the year will make compensation. But a weary, wearing, persistent indebtedness, absorbing large portions of our revenue from year to year in the payment of interest, is not to be thought of with toleration for a moment. Next to an overflowing treasury of unused funds, a large debt, with its attendant train of expenses, embarrassments, and dishonor, would be most destructive of confidence in the wisdom of the management of the Society, and most enervating and paralyzing to the liberality of the church.

"So that, in order to a satisfactory and successful administration of our missionary affairs, all the annual contributions must be used annually, and no unmanageable or expensive debts must be contracted. How can such an administration be possible? The answer to the question is in two parts.

"1. There must be no important deductions in the revenues of the Society from year to year. In the very nature of the case, there are two things which must always be considered together in planning missionary work, and their relation to each other must always be influential, and, indeed, controlling, in a wise administration.

"They are (1) the opportunities for missionary labor, and (2) the liberality of the church in supplying means to support missionary laborers. Plans which the munificence of one year may seem to justify and require may be utterly defeated by the diminished income of the succeeding year. It is plain, therefore, that a successful administration of the work of the Missionary Society cannot be carried forward with an income which fluctuates from year to year.

"2. The income must increase each succeeding year, and with some degree of regularity. To say nothing of the calls to enter new fields, which are frequent and pressing, and which cannot be heeded without an increasing revenue, it should be borne in mind that the wants of a prosperous mission will be greater each succeeding year of its history for a generation to come, and till it ceases to be a mission and develops a self-supporting church; and if the income of the Society does not increase correspondingly, our very success may prove our failure, and our victory be turned to defeat. It is, therefore, of the greatest importance that our revenues have a good degree of stability, and that they increase uniformly from year to year."—Christian Intelligencer.

A Word from Eufaula.

MR. EDITOR: Our new presiding elder, Bro. R. B. Crawford, has chosen Eufaula as the place of his residence, and is domiciled "in a cottage on the hill." He has held his first Quarterly Conference here, and he presides well—just like he was used to it.

We are hoping and praying for a year of prosperity in this charge. Yesterday (Sabbath) was a day of spring-like warmth and beauty. Quite a large congregation, made up of Presbyterians (as their pastor is sick) and Methodists, in the morning followed by a profitable Church Conference.

I rejoice that the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE abides yet in health and vigor. Long may it live to help the ministry and membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, within the bounds of the Alabama Conference.

Your brother in Christ,

Caleb Cushing's Working Power.

Caleb Cushing was one of the most extraordinary men of this age, for this reason: He had a memory probably unequaled by any man now alive. He could read sixteen hours a day for a month, and never forget an important fact obtained in that time, and this faculty made him the profoundest authority on federal law in this country. His memory and his power of work were the secrets of his success. As an illustration of this, the following anecdote is told: In 1853, or thereabout, he was appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Bench of Massachusetts. He was out of practice; and, to use his own words, "very rusty." He set to work, however, and in nineteen days had read sixty volumes on different laws—questions of precedent, laws of contracts, laws of exchange, etc. About seventeen volumes were devoted to Massachusetts laws, twice as many more were made up of reports, and the reading was altogether extremely varied. Now for an example of his power of work: Between the ages of twenty-seven and fifty-four he never knew what it was to be sick. He was accustomed in Washington to get to work in the evening at five o'clock, and labor tremendously through meal hours, and without taking a rest, until eleven o'clock at night. Then he would smoke a cigar, get into bed and read history until he fell asleep. In one winter he finished in this manner thirteen octavo volumes of scientific travel and recent history. While Attorney General he would have his meals brought to him, and hold on his writing desk. His custom often was to eat the entire meal without looking at it, or resting from his work.—New York Observer.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.—The Quarterly Review will be published. The first number is nearly ready for the mail. Let all the names and money taken at the late sessions of the conferences be sent to me immediately. Changes in postoffices should be mentioned. All who intend to take the "Review" should subscribe now. Then we should know how many copies to bind. All the Bishops and presiding elders in the church are so much interested in the success of the "Review" that they will urge the claims before each forthcoming District Conference. Each member of the Review Committee is expected to send up a long list of paying subscribers. This number has one hundred and two. Our church papers will please copy this notice.

LAY LENTEN.

How [illegible] while an Easter
Each [illegible] has taken wing has stayed
To [illegible] of happy hours
We [illegible] aside with tender care
A [illegible] red buds a cluster of pale [illegible] of faded flowers.

When [illegible] with [illegible]
Our [illegible] to the spirit land,
A while we sit beneath
And [illegible] we rise
Our [illegible] being blessed from [illegible]
We gather what is left.

The [illegible] they loved, the songs they
The [illegible] whose music rang
So [illegible] of old,
These things we have watched them by
The [illegible] flower, with odor [illegible]
Pressed from fingers cold.

We [illegible] with fond fold with reverent [illegible]
The [illegible] they, living, used to wear
And [illegible] pulses stir,
As [illegible] the relics of our dead,
With [illegible] rain of tears we [illegible]
The purple lavender.

And when we come in after years
With only tender April tears
Our [illegible] white with care,
To look at treasures put away
Despairing on that far off day
A [illegible] scent is there.

Dew-wet and fresh we gathered the
These fragrant flowers—now every [illegible]
In [illegible] of all its bloom
Dear wet and sweet we strewed them [illegible]
To bind our relics sacred, dear
The [illegible] perfume.

That [illegible] abides in book and [illegible]
Our [illegible] and flower, and with its [illegible]
But [illegible] appeal,
[illegible] us from us a deeper sob,
For [illegible] lost dead—a sharper throb
Than we are wont to feel.

[illegible] whispers of the long ago
To [illegible] its loss, its aching woe
And [illegible] sorrows stir
And tears like those we shed of [illegible]
Roll down our cheeks, as we behold
Our [illegible] lavender.

All the Year Round.

Popular Errors.

The catalogue of errors of writers and others, heretofore given, was little more than a mere catalogue. I now propose to introduce a few quotations from popular authors, looking to the same general result, viz: the support of Romanism and other forms of high church doctrine. It is surprising how direct and strong is this tendency, and how little both writers and readers are conscious of it. Strange that it has not attracted more attention!

Objectionable Romanism consists solely in its doctrine of infallibility. Let that be conceded, and this is a complete answer to all other objections: "The church says so." Infallibility does not mean that the Pope, or anybody else, is personally infallible, but that the church is so protected in its judicatories by divine authority and grace that she cannot cease to be orthodox in doctrine, or fall into error. Popery is primacy.

In discussing the question of primacy, it is of infinitely little importance to inquire whether Peter was or was not the first primate. The only question worth discussing is: Was there a primate at all? If so, who cares who was the first incumbent? I would as soon have Peter as anyone else.

And how is a primacy proved? Obviously, there is but one way. If a new church was then formed, then, of course, there was a primate. A government without a head is not a government. Proof of a new church, framed by divine authority, is proof of a primacy. Stick a pin there. And now let us look for a moment for some proofs of a primacy.

Dr. Timothy Dwight is an elaborate and popular writer on theology. He says: "Christ established his church in a new form with new ministers, new discipline, and new peculiar duties." Theo. viii., pages 94, 6, and in various forms of language, the same thing is plainly repeated a hundred times.

History of Doctrines, by Hagenbangh, page 44, says: "Jesus is not the founder of a school, but, in the most exalted sense, the founder of a religion and a church." And yet nothing is more certain, or indeed better known, than that the founding of either a church or a religion was never dreamed of in that age.

Butler, in the Analogy, says: "A visible church was established in order to continue miraculous powers throughout all ages."—Part ii, chapter 1. Again he says: "He founded a church."

"For then the Jewish Church was abolished, and the Christian entered in its stead."—Scott's Com., Gal. v, 1.

Mr. Watson's Dic., Art. "Church," explains fully and explicitly that there was never but one church. He will not allow us to speak of the Jewish Church and Christian Church as though they were different. And yet, forgetting himself, and following in the ruts, he says, just page 622: "The ancient visible church, as constituted upon the ground of natural descent from Abraham, was abolished by the establishment of a spiritual body of believers to take its place." Many other such quotations could be easily made.

My very highly-valued friend, Dr. L. M. Lee, of the Virginia Conference, following in the ruts with others, in Rite of Confirmation, speaks of "the organization of the church as established by Christ."

Archbishop Whately, an exceedingly valuable writer, in Kingdom of Christ, page 22, etc., is very particular and explicit, as well as elaborate, in explaining all about the organization of the new church.

Hopkins' Evidences of Christianity is a school book largely used among Presbyterians. Among many other such like statements, at page 241, he says: "The New Testament contains a fair and plausible account of the origin of the church." The New Testament contains not the remotest allusion to such a subject.

Macknight, in his treatise on the Epistles, speaks of "the rejection of the Jews, the destruction of their church, the abrogation of their laws," and other such like legendary tomfoolness which, because Dr. McKnight was a man of learning, have gone considerably into the teachings of the pulpit.

Dr. Philip Schaff, a largely accepted theologian, now living in Philadelphia, in his History of the Church, says: "The beginning of church history is properly the incarnation of the Son of God."

These rut-following authors—alas, that they are so plentiful!—tell us also that not only did our Saviour destroy the church wholesale, and organize a new one, but he also destroyed the religion of the Old Testament wholesale, and introduced an entirely new system. This you will read in many places.

Seame Jenryus, a barrister at law in England, more than a hundred years ago, wrote an essay on the Evidences of Christianity. This is republished in this country, and probably more than twenty editions have been made. It is a standard publication of the American Tract Society and Presbyterian Board, and is now in all the Presbyterian and many other Sunday-schools of this country, and is highly recommended by Dr. Paley and others as a valuable religious classic. He says:

"First. There is a book entitled the New Testament. Second. From this book may be extracted a system of religion entirely new, both with regard to the object and the doctrines, not only infinitely superior to, but totally unlike everything which had ever before entered into the mind of man."

Now it is not so very strange that a lawyer should write such a mess of literary falsehood and absurdity, but that it should pass so current in the church so long without a word of objection—nay, with such high commendation—this is strange.

But then you remember that Dr. Clarke, in one of his fits of somnambulism, is nearly as bad. He says: "The change is not a change of merely our religious sentiment or mode of worship for another, but a change of temper, passion, prospects and moral conduct. All before was earthly, or animal, or devilish, or all three together. But now all is holy, spiritual and divine."

Of course I quote italics correctly.

Now everybody half intelligent knows that in the time of Christ's appearance there was not the least change in religious doctrine, temper, passion, prospect or moral conduct, more than there is or ought to be now, or at any time, viz: mere improvement. And, everybody also knows that long before this time we see some of the sublimest and most holy examples of religious life and conduct known to the history of religion. Spirits of Abraham, David and of Isaiah, and your noble compeers in Christian holiness and godly example, you shall be vindicated from such censures, though it be never so feebly!

Thus it is that Protestant Christianity has an onerous load to carry, as unjust as it is damaging and illogical. Romanism is, at least, consistent. Starting with a great fundamental and historical untruth, it maintains, strangely unmolested, its integrity of sequences, and prospers in it.

Protestants are mainly responsible for these papal hinderances to the spread of a pure gospel. They assent to the great central falsehood. With Mr. R. I. Wilberforce they "go back to the time when the church existed in its embryo form in the College of the Apostles." Why not be consistent and go the rest of the way?

An Interesting Letter.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith hand you the copy of a portion of a letter sent me a few days since by our esteemed Sister Mitchell, wife of our venerable friend, A. H. Mitchell, D. D., one of the presiding elders of the Alabama Conference, which letter was written to our sister by our lamented Bro. B. B. Ross, of precious memory, dated at Mobile, February [illegible], 1851. Few men were better known to very many of your readers than Bro. B. B. Ross. He being dead, yet speaketh.

MOBILE, February 13, 1851.

"MY DEAR SISTER: Last August Bro. W. H. Carter, his wife and myself, covenanted together to pray for each other for the blessings of perfect love. One day, while riding along the road, I asked myself: Why may I not employ these precious moments in prayer to God for this blessing? But the suggestion came: 'You are not ready for it;' and my heart immediately responded: 'All things are ready. You can have it now. Have it by faith, naked faith, whether you feel or not.'

"That comforted me much. A few days afterward, at the St. Stephen's quarterly meeting, my heart was drawn out in prayer for this work of grace, and on Monday morning, while at family prayers, October 6, and leading the devotions, my heart was strangely warmed—a sweet stillness and unusual peace swept over the chords of my heart. I was oppressed with a sense of my nothingness, and God's majesty and glory. My heart was all prayer and praise and thanksgiving. For three days this festival of grace continued. Peace, peace, peace, that flowed like a river, was mine. But then the tempter came, and from that time, till within a few days, continued to annoy me.

"'You are not perfect in love, because you are impatient. Speak short, etc. You understand his devices.'

"'You are not perfect in love, because you think too much of self.' I had not then learned to discriminate between temptation and sin; in fact, during this time many have yielded to temptation, but I feel I have no condemnation resting upon me. Reading the Life of David Stoner, and more lately that of Mrs. H. A. Rodgers, whose lucid statements about this doctrine are only rivaled by Mr. Wesley himself, the distinction between temptation and sin became much clearer to my mind, and I came to firm anchorage at once.

"Night before last, at the same altar which we have so often found a bethel, while at prayer, my heart was emptied of self, and filled with humble, adoring love. I prayed for a full baptism of the spirit, and spent some time in prayer. Yesterday and last night was as the night before, only more abundant. My heart was enlarged; my faith increased; my heart glowed with the sacred fire. The Lord condescended to come into his temple, even my poor worthless heart, and fill it with His presence. Mrs. Rodgers says, on page 243: 'The lowest degree of this salvation is to have all contrarieties to this love cast out of the soul. We may be said thus to love Him with a pure heart, when proud self and great I are slain, and we feel only humility;' and much more with which you are familiar. This lowest state or degree, by the grace of God, I have reached. And how shall I praise him enough! Have just reached the margin of that 'ocean without bottom or shore,' 'what shall I render to the Lord for all His benefits to me?' Now, my dear sister, do not think me tedious—my heart is full. I have much more to say, but forbear. I now have the sweet assurance that I am His who bought me with a price, and His alone.

"Blessed Jesus, thou art my King, my sole King, my Prophet, Priest, Guide, Friend, my wisdom and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption. 'Nay, but I yield, I yield. I can hold out no more. I sink, by dying love compelled, and own Thee conqueror.' Pray for me, my dear friend in Christ, that God may uphold me, and enable me to preach, wherever I go, a full salvation from sin.

* * * * *

"Well, I have written long enough for the first letter. Retaliate on me, if you please. My wife, I find, is panting earnestly for holiness. My home here, when in the city, is henceforth at Bro. William Otis', who is my beloved Gaius. Write soon and fully. Grace, mercy and peace attend you and yours.

"Yours in Christ,

B. B. ROSS."

A copy taken from the original by myself. I hope you will publish this beautiful record written as a private outflow of a soul filled with the love of God. It seems fitting now that it should become a part of the history of our beloved brother.

PRICE WILLIAMS.

MOBILE, January 6, 1879.

From Greenville, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: It was a great astonishment to me when my name was read for this place. I felt like taking a real childish cry. My horror of "the bottom" had been really intensified; my feeling was worse than when entering a battle.

Well, after the usual experience of leaving where there is no parsonage, bartering off our chattels, we arrived here at four o'clock A. M., January 4. An entire stranger to the place and the people, I concluded, while waiting for breakfast, I would reconnoiter a little. I was soon directed to Judge Trigg's, and as soon as I announced my name his little daughter enthusiastically ushered me in to the fire, and, quicker than I can tell you, the judge, followed by his good wife, was in. I was soon treated to breakfast. "Now," said the judge, "we will go to the parsonage."

As the young ladies would express it, everything was "perfectly splendid." Though the house was almost depleted by the epidemic, yet it is well furnished. The larder and pantry were loaded with good things to eat, sufficient for quite a time.

To show how careful the good ladies were, they had notified a porter to watch every boat, and when we came be sure to take us right to the parsonage. But he neglected this. The ladies had made all this preparation, without even knowing certainly whether they would have a preacher.

Did I not fear it would consign this to the waste-basket, on account of its length, I would itemize to show you why we are pleased, and also to endeavor to stimulate the ladies of other charges to go and do likewise.

Emphasize that part, Mr. Editor, for if the ladies will take hold it will not be long until there will be a well-furnished parsonage in all our charges. This one, and all that is with it, as well as much of the church furnishing, is the result of a mite society. Dear sisters of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, up in your might and say: It shall be done! Don't let the cry of hard times delay you. You can be gathering the mites, and you will be surprised to see what a sum they will make. Organize now, this month, and let the preachers compare notes next Conference, and see how surprised you will be at the results.

J. L. FUTRELL.

District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: In a recent number of the ADVOCATE appeared a communication signed "Layman," and dated "Mississippi Conference, December 10, 1878," its object being to secure "more permanency to our District Conferences from the lay element." This obscure sentence is, to some extent, explained by the sentences following it in the letter referred to, so that "Layman's" object seems to have been to get the Mississippi Conference to make district stewards "ex-officio members of the District Conferences," because, as he says, the district stewards, "as a rule, are selected by the Quarterly Conference for their zeal and public spirit in church matters."

Now, Mr. Editor, "Layman's" experience and observation do not coincide with mine. I was a district stewart, but am not now. I was made one when I became unacceptable in other offices, and the members of the Quarterly Conferences wanted to "let me down easy." Like "Layman," I tried and tried to "magnify the office" into some degree of dignity and usefulness, but all my efforts were vain. It is useless to try in the Mississippi Conference, whatever may be done in other Conferences. You can't elevate a district steward any more than you can a Sunday-school agent, or you could have done one of those "evangelical tramps" that the General Conference would have nothing to do with. "Layman" need not call them "a valuable set of men," or talk of their holding office "during good behavior;" they have nothing to cause them to misbehave; they are not fit to be trustees or stewards—in brief, they come within Dr. Wintield's definition of "gum-log," only they are not preachers. The rule in the Mississippi Conference, so far as my experience and observation goes, is that when the preacher and presiding elder, and the Quarterly Conference, come across a church member who must hold an office, although he is fit for none, they make a district steward out of him forthwith. I found that out from experience, and so I gave up the office, and am now only a plain, criticising, grumbling church member, contributing to support the various institutions of the church.

Take my advice, Bro. "Layman," and follow my example. Don't seek to magnify your office, and be made a permanent member of the District Conference. It is useless for you to try. The presiding elders will not hear of it, the preachers will not tolerate it, and the zealous and public-spirited church members are radically opposed to it. Again I say: Don't!

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, Jan. 2, 1879.

Our own hands are heaven's favorite instruments for supplying us with the necessaries and luxuries of life.

Whispers of Immortality.

The pages of the poets are strewn thick with the immortelles of Christian faith. Gerald Mnssey, the half-inspired Eitglish laborer, exclaimed in one of his fiery lyrics:

"Take heart! the rude dust, dark to-day,
Soars a new-lighted sphere to-morrow
And wings of splendor burst the clay
That wraps us in death's fruitful furrow."

An unknown Scotch poet stirs our longings with his quaint yearnings for the coming life:

"We've His guid word of promise that some great
some day the King,
To His ain royal palace, His banished hame will bring.
Wi' cheerfu' hearts rounding o'er we shall see
The King in His beauty, and our ain countree."

One of the loftiest of Mrs. Browning's sonnets thus deprecates human discontent:

"I think we are too ready with complaint
In this fair world of God's. Had we no hope
Indeed, beyond the zenith and the slope
Of yon gray back of sky, we might be faint
To accuse upon eternity's constraint,
Round our aspirant souls. But since the scope
Must widen early, is it well to droop
For a few days consumed to loss and taint?
O pusillanimous Heart, be comforted,
And, like a cheerful traveler, take the road,
Singing, beside the hedge. What, if the bread
Be bitter in thine inn, and thou mishod
To meet the flints? At least it may be said
Because the way is short, I thank Thee, God!"

Whittier, whose nature is saturated with the tranquillity of trust, has written many lyrics which, like harp-strings, swept by every passing breeze, send forth sweet melody. He who says so simply

"Apart from Thee all gain is loss,
All labor vainly done;
The solemn shadow of Thy cross
Is better than the sun," has put on record often his waiting for a future in the land whereof the Lamb is the light, and his expectation of meeting many dear friends there.

There is a bit of verse entitled "Over the River," which is a favorite with many because it touches our lives so nearly. One stanza concludes:

"I shall know the loved who have gone before,
And joyfully sweet will the meeting be
When over the river, the peaceful river,
The Angel of Death shall carry me."

We like this, and we like the "Sweet Bye-and-Bye," and other hymns of heaven, because they contain whispers of immortality, because they are only notes by the way on the declaration of our Lord: "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."—Margaret Sangster, in Christian Intelligencer.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss,' etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

THE tragical death of ROBERT J. LUM, near Port Gibson, Miss., on the twenty-seventh of November, 1878, excited universal sorrow among his acquaintances, and the deepest sympathy for his afflicted parents. He was the son of William J. and Lucretia Lum, of Rocky Springs, Miss., who, being worthy members of the church, brought him up under the principles of our holy Christianity. He was born August 6, 1854, and was in his twenty-fifth year at the time of his death. In 1875 the citizens of this county succeeding in electing Dr. C. E. Buck, one of our best qualified men, to the office of sheriff, who drew around him three of the most worthy young men as his deputies, one of whom was the subject of this obituary.

On the ninth of December, 1876, our very worthy Chancery Clerk, John P. Bitseoe, was fired upon from the roadside and instantly killed; it was supposed by one Harrison Page, a negro. A true bill was found against Page, and a writ placed in the hands of the sheriff for his arrest, since which he has alluded all attempts to arrest him. Dr. Buck, having obtained reliable information that Page was at home on the night of November 26, 1878, summoned two of his deputies, Thomas M. Harwood and Robert J. Lum, to proceed with him to Page's residence early next morning to attempt his arrest. They surrounded the house, when a negro was seen running off, who was ordered by Mr. Lum to halt. Instantly a window was thrown open and Mr. Lum received a fatal shot from within. He exclaimed: "My God, Tom, I'm killed," and expired. Dr. Buck also received two shots as he was entering the door; one shattering his left arm, and the other entering his body, from which he died in a few days. He was an official member of our church, and one of the best examples of a faithful officer and a Christian gentleman I ever knew. From early boyhood Robert J. Lum was remarkable for the purity of his morals, and his reverential respect for the worship of God, both at the family altar and in the house of prayer. Sobriety and temperance in all things were the striking characteristics of his whole life. He rigidly abstained from all alcoholic beverages, card playing and all other amusements which he thought contrary to good morals. He was more observant of the holy Sabbath than too many whose names are on the church register; he was nearly always present at public worship in the church of his forefathers; he was liberal to all charitable purposes, and, as soon as he went into business on his own account, he adopted a rule to give a certain per cent. of his net income to the support of the gospel ministry. He kept his bible in his room, a lesson in which he read daily, and was attentive to private prayer. When solicited to do so, he declined joining any temperance society, for fear he might, like too many others, somewhere along life's journey, violate his pledge, and thereby bring a reproach on himself and a good cause. Having been baptized in infantcy, and brought up in the church, when urged to assume his baptismal vows, he was, we think, morbidly afraid to do so, lest he might in some way bring reproach on the Christian profession. He was one of the purest and noblest young men, and one of the most religious I ever knew to remain out of the church. If universal love and respect for their noble son, and sympathy for them in their great bereavement, could assuage the sorrow and dry up the tears of his smitten parents, it would be done at once.

J. G. JONES.

ANOTHER aged and beloved veteran of the cross has gone to her eternal reward—I allude to the sainted mother in Israel, Sister CYNTHIA NIXON.

She was the endeared wife of our own cherished and lamented brother, Thomas Nixon, deceased, late of the Mississippi Conference, and the affectionate daughter of James and Susanna Hutchins.

She was born in Georgia on the 26th day of August, 1809, and her parents moved to the territory of Mississippi, during her infantcy, and settled in Big Sand, in Claiborne county, in the year 1810.

Sister Nixon died in the solace of Christian ripeness, at the residence of her son, James W. Cook, near Cayuga, Hinds county, Mississippi, November 5, 1878, aged sixty-nine years, three months, and twenty-one days.

In early life she felt, and acknowledged, the necessity of the Christian religion, to give her enduring comfort, even in this world. This feeling was not the result of the absence of earthly treasures, for with this she was richly favored. But none of these things so absorbed her heart's affections as to deprive her of an intense consciousness that there was a higher and ennobling place for the elevated capacities of the human heart.

So she gave her heart, with all of its warmest, fondest, tenderest emotions, to Him who gave Himself for her. She died just as we would expect to see a veteran die on the battle ground, with her face toward Jerusalem.

During her illness she was frequently heard soliloquizing, and when overheard it was ascertained that she was talking about the comforts of dying grace and the "home of the blest."

A few minutes before her death she was heard to say: "Almost there." O! what a margine of thought in that brief sentence escaping the fevered lips of a dying saint. How exceedingly happy do we feel, after a long absence from home, and loved ones, as we hear the place: How joyously does our heart anticipate the meeting!

How impatient do we become when we are "almost there!" But O! how feebly does this represent the feelings of one just on the summit of earth's loftiest pyramid, with just one step more to make and we are in Heaven!

Who? O! who! would not be a Christian? die in the triumphs of faith, and live with God forever!

Her Pastor, C. A. POWELL.

MRS. SUSAN GILDER, wife of Dr. J. A. Gilder, was born in 1811, and died of pneumonia, at the residence of her husband, on the eighteenth day of December, 1878. She had been for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Being questioned by her husband in reference to her readiness to depart from this life, she replied that she was both ready and willing to go if it were the will of God; but she preferred to remain longer with him and her children.

Her life was one of marked devotion to the interest of her husband and children, who sadly miss her now. We miss her busy hands about the household duties of each day. And we miss her at the family altar of prayer, where each night we could hear her whispered prayers accompanying our father in his petitions to the throne of heavenly grace.

Our mother desired but little of what are called the pleasures of this world, and we, her children, centure ourselves now that we did not strive harder to "Gather one garland of cool repose for the tired brow that watched and wailed and labored unto the end."

But we know she now has rest. May God bless us, and grant that we may meet her in heaven.

B. F. G.

OSCAR L. ROSS, was born in Adams county, Mississippi, December 9, 1809, and died at the residence of Mr. W. H. Morris, in Washington county, same State, January 5, 1879, aged seventy years.

Brother Ross never married. The most of his life was spent out of the church and without hope. His numerous friends in Adams county, and elsewhere, will rejoice to know that he died a Christian. He gave himself to Christ and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, about two years since, from which time he lived a devoted Christian, at the time of his death being a class-leader. He was a sweet spirited man, and beloved by all who knew him. He expressed himself as prepared and ready to go. Our loss is his gain. He is in Paradise.

W. P. ANDREWS.

MRS. CARRIE BURTON,—nee Garrett—died at the home of her brother-in-law, Mr. H. P. Roswell, in the neighborhood of Silver Creek, Mississippi, October 25, 1878, aged about forty years.

Sister Burton was for a number of years a member of the Baptist Church, but connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a short time before her death. She was a sufferer for some months with that dread disease, consumption. She assured us that she was willing to go, and bade her sisters not to weep for her. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." God will care for the little orphans.

THE FAIRY ENCHANTMENT.

BY ADELAIDE STOUT.

The fairy camp is broken up,
That whitened yonder dell;
So silently each snowy tent
Was folded, none can tell
If late at night, or at the morn,
These tents were from the place upturn.

We look where once their stakes were set,
And miss their golden glow;
The tents that, yellow at the first,
Bleached out as white as snow,
We watched them heavy with spring dew
And loved to see the light shine through.

Ye beautiful and airy tents!
We wonder by what stream
Your silken tissue in the light
Of early spring shall gleam.
It matters not if children hold,
As very dear, each gleaming fold.

For we should teach the dear young eyes
The beauty hid away
In every wayside growth;
And they should win each day
Some thought that takes a brighter hue
From flowers that blossom in the dew.

The Alliance.

Early Religious Experience of the Rev. John Newland Maffitt.

BY THE REV. THOMAS CARTER, D. D.

When Mr. Maffitt was hardly twenty-six years of age, and before he became known as the great orator and preacher, he wrote his own life, entitled "Tears of Contrition; or, Sketches of the Life of John N. Maffitt," which was published in New London in the year 1821. The very first sentence of his introduction to this volume illustrates his style: "From the romantic retreats of far-famed Erin—borne on the fickle winds of adverse fortune—a lonely stranger brings his mite of sorrow, and lays the dew-starred treasure at Columbia's feet."

He was born December 28, 1794, in the city of Dublin, Ireland. His father was a pious member of the Methodist Church, who died when he was young. At the age of fourteen he describes himself as seeking every pleasure which the world could bestow until arrested by a serious sickness, during which he promised to amend his life; but, on his recovery, with an appetite sharpened by confinement, he gorged himself in pleasure by "ranging at large all the gardens of luxury and dissipation, visiting every place formed for amusement, and in particular that nest of malignant blandishments—the theater." When he was nineteen "the arrest came from Heaven, or it is impossible to know where my madness would have hurried me."

"I had frequented," he says, "the Methodist meeting-house from a child. It was the practice of the Methodist preachers frequently to visit my mother, at which time I generally found some pretext to be absent, lest their arguments should prevail on me to forsake those pleasures to which I was so closely wedded. One day, within a few weeks of the night I was taken in the toils of the gospel net, there was some company at my mother's that proposed to go to a Methodist meeting to be held at a private house not far distant. I joined with a view of making sport, and accompanied them to the place appointed.

"The minister throughout his sermon repeated several times in a rough, loud voice: 'Repent, ungodly sinner!' This was a novel way to address an individual, as I thought he noticed me in particular, which excited the risibility of my countenance so much that I was obliged to rise and abruptly leave the room, lest, by staying any longer, I might transgress the bounds of propriety; and after our company returned I continued for some time attempting to describe the manner and method of the preacher, to the amusement of every one present.

"On that Sabbath, which was so memorable in the history of my life as the last that I was to spend in the service of sin, nothing very remarkable occurred until evening, when my mother expressed a desire that I should accompany my sisters to Whitefriar Street meeting-house. With reluctance I was prevailed upon to go, and, as usual, left them at the threshold of the door, wandering forth in search of what I considered preferable to being confined in the house of God for a dreary hour. At the usual time for their dismissal I returned, and, after waiting without for some time, I ventured in to hurry them home, as I then thought their time might be better employed in gayety and sport, but found their attention was drawn and their minds fixed to await the conclusion of the service, as the society was about entering into a solemn covenant with God—a performance generally attended to once every year in all our societies throughout Ireland.

"Not aware at first of their intention, I went into the gallery, expecting my sisters would join me; and while anxiously waiting for them to rise, the doors closed, and I was consequently detained to witness this very solemn exercise. While the preacher was reading I felt no particular sensation whatever; but when I saw the solemnity that sat on every face, and beheld the congregation kneel with devout awe, lifting up the hand and promising to be for God, I began to tremble, and, looking around me, perceived that all were engaged—all were praying—and I left mine. I thought of the last day, when perhaps I should be left alone, a standing monument of His vengeance. But, like Pharaoh, I hardened my heart. 'What,' said I, 'make a covenant with God! I cannot do it—I will not do it.' Then, putting my fingers in my ears, stopped them, determined not to join or give one moment longer to reflection. I despised them for their meanness to groan and weep in such a manner, and, as if beset by all the engines of infidelity, was ready to curse them and deny the being of a God. Maddened by the horrors of my mind, I started to fly the house, but at the head of the stairs was again arrested by some unknown power. I could not proceed. My alarm increasing, I trembled lest I should fall, as every one in the house seemed to condemn me. In a few minutes, however, the meeting closed, and I was released from agony insupportable."—Methodist.

The United States Mint.

It was founded very nearly one hundred years ago, and in it was coined the first money used in the United States. Until 1816 all the work was done by hand or horse-power; the building was guarded by watch-dogs, and the artisans were supplied with plentiful quantities of liquor as a fatigue ration, the ancient and simple-minded citizens looking upon them with especial favor. The earliest director was appointed by Washington. The original copper cents were made in 1793, the silver dollars in 1794, and the gold eagles in 1795. Both the metal and machinery were imported; but in coining, as in many other things, the American has made such progress within the century that the implements of his own construction are now superior to the models after which they are patterned.

The casual visitor is welcomed from nine A. M. until noon, and is taken in hand by polite and garrulous ushers, who, in common with all the other employees, bear themselves with the dignity that belits persons living in such close contact with enormous wealth. "I've seen five hundred and fifty million dollars go in and out of this place," said one of the employees as he led us into a dimly-lighted vault, where the pale bricks of silver were piled from floor to ceiling; "five hundred and fifty million dollars in twenty-eight years," he repeated, with particular gusto, and at the statement our fancy immediately took a wild flight among the enchanting possibilities of such treasure, for when Mammon mounts Pegasus no adolescent Muse can career through realms so luminous and varicolored as this metallic deity, who is worshiped and despised, courted and reviled, by the best and worst of men. The very contemplation of so immense a sum was dazzling to the imagination. It was the aggregate fortune of five hundred millionnaires, the income of scores of thrones and the value of a State! What a Protean influence it must have exercised! corrupting and sustaining, how many lives, paying the scant wages of the ten-hour laborer, and sullying for the extravagance of princely spendthrift; carrying happiness with it now, and then capriciously destroying the beneficiary; seducing the virtuous and breeding sedition among the honest; forever doing good and harm by fickle strokes; forever indispensable and forever alluring. In one of his clever essays, Junius Henri Browne says with Emersonian sententiousness: "Cash is the cause and consequence of civilization," the measure of its breadth, and the plummet of its profoundity. Every true ideal must rest on the real, and the real to-day is the coinage of the mint."

In passing through the deposit-room all the metal is carefully weighed. The largest scale, with a ponderous beam and huge trays, combines extreme delicacy with its strength, and balances from six thousand ounces to the one-hundredth part of an ounce; another scale tells three thousand ounces at a time, and a third tells three hundred ounces. They are adjusted several times a week, erected on solid masonry, and are true to a grain. Having been weighed, the silver is carried to the melting-room, where it is mixed with copper, in order to give it sufficient hardness to endure the friction of constant handling, and melted in stone crucibles, heated to 1,800 by charcoal fires. This heat is so intense that the workmen must protect their hands and arms by gloves and gauntlets. The stone crucibles are placed within others of plumbago, in order to insure them against breaking. Reduced to a molten fluid, the metal is now poured into iron moulds, whence it emerges in the form of ingots, which are transferred to rolling-mills which shape them by a rapid process of attenuation into long, narrow slips.

The coining-press is a massive engine of mirror-like steel and brass. It is fed with the blanks through a vertical brass tube in the same way that the milling machine is fed, and a very charming young lady satisfies its appetite, which demands eighty blanks a minute. Its power is that of the toggle-joint, and it moves with the coniferous rock of a baby-giant's cradle. As the blanks reach the bottom of the tube they are seized singly by a pair of steel feeders similar in motion to human fingers and thumbs, and carried forward and lodged in the collar between the upper and lower dies. At the same moment the lever is descending, and, by the time the planchet is in position, the toggle-joint, brought into a vertical position, imparts to the piece a pressure which, within the narrow limits of its motion, is almost incalculable. The immediate relaxation of the joint causes the upper die to be lifted, when the feeders, coming up with a second planchet, push away the one already coined. The planchet before being struck is slightly less in diameter than the steel ring or collar into which it drops; but the pressure upon the dies causes the piece to expand into the collar, and takes from it the reeding or fluting of its edge." The tinkle of the falling coins, and the measured swing of the machine, are musical, and would interweave with other instruments in a miser's symphony. Do they awaken far-reaching thoughts in the girl who tills the tube, and sees the lineasate press casting off the coins at the rate of more than fourteen millions a year? Every time she hears the tinkle in the box near her feet an inestimably powerful agent is entering the world, and from the machine to which she is so carefully ministering come the multifarious evil and good of all civilization.—Appleton's Journal.

The Quakers and Temperance.

Canon Farrar, addressing the Friends' Meeting upon temperance, thus referred to the influence of one of their body: "It was William Mackin who had the honor of converting to this cause Theobald Mathew, he (William Mackin) being also a member of the Society of Friends. Theobald Mathew was working hard as a Roman Catholic priest among the degraded population of Cork, and one day, un William Mackin visiting the hospital, he saw a sight which you may see any day in any London hospital—the sight of numbers brought there by the appalling diseases and brutal violences of drink—and turning round to the young Catholic priest, with his heart stirred within him, he said: 'Oh, Theobald Mathew, what mightest thou not do if thou wouldst take part in this great work!' Young Mathew thought of it. For several days it was in his mind; for several nights it kept him almost sleepless; and at last, after long prayer, he came to the determination, and, rising up, he said words which have since become so memorable: 'Here goes, in the name of God.' That was how Theobald Mathew—guided, influenced, converted to the cause by a member of the Society of Friends—began a crusade which, for the time being, did much to cripple the whisky trade in Ireland, and which was carried also to England, and gave the first great stimulus to the work in which we are engaged. It was incidentally through him (Father Mathew that Dr. Guthrie became an abstainer. You know he was being driven in a part of Ireland one very rainy day, and he went into a public house to get a little whisky, under the mistaken notion (which is not even dispelled yet) that thereby he could keep out the cold. He said to the poor, drenched car-driver: 'Won't you come in and have something?' He replied: 'Faith, I won't touch a single drop of it.' 'How is that?' said Dr. Guthrie. He had taken the pledge from Father Mathew. Dr. Guthrie, thinking over it, considered that here was a poor, uneducated peasant who was strong enough to resist temptation because he saw it would lead to his own ruin; and Dr. Guthrie thought that if the car-driver was strong enough to exercise that resolution he ought to be. Thus it was that he became an abstainer, and carried on the work in Scotland, and through him thousands in England and Scotland carried it on also. Therefore you are obliged, as members of this society, not only by the general traditions of the body to which you belong, but also by their special influence in this particular work in the past to promote it."—Leisure Hour.

A Fallacy Exploded.

Prof. Swing, on a recent Sunday, preached a sermon from the text "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of Heaven," in which occurs the following:

"It may well give dignity to the temperance cause that its virtue has reached first the minds that possessed most education, and hence reflection, and that drunkenness lingers longest where the mental power is weakest. Many years ago it was my good fortune to serve my country by being secretary of a temperance society, and in that official dignity I addressed letters of inquiry to presidents of colleges and professors to ask what was the quality of the young men who in those days marred their college course by the use of ardent drinks. Long letters came from President Woolsey, of Yale, and from Horace Mann, then of Boston, and from Prof. Moffat, of Princeton, and they all bore testimony that genius in their colleges and schools drank less than stupidity; that whisky was passing away from the higher order of mind, and was to be found only in the possession of the more sensual and less bright. Of course there would be vivid exceptions to the generalization, but the fact stood that the temperance reform had reached first the minds that were most gifted. Thus the purified quality of the pulpit, the bar and the medical profession, and of the student life and of the scholar life, point out the fact that the temperance reform is a sunrise which touches first the mountain top in the world of mind, and more slowly creeps down to the humbler vales of mental and spiritual condition. When you remember that the active organized reform is not more than fifty years old, you cannot but conclude that no form of moral good has advanced more rapidly."

Tall and Fruitless.

The woods of Missouri are literally festooned with grape-vines. They climb to the tops of the tallest sycamores of the bottoms, and climb about the undergrowth which fringes the fenced fields. But the lawly vines produce the best fruit. The immense vines which stretch to the high places and show so much girth of trunk and expanse of branches and foliage, are uniformly barren. Grape-vines illustrate certain forms of organized Christianity—here and there are mammoth establishments, aged, ambitious, far-reaching and impressive. They climb to the top places among the trees of the woods. They have every semblance of fruit-bearing power; but someway, all their forces go into woodiness of form and greenness of leaf. The sap is exhausted in self-enlargement. There is no fruit. And, sure enough, among the lowlier, younger vines, content to clamber along the fences, or to twine close to the modest bushes which skirt the borders of the forest—there hanging their purple clusters within reach of the hungry stranger, we find the true vine of the Husbandman's right-hand planting.—Methodist Recorder.

Censure is most effectual when mixed with praise. So, when a fruit is discovered, it is well to look up a virtue to bear it company.

Our Young People.

BABY HAS GONE TO SCHOOL.

The baby has gone to school; ah, me!
What will the mother do
With never a call to button or pin,
Or tie a little shoe?
How can she keep herself busy all day,
With the little "tottering thing" away?

An ther basket to fill with lunch,
Another "good bye" to say,
And the mother stands at the door to see
Her baby march away;
And turns with a sigh that is half relief,
And half a something akin to grief.

She thinks of a possible future morn
When the children, one by one,
Will go from their home on into the world,
To battle with life alone,
And not even the baby be left to cheer
The desolate home of that future year.

She picks up garments here and there,
Thrown down in careless haste;
And tries to think how it would seem
If nothing were displaced;
If the house were always as still as this,
How could she bear the loneliness?

The Shepherd Lad.

In a small scattered village, in a lonely part of Scotland, near the border land, where the hills, although not high, are wild and imposing, and where you may travel for many miles without seeing any living being, except the scattered flocks and their shepherds, lived an old man called James Armstrong. Many a tale could he tell, more wonderful, may be, than true, of the feats of his border ancestors; and often by the peat fire he would make the bright eye glisten, and the young heart beat, as he recounted the deeds of the covenanting forefathers; who, with all their mistakes, to which the best are liable, were, in the main true-hearted, God-fearing men, although driven to extremities by the spirit of those fiery times. James Armstrong had stout and hardy boys and strong, bare-footed girls, who would have shown you many of the hiding-places of the covenanters, and they shared in their father's love for the memory of that land. These little Armstrongs were trained in the love and fear of God, and were faithful in word and deed, honest and kind; and their parents were followers of the meek and lowly One.

Every Sabbath the good mother was wont to lead her young flock of children to the house of God, the nearest Kirk; and how far, think you, was that?

I have heard of children complain of a walk of half a mile; and sometimes heat, sometimes cold, sometimes rain, has been thought a sufficient excuse to keep them from a place of worship; but the Armstrongs went as far as four miles every week to offer up praise and prayer to their Maker. True, the snow was often thick upon their path, the rain and the bitter north wind many a time made the little ones cower and cling to their mother for shelter; and the father and mother often remarked how happy and peaceful were those journeys, even amid the raging tempest.

James Armstrong was a shepherd and a poor man; but his tastes were simple and his wants few. He often said that his life was one of daily lessons; and when he lay watching his flock on the mountain-side, or led them to the stream in the valley, he was wont to recall the beautiful words of Him who spoke of himself as "the Good Shepherd," or to repeat in his solicitude those beautiful lines of David, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want."

Hardy had been the lowland shepherd's life; but weakness, and gray hairs, and old age, aye, and death, too, must come to the strongest. The firm step began to fail, and the strong voice to tremble, and the brain now and then to grow dizzy as he came down the steep hill-side; and Janet, the loving wife, used to watch more anxiously than in old times if he did not return at the accustomed hour, or as she said to Alick, the oldest boy, one day: "Love's eyes are keen Alick. I know your father is failing. I must take you from the school, my man, and you must help to keep the sheep."

Alick, like many a Scotch boy, loved his books, and I am not sure he relished the idea of keeping sheep. He was just thirteen, and he was a bright, clever lad. Visions he might have had of being a great man some day, at least the village schoolmaster had said he might be so. But no, he must go and tend the sheep, and follow his father's calling. He wished from his heart that the elder ones were not girls, for now on him fell all the weight of the service.

"But wishing is no use, Alick; you must go with your father," said Janet sadly, "and learn his way with the sheep."

Winter's frost came on, and the old man (old before his time) was chilled more and more; and one Sabbath morning he said to his wife: "Janet, I canna go the Kirk to-day; I must e'en rest and keep my Sabbath at home. God can bless me here, for He kens my will is guide."

And he did keep his Sabbath at home. His place was empty in the Old Kirk, and Alick resolved from that hour to sacrifice his wishes to his father's comfort. So at night he said:

"Father, let me go out instead of you to-morrow. I think the sheep will be safe with me, and I will fold them at night. I will be very careful, father."

The father shook his head; but when morning came he was weak and ill, and sent the lad to the fold with a sad and doubtful heart. It was a bright cold day in March, and the work was dreary enough. Alick's hands were pinched with cold, and the duties of a shepherd were not to his taste. Winds blew as winds rarely do blow among the Scotch mountains, and the sheep instead of heeding his voice, flew away when he spoke; for they knew him not. A strange dog, too, belonging to a neighboring shepherd, came and scattered them. It was of no use for poor Alick to hunt for his sheep, for he scarcely knew one from another. At last, he called in the help of an old shepherd who lived on an opposite hill. His dog it was that had broken in amongst the flock; and by the time the sun had set all were found but one. One was missing.

"How have you sped to-day, Alick, my lad?" said his father, as the boy, sad and tired returned to his home that night.

"Ill, very ill, father, the sheep would not hear me, nor follow me, nor be driven by me; but as soon as I went near they all scampered away. What can be the reason, father? I tried always; I coaxed, and scolded, and whistled, and tried the pipe, but they would not hear me. Ah! I don't like shepherding, father; and the sheep they seem to me a stupid kind of beasts. I don't like sheep."

"Aye, lad, you have told the secret now; you don't love sheep. Home is sweeter to you, Alick, than the hill-side; and the book and the learning still better. You will not do for a shepherd's boy, that is plain. But listen now, Alick; this day upon the hills may teach thee a great lesson; nay, don't shake thy head, boy—I will not send it to again but listen to the lesson for all that. Who was it that left His home of holiness above to come and fold his sheep, worse sheep than thine, Alick, and wandered further, too?"

The boy bowed his head and whispered, "Jesus."

"Aye, Jesus, my lad. Is thy book dearer to thee, thinkest thou, than the praises of angels and the love of the Father in the joy of which Jesus had lived from before the beginning of the world?"

"No, father," was Alick's answer.

"Was your heart full of love to the poor, helpless, erring things when, as you said you called, coaxed and shouted? And when the dog came, didst thou ward him off, face him, and take up thy crook?"

"Nay, father, I ran away."

"Ah! Alick, when Satan tempted Jesus, He, for the sake of His sheep, hunted not. When He was left alone, and His disciples fled, He, forsaken as He was, prayed in an agony for His sheep. His children, whom He had come to save. And at last, when wicked men laid hands upon Him, He meekly gave up His life. No man took it from Him, for he had power to take it again; but He died to save His sheep. Wilt thou not love Jesus Christ; wilt thou not follow Him as the Good Shepherd?"

The boy was melted, and by his bed-side that night he did pray to be guided by Him alone.

At five o'clock in the next morning he was dressed and reading his little Bible by the faint light of a rush candle. At six he was on his way to the fold. The seed fell on good ground. Alick was from that day a boy of prayer and faith. If a shepherd's life were not quite to his taste, he remembered that the Good Shepherd pleased not Himself, and he did not repine.

It was a May evening, bright and lovely; the storms were all hushed, the young lambs were bleating, and remembering the Scripture words and his father's example of tending the weak and little ones of the flock Alick had carried one sickly lamb, whose mother had died, to his home, there to be nursed and cared for. As he bore it to his bosom, he softly murmured those words, in the silence of the blue hills, "He shall carry the lambs in his arms."

When he opened the cottage door the kitchen was empty; but for the presence of the two younger children, there was a solemn hush in the house. The mother's seat was empty, and one of the little girls said, in a solemn voice, "Father's worse."

It was the work of a moment to lay the lamb on the hearth, and to rush into the sick room. It was a dying room. Long had Jamie Armstrong's song been, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want;" but now, in the hour of death, as his soon stood by his bedside, he heard him whisper, "When I pass through the valley of the shadow of death I fear no evil, for Thou art with me."

He opened his eyes when Alick took his cold hand and said: "Follow the Good Shepherd, my lad; He has given His life for the sheep, and still liveth for them." And so he died.

Alick never left his mountain life; and day by day, as he tended his flock, he remembered the first great lesson of love to the Saviour, and now loves to lead other wandering sheep into the fold, and to tell the story of the Good Shepherd.—South-Western Presbyterian.

Nothing to Do.

Kit had taken a slight cold, and so she did not have to go to school. Although glad enough to stay at home, she could think of nothing in particular to do, and after breakfast she wandered around the house aimlessly for awhile. She finally strayed into her father's study. No one was there. On the table was the unfinished sermon, just where her father had left it. Kit glanced over the neatly written pages but did not attempt to read them. Then she went into the sitting-room; but her mother was not there, for she had gone out also. Kit returned to the study, feeling a little lonesome, and for lack of better enjoyment she built a large fire on the hearth. She placed the back-log and fore-log in their places; and this done she sat down in a big chair to enjoy the blaze. She had not sat there long, when she heard a queer rustle, and turning toward the door, she saw enter a half-dozen crash towels. They were sighing at a tremendous rate; and finally one of them said quite plainly:

"She promised she'd hem us the first day she could; and she hasn't thought of us once."

Kit's conscience reproached her. She was just going to excuse herself, when a pair of thick-soled walking boots shuffled in.

"Seven buttons off!" they groaned dismally; "and she declared she would sew them on the first day she had time."

Kit felt much ashamed; but she could think of nothing to say, so she sat very still, blushing, however, a good deal, for the crash towels and walking boots were staring at her most unpleasantly.

The silence was growing oppressive. The towels and shoes stared and stared, until poor Kit felt very much like crying; and she would have done so had not her attention been attracted by a funny scraping noise in the hall. The towels bent their heads forward to look, and the shoes turned themselves squarely around to look, there entered Kit's upper bureau drawer. Such a looking thing as it was! It was crammed full with ribbons, pins, bits of jewelry, collars, cuffs, morsels of very sticky taffy candy, fancy work, chestnut shells, handkerchiefs, gloves, some apples, notes from the school girls—a little of everything, in fact; and it seemed as though Kit had stirred them all together like a pudding. The crash towels laughed disagreeably, and the boots spunked up disdainfully. "She was going to put me in order as soon as she had time," said the knob of the drawer, meaningly. Bang! From off the top shelf dropped a fat history of the United States, and as it landed on the floor, its leaves opened at the account of the settlement of New York by the Dutch in 1610.

Kit's cheek grew redder yet. She had promised her father to read that sometime when she had nothing else to do; and here she had dawdled away nearly a whole morning in trying to amuse herself. She looked sadly at the unhemmed towels, the grinning shoes, the disordered bureau drawer, and the history; and they looked at her in such a disagreeable way that Kit put her hands up before her face and began to sob. Straightway the shoes hopped up and began to kick her, the crash towels slapped her face, the bureau drawer flung apples at her, and the fat history climbed up on top of her head and began to push her in the fire. With a great effort Kit tried to get away, and at last she succeeded in rolling off her chair to the floor. Then she woke up. She moved her eyes and stared around the quiet room, and after a second she realized that she had been dreaming. Straightway she rose and went to her own room, took the six crash towels out of the basket, and hemmed them till dinner time.—Independent.

"Grant that we may grow old wisely." This was the way a young minister prayed in meeting in the presence of some very old, and kind, and queer deacons. It was a very good petition, and one which brings us face to face with a subject we all dislike to think about, but one which we must each one face for himself, if we only live long enough.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met in this city on the fourteenth and fifteenth of January, 1879, and organized under a regular act of incorporation. On account of the former publisher's inability to go on with the business of the paper, the undersigned sub-committee were authorized to make a contract with some other party to take charge of the business, and to print and issue the paper. We have accordingly made a contract with Mr. G. T. Lathrop for this purpose, who will hereafter attend to the business affairs of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and to whom all communications on the business of the paper should be addressed for the future. Our agents and subscribers are assured that all business with them will meet with prompt attention, and that the paper will be regularly and promptly issued. We bespeak for the ADVOCATE the continued good will of our people, and the efforts of all to extend its circulation.

Possibilities and Necessities of Revivals.

"When a church does every day, and all the time, what it ought to do, a revival is impossible." So writes Dr. Holland in Scribner's Monthly. And again he says: "The revival is only rendered necessary and possible by a period of spiritual declension and death."

On the contrary, we should say that the greatest and best revivals are only possible when the church does every day, and all the time, what it ought to do. This condition and attitude of working and waiting are precisely those in which a revival is almost sure to come. The spirit of grace and of supplication comes first, and then the refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The difference between this view and that of Dr. Holland may arise from using the same words in a different sense. But we certainly mean more by a revival than waking up the church to faithful and zealous performance of duty. It is something beyond this—an extraordinary outpouring of the Spirit by which the church, already alive, is raised to a still higher plane of experience and power, and by which the world is stirred, aroused, and sinners in large numbers are converted.

The churches may always have the elements of progress, and there should be a continuous work in spiritual growth, and in the conversion of souls. That may be regarded as a revival which merely brings the church up to what should be its normal and effective condition, but it does not exhaust the definition, nor does it really touch the highest and best meaning of the word. The church most alive and active prays most importunately for a revival. There are blessings ordinarily attendant upon the means of grace, and there is reaping at the time; but there is still room and reason for a revival. There is the ordinary and healthful church life, and the extraordinary manifestations of the Holy Spirit. The same is true of the individual Christian life. Not only may the cold, the lukewarm, the backslider, be revived, but a work of special power and glory may be wrought in the hearts of the most devoted. The best type of revivals is not necessarily preceded by a low condition of spiritual life, nor is it necessarily followed by a period of declension and reaction. The condition before and after may be perfectly normal, healthful and prosperous. The revival is the extraordinary dispensation of the Spirit, and its mission is to so replenish the energies and spiritual forces of the individual and of the church as to keep both up to their highest point of usefulness and power.

We are aware that Dr. Holland's views and philosophy of revivals are common, but nothing can be more superficial or erroneous. Revivals are special visitations from on high, not so much to bring dead churches to life as to feed and strengthen the living, and to advance the growing and vigorous to higher planes of experience and endeavor. They are not one extreme to balance the opposite, giving alternate periods of rise and decline, but they are something belonging to God's methods, and subserving an end in connection with the ordinary and regular ministrations of the word and Spirit. The revival is not opposed to daily work and continuous results. These are to be, and yet the revival is needed, is to be looked for, prayed for.

The notion of Dr. Holland, somehow, begins to obtain that a revival is neither needed nor possible unless things are in a bad way, and the church is dying. "No revival, but a steady work," is the complacent report. This is better than a revival, and death before and after it. But suppose the report is "a steady work, conversions every week, and a revival?" The steady work is the normal and healthy state of every church; the revival is the extraordinary outpouring of the Spirit which comes to a living church, to breathe into it additional energy, and to qualify it for renewed and wider effort. We are never doing so well that the special blessing can be dispensed with. The steady work, and the constant and gracious presence of the Holy Spirit, are things we can always have. There may be laws connected with the divine sovereignty upon which revivals depend, and which place them more beyond our control, but the way to have them is to feel that we need them, and that God can send them. Their need and their existence do not depend upon death and backsliding in the church, but rather upon the wise and merciful ordination of the Head of the church.

Not only among magazine writers, but among our own people, is there occasion for a more true and philosophical conception of this subject. In order to a revival previous stagnation is not necessary. The possibility of it is where there is most of healthy activity, and where there is most of prayer and consecration.

Notes from Nashville.

Bishop McTyeire, and Drs. Wilson and Young, returned last week from the Louisiana Conference, safe and sound. They appear to have been well pleased with their visit to New Orleans. Of course they were. The Conference treated them well. Dr. Young seems to be very glad and grateful for the liberal response to his appeal for the Publishing House or rather the successful disposal of the Publishing House bonds. You knew he was not a beggar. He offers the quid pro quo. The Book Committee, agent and business manager seem to breathe more freely now. I predict that their respiration will be improved still more after the session of the Baltimore Conference—the mother of all.

We are in the midst of the feast of dedication. New McKendree was opened yesterday. It is an elegant, commodious, acceptable edifice, that reflects great credit on all concerned. Dr. Kelley is happy; so are his people—they have reason to be. A large congregation was present on Sunday morning. Bishop McTyeire preached. Just after he had taken his text I was summoned to the house of a dear friend, who seemed to be in the article of death—Miss Fanny O'Bryan, well known as an excellent teacher of young ladies. She is at the head of an institution of high grade. I know not her superior, well learned, brilliant, apt to teach, generous and kind, and one of the brightest ornaments of the Presbyterian Church. Earnest prayer was offered in our churches for her recovery. We wait with trembling interest for the result. She was still living when I returned last night from McKendree, where I preached. I am writing by the lamp. In two or three hours I shall know whether she is on earth or in heaven. She expressed herself ready for her removal to her home on high. But if her pneumonia had been more distressing than it was, and she had not been able to express her feelings, no one would have wanted a dying testimony from one who had, by grace, developed so beautiful a character, and led so useful a life.

Dr. McFerrin is to deliver a lecture to night in McKendree, on the History of Methodism in Nashville. A rich treat is expected. The doctor knows it well.

Dr. Young will lecture another night on the Literary Aspects of Methodism.

Prof. Doggett will lecture another night on "A Bible Club" which he attended in Germany, at which Delitzch was the inspiring genius. I am prepared to say it will be a treat.

The Sunday-school will have a night's benefit.

Next Sunday morning Dr. Wilson, secretary of the Board of Missions, will preach at McKendree, when Bishop Paine is to conduct the formal dedication service—that is congruous and proper, as Dr. Paine was the first pastor of McKendree station.

Ruler of Heaven's eternal sphere,
Be thou the guardian glory here.

Prof. Lipscomb has begun his lectures for the second term of Vanderbilt. They are on the Laws of Thought, Julius Cæsar in Shakspeare, and Milton's Paradise Lost. They are rich. The examinations for the half session just closed were rigid. Though the formal report has not yet been made by the chancellor, I am safe in saying that it will be highly creditable to professors and students.

There are a good many accessions of students this term. The Biblical Department is filling up, and the students are doing well.

I am frequently written to concerning this department, and I beg to say that registers, giving full information on the premises, will be sent to all applicants by Mr. J. M. Leech, secretary of the faculty, or to the Rev. Dr. R. A. Young, secretary of the Board of Trust. Every one coming to Wesley Hall must be a licensed preacher. Let all concerned note that.

I wish you could have heard Dr. Granbery's New Year's sermon, and Dr. Dodd's sermon yesterday in Vanderbilt Chapel. Dr. Dodd discoursed on the formation and development of character, showing that man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word of God. Our young men must be taught wherein true greatness consists, and how it is attained. What a rule is this for all who have the training of the young!

After a terrible week of frost, snow and rain, we have clear weather, but seasonably cold. But the psalmist says it is God's cold—He sends it. "He giveth snow like wool, and scattereth the hore frost like ashes. He casteth forth his ice like morsels—who is able to abide his frost?"—as it reads in the old version. We are to praise God for winter as well as summer, and I suppose that is what is meant in the "Benedicite"—we are to do what we call on inanimate objects to do; we are to do it for them, as "the priests of nature." "O ye winter and summer, O ye dews and frosts. O ye frost and cold. O ye ice and snow. Bless ye the Lord. Praise him and magnify him forever!"

Repeating Sermons and Sermonizing.

From Bishop Simpson's Yale lecture, on the preparation of a sermon, we give the concluding part:

A foolish impression exists in the minds of many against the repetition of a sermon; but what do we see in ordinary life around us? The lecturer on the platform delivers the same lectures for a dozen years. I have alluded to Phillips repeating the same lecture for thirty years. Gough has been mimicking peculiar people, and Colfax has been across the continent, in almost every lecture-field, and people admire, applaud, and hear again. The politician goes through an entire canvass, not unfrequently repeating the same speech every day, and many of the same people listening to him. The songs of our sanctuaries are none the less sweet because they have been sung again and again. The ritualist offers the same prayer Sabbath after Sabbath, year in and year out, and his congregation is not weary, and even some non-ritualists acquire almost the same repetition in their devotional services. I remember to have listened in New York to a prayer in the opening service, which I greatly admired for its richness of thought, its comprehensiveness, its aptness and beauty of expression, and its fervency of spirit. I walked with a friend after service who was religious and yet humorous. I spoke as I thought of the remarkable beauty and grandeur of the prayer, when my friend replied, "Yes, it is very beautiful. I have always admired it for twenty years."

If repetition is permitted to the medical lecturer for each succeeding class, to the professor of law in each different course, to the ordinary lecturer, to the politician, why may not the minister, with great propriety, repeat a discussion which has commanded his best efforts, and is on a subject of essential importance to the congregation? Few men, however, could do what Dr. Chalmers did. When crowds attended his ministry he sometimes announced in the morning that he would repeat the same sermon in the afternoon. On one occasion, when he made that announcement, Dr. Wardlaw was present, and gives us an account of the scene. The seats were occupied an hour before the time, but doors were closed and the main entrance was kept vacant for better ventilation. An immense crowd was without, and as soon as Chalmers entered from the vestry, in spite of the door-keepers, the front door was torn open, even from its hinges, and the pressing crowd filled every available spot in the church. Chalmers was grieved, and administered a sharp rebuke. Walking home with him, Chalmers said to Wardlaw: "I preached the same sermon in the morning, and for the very purpose of preventing the oppressive annoyance of such a densely crowded place, I intimated that I should preach it again in the evening," and added: "Have you ever tried that plan?" Wardlaw says: "I did not smile—I laughed outright. 'No, no,' I replied, 'my good friend, there are but very few of us that are under the necessity of having recourse to the use of means for getting thin audiences.'" Like Dr. Wardlaw, I have never tried the plan, but if any of you should be overwhelmed with auditors, it might be worth your while to try the experiment. Never, however, repeat a sermon through indolence, or to avoid the labor of preparing a new one.

As to sermonizing, I feel my incompetency to advise. I have never been a systematic sermonizer. I have already said to you that in my early ministry I believed it impossible for me to become a successful preacher in the sense of being an orator. In addition to this, my health was very delicate, and I anticipated, at the longest, only two or three years of service. At that time, in the church to which I belonged, there were no theological schools; and in the West no theological seminary, founded by any church, had gained much reputation; hence I commenced my ministry without any specific theological training. I had read my Bible thoroughly from my earliest childhood, for I have no memory when I could not read; and my study in the original languages, more especially in the Greek, had been for years a delightful occupation; but no one had told me how to make a sermon. I had listened to good preachers, but the only sermons I had ever read were those of Mr. Wesley. I did not know there was such a thing as a skeleton, or a book of skeletons of sermons; and in my youthful innocence I would as soon have stolen money from a bank as to have attempted to appropriate a sermon which I had either heard or read. I remember well how, about the close of my first year, an older minister put into my hand, and offered to lend me, a book of sketches. I happened to have common sense enough to decline the offer; so, without knowing how a sermon was made, save as mentioned, I began to preach. I did not try to make sermons. I felt I must, at the peril of my soul, persuade men to come to Christ. I must labor to the utmost of my ability to get sinners converted, and believers advanced in holiness. For this I thought and studied, wept and fasted and prayed. My selection of words, my plan of discourse, was only and all the time to persuade men to be reconciled to God. I never spoke without the deepest feeling, and unless I saw a strong divine influence on the congregation, or knew of some soul being converted, I felt sad, and sought retirement to humble myself before God in prayer. My sermons were not well arranged; sometimes had divisions, for I had heard ministers say firstly, and secondly, and thirdly. Sometimes I had a line written out here and there, and sometimes a few catch-words on a scrap of paper, but which I seldom, if ever, carried into the pulpit, and very few of which I ever preserved. My ministry was one of exhortation rather than of sermonizing; and I looked for immediate results under every effort, or to me it was a failure. So my early ministry was formed. Whatever my method was, it was purely my own, and was adopted, as I have said, not to make sermons, but to bring men to God. No one could have been more surprised than myself when I began to find, not only that souls were awakened and converted, but that friends began to speak kindly of my simple talks as sermons. So I finished my first year. My second year I was stationed in Pittsburg, where I was compelled to preach three times on Sabbath and once at least during the week, but not always to the same congregation. I was so driven, it seemed as if I could not change my plans. At the end of my first year there I had preached all I knew, and expected to be relieved. But I was unexpectedly returned, to preach three times on the Sabbath and once a week to the same congregation.

I had a membership of four hundred, scattered over the city. In addition to my preaching, I led the public prayer-meeting, spent one evening with my official members, led two classes, took a deep interest in the Sunday-school, and formed a class of young men, whom I encouraged in their reading, and helped in some slight degree to prepare for the ministry. And so, not expecting to be a preacher, I preached on; and expecting to live, I lived on. Many a time I resolved I would prepare better, and yet I often found myself brought up to Saturday evening or Sunday morning with comparatively slight preparation for the Sabbath. But I studied intensely. I arose early and spent my forenoons faithfully—not in sermon-writing, but in mastering standard works on theology, mental philosophy, and the natural sciences, of which I was passionately fond. I studied on my feet, and found my sermons among the sick and poor, in garrets and in cellars. Not expecting ever to do much in the pulpit, I spoke to men everywhere of Jesus and his love, and had the satisfaction of seeing many scores brought to the foot of the cross. I expected by and by to find leisure to make better sermons, but I have never found it. My boat got on the stream, and I have been borne down the rapid current without the time to rest until I can almost see the mouth of the river and the boundless ocean. I would not advise any young man to do as I have done. I would breathe into you, if I could, the earnestness and love of souls, and the devotion of my earlier ministry; but I would urge you to make a better preparation, and to become workmen more approved both of God and man.

The preacher who knows the cares, perplexities and daily trials incident to secular pursuits will be patient with his congregation and members when they seem to be dull and hard to interest. If the preacher were, as they are, in constant contact and conflict with the affairs of business, he would often find himself in a poor frame of mind for the prayer-meeting and the Sunday sermon. To do his work well the minister must be delivered from the things that occupy and harrass his people, and yet he cannot meet their needs without some personal knowledge and experience of those things. As the great High Priest was made like unto his brethren, and as he is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, so the preacher must be capable of sympathy, and not keep himself aloof from the thoughts and feelings which pervade his hearers. Scolding is, of course, out of the question. No wise man ever scolds. But his chidings, admonitions and rebukes should be administered as by one who knows what it is to encounter the toil, weariness and disappointment connected with business pursuits. It is his mission to help the care-worn and the pre-occupied, and troubled and distracted, and to call them away from their daily anxieties and cares to the contemplation of spiritual and heavenly objects. A Sabbath, rather than a secular man, is best for them, but he must also be a man full of week-day sympathy, and one who can put himself in the place of a busy and jaded people, and be considerate of their condition.

Bishop Simpson's Yale lectures on Preaching are the most popular of any that have been delivered. He gives his own experience on nearly every topic discussed, and this experience would seem to indicate that the need of such lectures is not very great. The head of the Northern Methodist pulpit, and the peer of the greatest living preachers, had no other ministerial training than the Methodist itinerancy. The experience and advice of such a man are, of course, of value, but the inference from all is that the preacher is a work of nature and of grace, rather than a work of art. The lecturer never sermonized, never gave any thought to the mere dress and manner, but studied hard, worked hard, prayed much, and talked right on with a full heart glowing with the love of souls, and became great and distinguished without ever thinking of such a result. This is something for ambitious young preachers to consider. Then, again, the Bishop declares that he owes his life and health to the early circuit exercise, and to frequent preaching. Preaching was to him the best of medicines, saving him from a consumptive's grave. Where one man is killed by work a hundred prolong their lives by it. People can well spare their sympathies in this direction. Frequent, and earnest, hearty preaching is the healthiest work in the world. A sermon a day, with a ten-mile ride, on a Methodist circuit, are the best prescription known for weak lungs and a feeble constitution.

We are glad to see that the House of Representatives of the Louisiana Legislature recently passed the bill repealing the act which established the Louisiana Lottery Company. It was passed by a large majority, and the action of the House speaks well for its members. The Senate Committee has also reported favorably on the bill, and we sincerely wish that the bill may pass promptly, and that the State may be delivered from this demoralizing, gambling institution. If there should be much opposition in the Senate, the people should by all means hold their servants to account for the manner in which they have met this important question. Possibly there may be honest differences of opinion in regard to the measure, but we believe that nine-tenths of the people are in favor of it. We do not see how any who have the moral and material welfare of the country at heart can hesitate to use their influence to overthrow this form of licensed gambling. The moral sense of the country demands that it be done away as speedily as possible.

History of the Mississippi Conference.

A PROPOSITION.

MR. EDITOR: Please say to the brethren of the Mississippi Conference, and all concerned, that Bro. J. E. Jagers and I will be two of one hundred to give $10 each to have Bro. Jones' History of Methodism in Mississippi published. We are exceedingly anxious to see the book in print while Bro. Jones is among us. Let all who will give the amount specified send their names to the ADVOCATE at once.

Your brother,
H. P. LEWIS.

HOLMESVILLE, MISS., Jan. 15, 1879.

We know of nothing that can more highly commend a college to our people than this which the Richmond Christian Advocate says of Randolph Macon:

We commend the usages of the Methodists at Ashland and Randolph Macon College to the attention of those who say "old-fashioned Methodism is dead." Doubtless some of them have their foibles—but they believe in class-meetings. There are nine weekly classes held among the young men of the college and the citizens, and a general class every Sunday evening, which is well attended, and has been a great blessing to many. If you want your sons reared to love your own church, there is no better place to educate them than Randolph Macon College. This is your school; stand by it.

TO THE BRETHREN OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Please write to Bro. William H. Watkins, at Jackson, giving him your present postoffice address, also the amount of money you paid for publishing minutes, so he may know where to send your minutes.

H. P. LEWIS.

HOLMESVILLE, MISS., Jan. 15, 1879.

Bishop Andrews, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, preached in Ames Methodist Episcopal Church, New Orleans, Sunday morning, January 27. He presides over the Louisiana Conference of the Northern Methodist Church, which convened in this city yesterday, January 30.

Dr. Young did a better business in four per cent. bonds at the Louisiana Conference than we stated. The amount taken was $14,000. And we have no doubt this will be largely increased.

Books and Periodicals.

A SELECTION OF SPIRITUAL SONGS, With Music. For the church and the choir. Selected and arranged by Rev. Charles S. Robinson, D. D. Scribner & Co.: New York.

This work impresses us very favorably. It contains 1,086 hymns from the best sources; those of Watts and Wesley predominating, and all arranged under appropriate heads. The music is given in close connection with the hymns, and convenient for the singer, and selected with good taste and judgment. The indexes of tunes, meters, authors, Scripture texts, stanzas, subjects and hymns, are full and complete. The volume is substantially bound, and type and paper excellent.

—St. Nicholas for February is, as usual, splendidly illustrated, and abounds in taking articles. The frontispiece is a very sweet and curious picture entitled "Helping Mother." The following are the titles of some of the articles: A Story of a Stone; Modern Improvements at the Peterkins; Besieged by a Rhinoceros; About Violins; The Half-Timer; The Nest on Wheels; Rumpty-Dudgets Tower; A Jolly Fellowship.

—Scribner's Monthly for February is a fine number of this popular magazine. The frontispiece is a portrait of Ralph Waldo Emerson. Among other valuable and entertaining articles we note: The Tile Club at Play; The Glacier Meadows of the Sierra; To the Clergy; A Symposium on the Chinese Question; The Homes and Haunts of Emerson; The Fortunes and Misfortunes of Company "C;" Falconberg; Aerial Navigation; The Relations of Insanity to Modern Civilization.

—Lippincott's Magazine for February has: Hungarian Types and Austrian Pictures, illustrated; A Gate to the Nether World, illustrated; Substitution; Women's Husbands; An Hungarian Artist, illustrated; Lord Beaconsfield; The Latter Days of the Blennerhassetts; The Daughter of the Legion of Honor.

—Appleton's Journal for February has: The Romance of a Painter; The Shakspeareau Myth; A Man May Not Marry His Grandmother; English Literature—a chapter from a new history; The Historical Aspect of the United States, by Dean Stanley; The Judgment of Midas—Spencer on Certain Present Phenomena of the Imagination; Intolerance and Persecution; Verify Your Compass; Some Modern Artists—Fortuny, Millais, the Greek Artists of England, Leslie; Editor's Table; Books of the Day.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

—It is announced by Dr. Mullens, foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, that the very important problem of a safe and expeditious route from Zanzibar to Central Africa has been solved. The Society has been preparing, as is well known, to establish a mission on Lake Tanganyika. Great difficulties were encountered in transporting goods over the long journey. Numerous bearers had to be employed, who charged exorbitant prices, and large quantities of goods were stolen or thrown away. The directors of the Society, believing that if the South African wagon, which carries three thousand pounds burden and is drawn by oxen, could be brought into use for the journey to Tanganyika many of the evils of the old system of transportation could be done away with. Accordingly, the Rev. Roger Price, for seventeen years a member of the Bechuana Mission, was deputed last May to examine the subject and see what could be done. He procured a cart and trained bullocks to draw it, and in June set out on the journey to Tanganyika from Saadani, a small town at the mouth of the Wami river, Zanzibar. He followed the route suggested by the chief and people of Saadani and achieved a complete success. In twenty-six days he reached Mpwapwa, on the plateau, bullocks and all; rested four days, and in sixteen days more was at Saadani, on the coast, again, safe and well. In an account which he has given in person to the directors in London he says there is no jungle nor swamp, no hill nor tsetse fly, nor other serious obstacles on the route which he traveled. Dr. Mullen says:

"On leaving Saadani, he came at once on high land, a spur of the Usagara Hills, which here reaches right down to the coast. He had no swampy plain, such as the Bagamoyo route presents. The jungle is rather thick at an early point of the route; but it was cut down with ease. A little later he had to pass through a thicker wood, and the cutting a road open cost rather severe labor. The cart proceeded a long way on; but at last was caught on a hidden stump in the grass, and was broken in two. Leaving the cart, Mr. Price took the bullocks on, in order to make sure about the tsetse. The ascents were not difficult and the inner valleys were not deep. He found the Ngura Mountains nearer the coast than he expected, and, having pushed along for a time, he suddenly turned into a gap of the hills, thirty miles long, and went through on comparatively level ground, with hills high on each side. The streams in the valleys gave little trouble. On his return, near the end of July, they were quite easy to pass. On going, one was deep; two others were crossed by bridges. Near the upper part of the course he found a large population and herds of cattle. There was no tsetse all the way. The people everywhere were hospitable and kind. There were no gangs of slaves. Food was sold at ordinary rates. The entire cost of the journey from Zanzibar to Mpwapwa and back was a little over £200."

Dr. Kirk is enthusiastic over the discovery, and the merchants of Zanzibar believe that trade with Central Africa can be greatly developed.

—There has been a convention of Liberals, under the auspices of the Free Thinker's Association of Western New York, at Watkin's Glen. A series of resolutions, fifteen in number, was adopted, in which religious questions occupy but little space and attention. The entire separation of church and State is demanded in the abolition of all national and state chaplaincies, of the use of the Bible and other theological books in the army, navy, and public schools, in the taxation of church property, and in the competency of all persons as witnesses in courts, without regard to religious belief or the absence of all such belief. The resolutions demand the repeal of the "Comstock Postal Laws" and the dismissal of the agent, denounce certain cases of arrest and punishment for violation of the laws against obscenity, declare sympathy with the laboring classes, favor woman suffrage, denounce certain ecclesiastical courts for refusal to recognize the right of women to preach, and congratulate the Liberals on the harmony displayed in the convention.

ITALY.—Papacy and Culture.—Pope Leo XIII., in reply to a deputation from the Arcadian Academy of Rome, delivered an address on modern culture, which is now, somewhat tardily, published officially. In spirit it is certainly in singular contrast to some of his predecessor's vigorous objurgations of modern culture. The present Pope says:

"The Roman Pontiffs have always sheltered the arts and sciences under their protection. Under the protection of the church they have developed their power and their vigor. For the sublime thoughts of faith and religion with which all men of great genius are inspired, they are indebted to that divine impress which is vainly sought for in the ranks of infidelity and mere naturalism. . . . Follow then your noble labors and keep in high reverence the honor of human literature, treading carefully in the steps of the great masters of the classical school. We are reminded of that expedient which Julian the Apostate adopted when he desired to degrade the Christians of his time and make them contemptible in the eyes of pagan society: He forbade them to study or cultivate literature. Do not permit this weapon to remain in the hands of our enemies, but rather, by the preserving study of the sciences and letters, train yourselves to use it dexterously, that by it you may obtain victory."

AMERICAN HEBREW CONGRESS.—At the meeting of the National Council of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, held in Milwaukee this month, the creation of a single representative body, which has been long desired, was effected. Instead of two organizations there will hereafter be one, known as the "Union of American Hebrew Congregations." It will seek to promote the following objects: 1. To establish and maintain institutions for instruction in the higher branches of Hebrew literature and theology. 2. To establish relations with kindred organizations in other parts of the world for the relief of Jews from political oppression, and to aid in their intellectual elevation. 3. To promote religious instruction of the young by training competent teachers, and encouraging study of the Scripture without interfering with worship, schools or other congregational institutions. 4. The Union will meet hereafter once in two years.

A NEW SUNDAY SCHOOL SYSTEM.—The Sunday-school Society of Brooklyn received a new impulse at the recently held New York State Sunday school Convention. Schools have already been established by it in France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Hungary, South America and Asia. Monthly meetings are held, at which letters from the schools abroad are read, and the society's operations are reviewed. The Sunday school system, as it is known in the United States, has been but imperfectly developed on the Continent of Europe, and it is the object of this society to develop it. The plan proposed at the Convention for raising funds contemplates the placing of a contribution box in every Sunday-school of our country, with the request that each scholar give one cent a year. Boxes will be furnished gratuitously by the president of the Foreign School Society, Mr. Woodruff, No. 130 State street, Brooklyn.

—A prosperous work in behalf of the "Street Arabs" of Florence, Italy, carried on by Dr. Comandi, is now in the fourth year of its operation. Dr. Comandi's Protestant Industrial Home for boys consists of extensive premises and workshops, and has seventy lads under training. A preaching hall which will seat four hundred persons has been opened in connection with it, the cost of the building having been paid by an English physician living in Florence. The opening services were attended by the pastors of all the different branches of evangelical work in the city.

—There are now in London and suburbs 361 Anglican churches, being an increase of 124 churches in ten years. Of these churches 42 have daily communion, against 11 in 1869; 35 have eucharistic vestments, whereas only 14 had them in 1869; and 14 use incense, being an increase of 9 in 10 years. Some 58 use altar lights, and in 179 the eastward position is taken. Some 380 have voluntary choirs, and 252 have free seats.

—Every missionary organ should embalm the name of the philanthropist, Christopher R. Robert. He founded the college which bears his name at Constantinople. The New York Evangelist says: "He has in his will still further provided both for its endowment and to meet its current expenses. In the discontinuance of the college, the money is to be used for evangelical and Protestant educational work in the Turkish empire."

—The following named persons have been chosen Bishops of the Moravian Church: J. F. W. Kuhn, in the German Province, and William Taylor in the British. Preparations are being made for the meeting of the General Synod in 1880. This body meets only once in ten or twelve years. It represents the whole Church.

—The editors of the Catholic press of the United States are to hold a convention September nine. One of the Catholic papers says the movement to obtain unity among the conductors of the church press will fail.

—The Provincial Sunday-school Convention for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec will be held in Peterborough, Ont., on October 8, 9 and 10. Our American Sunday-school workers from the United States will be welcomed and hospitably entertained, if due notice is given to the Rev. William Millard, General Secretary, Toronto.

—The Methodist Conferences in Sweden and Norway have just been held by Bishop Bowman. In the latter there has been an increase of 127 members during the year, and in the former an addition of 751. There is a noticeable increase of local preachers and ministerial probationers in both Conferences.

—There are only 176 churches in St. Louis. Of these 42 are Catholics, 26 Presbyterian, 16 Episcopalian (is this correct?), 13 Lutheran, and 25 Methodist—various branches. In the table from which these figures are taken there are the following unconnected items: "New Jerusalem, 1." "Swedenborgian, 1." We should like to have somebody explain the difference between the two.

—The Presbyterian Church in Canada now presents a united front, making an aggregate of over 600 ministers, and about 90,000 members. The reorganization includes five Synods.

—The Irish Presbyterian Church reports the largest income ever before received—$771,765. This is almost twice as much as was received in 1865. The Church has 79 157 families in its congregations.

—The Presbyterians of Cincinnati celebrated the semi-centennial of a great revival in the First Church of that city. On July 28, 1828, 88 persons were received into the church, of whom twenty-four were present at this celebration.

—More than 3,000 Hindoos during the past year have renounced idolatry and professed Christianity.

—The Swiss Confederacy has notified the Cantons that it will not receive another papal nuncio.

—D. Weikert, of Crestford, Ohio, has given $20,000 to Wittenberg College, in that State.

HARTE'S COD LIVER OIL.—This oil is highly spoken of by those who have used it. It is made from pure, fresh Norwegian oil, always palatable, and superior to any similar compound. For sale by Frederickson & Harte, 139 Canal street.

A FEW SUGGESTIVE FACTS.—Many persons think that low prices make things cheap. They seem to forget that there is quality, class or grade in everything that bears a name, and to determine the question of cheapness these elements must be considered with the price, before a correct answer can be given. It cannot be denied, but that considering both quality and price, one yard of calico may be dear at four cents, and another cheap at ten cents; that one pound of butter may be dear at twenty cents, and another cheap at forty cents. One horse may be dear at $50, and another cheap at $75; one Sewing Machine may be dear at $25, while another is cheap at $15.

Low prices mean poor construction, ill-paid labor, second and third-class material, all of which indicates undurability. Many Sewing Machines are offered and advertised for sale at prices which would not compensate a conscientious maker for the outlay of raw material. Yet in the face of all these facts some people will persist in investing their hard-earned money in such worthless rattle-boxes, and in a very short time suffer the consequences, much to their loss and disgust. This conclusion they arrive at by considering the price only, the elements of quality being entirely omitted in their calculations, and hence their error. Now, to determine the question of cheapness, we must consider the following points:

1. The standing and reputation of the manufactory.

2. The standing and [illegible] agent you buy of.

3. The value of guarantee [illegible] offered.

4. The price charged [illegible] Considering all these [illegible] will be difficult for [illegible] who and what machine [illegible] these times to [illegible] the cheapest, [illegible] and the best is the genuine Singer [illegible] machine, manufactured [illegible] Singer Manufacturing Co.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

Every Moment's Wonderful Work.

Every moment that we live the work of destruction never ceases among what is scientifically called "the tissues" of which our bodies are composed. Every moment, if we are in health, the work of repairing this destructive process goes on with equal pace. When the vital force is great, more vigor is given to the blood and muscular fiber than the ordinary wear and tear of existence uses up. When the vital force fails from any cause, there ensues a wasting away, which, if not arrested, ends in decay and death. Physicians all declare that when these symptoms of decline set in, the only certain remedy is Cod Liver Oil. But their patients, with almost equal unanimity, say that Cod Liver Oil is so nasty, they cannot take it. The only resource left is to obtain Scott's Emulsion of the Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda. This is entirely free from disagreeable taste and odor, and is an unequaled tonic for the nerves and blood.

1879 - SHADINES - 1879.

NINTH SEASON.

Our this season's catch now ready is the finest we have ever produced. Years of trial have proved their undoubted Superiority, Purity and Economy, and being unexcelled as a Preserved Fish they are now a recognized favorite in the world's market.

The unparalled success of former seasons induced the packing of imitation goods by other parties, which were bought, by some dealers through ignorance or for their cheapness. Such purchases were attended with the usual results.

The celerity with which a luncheon or meal can be obtained, (as they require no cooking or preparation, being always ready), renders them peculiarly acceptable to travelers, picnic [illegible] and excursion parties, or for general use; their delicious piquante flavor satisfies the palate of the most fastidious, while their cheapness, being now about one half of the original, meets the requirements of the economical.

are packed in hermetically sealed tins, essentially boneless, in a mild, pleasing appetizing sauce, palatable to all, free from the oily properties of the Sardine, retaining only the natural oil of the Shad, and ready for the table at all times, for dinner, lunch or evening treat, by merely opening the box.

We are the only packers of the GENUINE SHADINES. They are our Trade Mark.

Farm, Garden and Household.

TOP DRESSING MEADOW.—The results of a single top dressing on eight plots of nearly half an acre each of sandy warm soil of our State Agricultural College Farm exhibited the following facts at the end of three years: The top dressing was applied in 1864, and the grass was cut twice each season in 1864, and 1865 and once in 1866. The produce of each cutting and of each lot was weighed separately and a perfect record kept. The results for the four seasons were as follows: On the plot to which no manure or fertilizer was applied the total weight of hay yielded per acre was 8,740 pounds. Where two bushels of plaster per acre was applied the yield per acre was 13,226 pounds, a gain of 4,484 pounds. Where five bushels of wood ashes were applied the yield per acre was 12,907 pounds, a gain of 4,165 pounds. Where three bushels of salt was sown per acre, the yield was 13,962 pounds, a gain per acre of 5,227 pounds. Where twenty loads of muck per acre was laid on, the yield was 12,816 pounds, a gain of 5,074 pounds. Where twenty loads of horse manure was laid on, the yield was 14,680 pounds, a gain of 6,224 pounds. These are results which indicate that there are fertilizers which will produce as good results as plaster. For instance, the plaster yielded a gain of fifty-one per cent., while the horse manure gave an increase of seventy-one per cent., or nearly a ton more grass per acre in the three years.—Michigan Farmer.

TIME TO MULCH STRAWBERRIES.—A corresponden of the Country Gentleman says: "Whatever may be said of the best time to mulch strawberries to protect them during the winter's cold and the spring frosts, my experience rests in putting on the mulch just after the ground has become frozen, say, one or two inches deep; cover the line between the crowns of the vines four inches deep, and over the crowns only put on inch. Straw, leaves, bog hay, or coarse grass litter, is all that is necessary for protection."

George S. Robinson, of Vermont, writes to the Rural New Yorker: "I know from twenty years' trial, that sulphur fed to sheep in their salt will drive and keep away ticks—about a tablespoonful to two quarts of salt, well mixed, twice a month, through the summer.

CHICKEN PIE.—Boil the chicken in water sufficient to make a good dressing, till the meat will easily slip from the bones—the latter to be all removed. Mix the meat well together, season with salt, butter and a little flour. Make a crust in the usual manner, line dishes two or three inches in depth with crust, put in the meat with plenty of gravy, paste over the top and bake an hour. This is a great improvement upon putting in the bones, as it does away with a choice in the parts.

The Semi-Tropical says: "Small farms make near neighbors; they make good roads; they make plenty of good schools and churches; there is more money made in proportion to the labor; less labor is wanted; everything is kept neat; less wages have to be paid for help; less time is wasted; more is raised to the acre; besides, it is tilled better; there is no watching of hired help; the mind is not kept in a worry, stew, and fret all the time."

LIME AS A LOCAL APPLICATION IN DIPHTHERIA.—In the clinical lecture by M. Bacquoy, he expressed his preference for lemon juice, as a local application in diphtheria to acids, chlorate of potash, nitrate of silver, perchloride of iron, alum or lime water. He uses it by dipping a little of cotton wool, twisted around a wire, in the juice, and pressing it against the diseased surface four or five times daily.

TO COOK SALSIFY.—Scrape the root and put into cold water immediately, when ready to cook, cut into small slices, boil until tender, make a nice white sauce of drawn butter, and pour over, or boil to a mash, mix with butter, salt, a little milk and pepper, add flour enough and mix as codfish cakes and fry in the same manner.

KILLING GRASS CATERPILLARS.—Dissolve one teaspoonful of saltpeter in a common pail full of warm, not hot, water, and sprinkle the cabbages therewith on the appearance of the worms. Two or three applications will suffice for the season. The water, besides, acts like a charm in promoting the growth of the plant.

CHEESE MUFFINS.—Four cupfuls flour, teacup sugar, teacup butter, cup yeast, four eggs, little salt, two quarts sweet milk. Let rise all night.

THE NEW YORK SUN FOR 1879.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past: To present all the news in a readable shape, and to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so far as truth can be ascertained by fallible men and women working with human pens and printing with human types.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the Truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. That is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper of the people. It is not the organ of any person, class, sect, or party. There need be no mystery about its lines and notes. It is for the honest man against the rogue every time. It is for the honest Democrat as against the dishonest Republican, and for the honest Republican as against the dishonest Democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterances of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly to whatever men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this republic was founded for the people. Whenever the Constitution and essential political principles are violated, as in the outrageous conspiracy of 1876 by which a man not elected was placed in the President's office, there the SUN remains. It keeps on for the right. That is the SUN'S idea of independence. That is the SUN'S idea of democracy. That is respect there will be no change in this price during the year 1879.

THE SUN has lately earned the hearty indorsement of hundreds of thousands of citizens of all sorts and conditions, who hope to observe that illustrated newspaper for many years to come. It will be sent by mail, postpaid, during the year 1879, for any post office in the United States, at the following rates:

DAILY SUN, a four page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 55 cents a month, or $6 50 a year; including the Sunday paper, an extra large sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7 70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is sold to clubs at the rate of 80 cents a year, postage paid. THE SUNDAY SUN is a mammoth sheet containing the best matter that can be got together for a family newspaper. Its literary and miscellaneous matter is of the highest character. Its market reports are full and complete. Its correspondence from all parts of the world is regular, prompt and interesting. Its agricultural department is conducted by practical farmers and is unsurpassed in value. Its reviews of books, the drama, music, art and the markets are trustworthy. In short, the Sunday SUN is a complete and satisfactory newspaper.

THE WEEKLY SUN is the best family newspaper published. It contains the best matter found in the Sunday SUN, and is sold at the low price of $1 20 a year, postage paid. A choice of valuable premiums is offered to clubbers. See the paper for particulars. The WEEKLY SUN is the best agricultural newspaper published. It is edited with great care, and contains the latest information about the farm, the orchard, the garden, the dairy, the stock yard, the poultry yard, the apiary, the fireside, the household, the work shop, the kitchen, the sewing circle, the library, the nursery, the drawing room, the parlor, the sitting room, the bedroom, the dining room, the cellar, the barn, the pasture, the meadow, the garret, the roof, the shed, the piazza, the porch, the veranda, the conservatory, the greenhouse, the grapery, the flower garden, the vegetable garden, the lawn, the orchard, the forest, the field, the road, the street, the square, the city, the village, the country, the state, the nation, the continent, the world, the universe, and everything else that is worth knowing about. Terms, $1 20 a year, postage paid. Address, I. W. ENGLAND, Publisher of THE SUN, New York City.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT IN MINES.—The London Mining Journal points out that, aside from its other advantages, the success of the electric light would solve a most important problem affecting the lives of many persons now working in the mines. "There appears to be no reason," says The Journal, "why electricity should not be made applicable for mining instead of lamps, and this would affect what our mining engineers and foremost chemists have long been looking for. It would give the men a light such as they never dreamt of, enabling them to get a much larger quantity of coal in a given time than it is possible for them to bring down by the light of the lamp, which barely suffices to make the blackeness of the working place visible. It would also benefit both masters and men, and greater safety would be insured, for explosions would be all but impossible, whilst the miners would be better able to guard against falls of roof and coal."

—The new electric light which they are now introducing into Paris, and which has the advantages of greater brilliancy and cheapness, has besides the sanitary advantage of being better for the eyes and more like sunlight, the further advantage of avoiding all the evils of leaking gas and the production of carbonic acid, or even of the overheating of close apartments. A kerosene flame produces as much impurity in the air as comes from the lungs of a stout man, and kerosene is responsible for two hundred deaths a year in the Unitdd States from explosions. We trust the system will soon be introduced here.

—Frederick A. Ober, of Beverly, Mass., a naturalist who has been making studies in the West Indies for the Smithsonian Institution for two years past, has transmitted to Prof. Baird a large collection of birds, embracing many species unknown to any other Institution in America.

REFINEMENT OF PETROLEUM.—A Canadian, Henry Howell by name, is said to have invented a purely mechanical process of refining petroleum, no heat being used, and the product being a brilliant white oil of forty-eight gravity and 122° fire test. No gasoline or benzine results from the process, the entire product being a standard illuminating oil far superior to that obtained by the old methods. Such a process as this will, if it proves to have all the advantages claimed for it, do away with much of the risk and expense now attending the refinement of petroleum.

Celebrated American

WORM SPECIFIC

OR

VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy, not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Wherever the above symptoms are found to exist,

will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

OR

DR. C. McLANE'S

LIVER PILLS

are not recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," but in affections of the liver, and in all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Each box has a red wax seal on the lid with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS. Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Do not be deceived upon having the genuine Dr. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Canal Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicte of the late R. H. Bacon, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet LeRoy: whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the Institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

"THE price and quality of board and tuition compares favorably with other colleges, while the peculiar constitution of the college and the influence of its surroundings render it, in my judgment, the very best and safest place for boys and young men, at a certain stage of culture, which exists in the Methodist Church South."—*Rev E. MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it, for it acts as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of the preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a true coronal part of a single drop, magnified 20 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the MILK OF MAGNESIA now offered. The difference between them is most striking for whereas the calcined or solid Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitation; in fact perfectly dissolved.

Be sure to get Milk of Magnesia. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

LAME BACK. WEAK BACK.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER.

This article is a perfect vegetable preparation, and is far superior to the ordinary porous plasters in use, as it is electrical, and at the same time a powerful counter-irritant. A few minutes after its application to the back, the patient will feel a genial warmth diffusing itself over the whole body, and in a few hours the most violent pain or weakness will disappear. Sold by druggists generally. Price 25 cents. Sent by mail on receipt of price. Depot, 114 Nassau St., New York. Beware of worthless imitations. Benson's Capcine Plasters are for sale by all druggists throughout the United States, Canada, and Europe.

Jenkin's ANNIHILATOR The Great Southern Remedy for RHEUMATISM GOUT and NEURALGIA

COTTON.

The early advices from New York and Liverpool were not of a nature to cause buyers to operate freely, consequently the demand was small; later advices, however, were less unfavorable, and we note a fair movement, the sales aggregating 7,000 bales at steady figures.

The following report of the cotton market is taken from the Democrat:

The following is the official closing of the Cotton Exchange:

	To-Day.	Yesterday.
Low ordinary	7	7
Ordinary	8	8
Good ordinary	8¼	8¼
Low middling	8¾	8¾
Middling	9	9
Good middling	9¾	9¾
Middling fair	10¾	10¾

Sales to-day, 7,000 bales. Market steady.

THE SABBATH.—I am more and more sure by experience that the reason for the observance of the Sabbath lies deep in the everlasting necessities of human nature, and, that as long as man is man, the blessedness of keeping it, not as a day of rest only, but as a day of spiritual rest, will never be annulled. I certainly do feel by experience the eternal obligation, because of the eternal necessity of the Sabbath. The soul withers without it. It thrives in proportion to its observance. The Sabbath was made for man. God made it for men in a certain spiritual state, because they needed it. The need, therefore, is deeply hidden in human nature. He who can dispense with it must be holy and spiritual, indeed. And he who, still unholy and unspiritual, would yet dispense with it is a man that would fain be wiser than his Maker. We, Christians as we are, still need the law, both in its restraints and its aid to our weakness.—F. W. Robertson.

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS THEY ARE WORTH THEIR WEIGHT IN GOLD

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (still with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles cure, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

Rev. R. L. SIMPSON, Lampasite, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and will certainly relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these Pills, is truly astonishing, as the system, being relieved of its incubus, takes on healthy action, and the food digested makes good blood, which will soon follow.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice. But if it has for some time existed, from two to three doses will be required to produce the desired effect. Persevere in the use of the Pills, and a regular daily movement, as ordained, which will soon follow.

THE GRUMBLERS.

BY MRS. HELEN A. GOODWIN.

"It rose last night, and it blows to-day,
And all last week was dull;
And the week before the rain and fog
Made all my feathers mussy."

So cropple-crown and the speckled hen,
And the three black hens together,
Sat on the curb of the ancient well
And grumbled about the weather.

Just then a gust of the dusty wind
Blinded them altogether;
And they whirled and fell plump into the well,
And soon forgot the weather.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Jan. 29.—Senate.—A bill was introduced to divide the State into seven circuits.

The Senate passed bills: To prevent administrators, guardians, etc., from mixing estate funds with their own, or covering the same; to reduce recording fees of Probate Judges, Circuit and Supreme Court Clerks and Register in Chancery.

House.—Bills were introduced to prevent shooting and hunting in Baldwin county on Sunday; to require voters to exhibit their tax receipt before voting; to reduce rate of taxation to five tenths of one per cent; by Smith, of Mobile, to amend the Code in regard to the dismissal of suits; also, to regulate the distribution of fees of wardens of the port of Mobile. The bill to establish a system of education was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, the main question having been carried unanimously. It is not a very radical change from the present system, provides a township superintendent where now there are three trustees, reduces the salary of the superintendent of education to $2,000 and of his clerk to 1,200 appropriates $150,000 from the State Treasury for the fund, and provides in case of default five per cent. shall be paid to attorneys to collect and recover default and that superintendents shall be paid quarterly. Mr. Jolly offered a bill providing for the appointments of a county solicitor for Mobile.—Mobile Register.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Jan. 27.—The Senate passed the House bill preventing the sale of seed cotton in Wilcox, Monroe and other counties, or of lint cotton in less quantities than three hundred pounds.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Jan. 28.—The Senate to day passed the House bill dividing the State in eight Judicial Circuits.

The bill to legalize a constitutional rate of interest not exceeding twelve per cent. was defeated.

In the House Mr. Smith, of Mobile, from the Committee on Federal Relations, reported a memorial to Congress to aid a trans-continental railroad to cross the country at a point not higher than Memphis, Tennessee. The memorial carries no instructions to Alabama Senators or Representatives.

The bill to secure secrecy of the ballot in elections by dispensing with the numbering of each ballot now required by law, was passed.—Mobile Register.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 29.—The Legislature passed the bill repealing the charter of the city of Memphis, and remanding it to the Territory of Tennessee, and providing for its local government as a taxing district.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—A meeting of Southern Congressmen representing the districts stricken by yellow fever and members of the National Relief Association was held this evening to consider the plan presented by Dr. Marshall, of Mississippi, for the immediate relief of the orphans of the victims of the late epidemic and the establishment of a central orphan asylum.

The plan was discussed by Representatives Casey Young, J. R. Chalmers, V. H. Manning, H. L. Muldrow and others, and committees appointed to secure a charter from Congress for the establishment of a national asylum and to perfect permanent organization.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—It is stated that the steamer Albion has been chartered to take Henry M. Stanley and party to Zanzibar, for another exploring expedition in Africa.

BELGRADE, Jan. 28.—Bills for emancipating the Jews have passed the lower house. They must still pass the upper house.

Mount Zion convent, in Waterford, Ireland, was burned by an incendiary.

ANCONA, Jan. 29. Cardinal Antonucci is dead.

PARIS, Jan. 30.—The Ministers congratulated President Grevy this evening on his election, and collectively tendered their resignation. M. Grevy expressed the hope that they would continue in office, at least provisionally.

The Cabinet will meet to-morrow to consider the situation.

Marshall MacMahon this evening visited and congratulated M. Gravy. The interview was most courteous.

The ex-President announced his intention of going to Grasse to-morrow, where he will remain some time.

PARIS, Jan. 30.—Marshall MacMahon has resigned the presidency of the Republic. Congress has been convoked for six o'clock this evening. The election of M. Grevy to the presidency appeared to be certain, all groups of the Left being in accord on this point.

Delivery of the Sermon.

From Bishop Simpson's sixth Yale lecture we make the following extract:

The two great requisites for extempore speaking are a command of language and self possession. This command of language may be best gained in two ways: first, by the practice of translating aloud, especially the reading of a work in company written in some foreign language. This was recommended strongly by Pitt and Macaulay, and has, in some form, been practiced by many eminent writers and speakers. Dr. Franklin was accustomed to read one of Addison's essays, and, holding the ideas in his mind, to write them out in his own language, and then compare what he had written with the original. Without any design as to influence on my future life, I acquired the habit, when a youth, of reading aloud to my friends from books in any language that I was studying. Passages which I found to be either very beautiful or very interesting were selected. Especially was this the case with the writings of Xenophon, the orations of Demosthenes, Virgil's "Æneid," and Fenelon's "Telemachus." It was also my practice to read, in family worship from the original language of the Bible. This practice, though not adopted for that purpose, gave me a greater command of the language, but it may not have made me quite so familiar with the idiomatic structure of other languages. At least, I never advanced as far as the sophomore who, descanting upon the subject of Latin, said, he could think better in Latin. (Laughter.) I confess that during all my life my thinking has been in English. Another method is to hold personal religious conversation with individuals. The process of explaining to one attentive mind some passage of Scripture, presenting some motive or urging to action, imparts a readiness of language which will be of great service in the pulpit. There is philosophy, as well as piety, in visiting those who are sick and in prison and in going out into the highways and hedges and compelling men to come to the feast of love.

To acquire choiceness and beauty of language, some have recommended the reading of some poet who has written on religious themes—such as Milton—for half an hour before entering the pulpit. I would greatly prefer, however, spending that period in reading the words of Jesus or of the inspired penmen.

Self possession can best be gained by having the mind filled with thoughts of the wonderful message about to be delivered, and the responsibility connected with it. If one feels that God is present, and that the words are spoken for Him, the timidity arising from the presence of the audience will vanish. It is well, also, not to keep in mind the distinguished men who may chance to be present; but to speak for the benefit of the masses. Luther said he did not speak for the doctors or the professors; but for the mass of the working people who were before him. Young men are prone to ask themselves: "What will this doctor or that judge or this professor say?" Their preaching will almost insensibly be formed to gain their approval. Now let me whisper to you two things, young gentlemen. First, as a general rule, distinguished politicians are very poor judges of preaching. They study almost everything else more than their Bibles. Like a former governor of Texas, who, congratulating the Legislature upon the tropical prospect before the country, said: "To use the language of Scripture, 'Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious by the summer's sun.'" (Laughter.) The other thing I would whisper to you is this: The most learned and distinguished men, especially in theology, are the most lenient critics. If your aim is to do good, you will have no kindlier hearers. They know the difficulties of speaking, and are ready to make every proper allowance. They do not expect you to make sermons for them. So far as captious and unkind criticism is concerned, I would much rather speak before your faculty than before a class of recently initiated freshmen. (Laughter.)

You will never attain to full self-possession in the pulpit without thorough self abnegation. You must lose sight of yourself. You must become absorbed in your glorious work for Christ. You must remember that you are polishing gems for Him; that you are building a temple for His glory. This intensity of feeling, this conception of the grandeur of your work will make your memory more attentive and yourself less prominent.

The question then arises: "Shall not the mind be occupied with choice of words while speaking?" I answer: Not directly. The words will come in the height of your intense feeling; but they will be the result of your previous discipline. If you should chance to stumble, do not go back; but press on, following Wilton-Holden's rule—"never to correct anything unless it was wicked."

The same in regard to gesticulation. Never try to make a gesture. Those only are natural which come of themselves. The man who is full of the subject, whose heart is burning for utterance, if his feelings are not restrained, will generally gesticulate correctly. In gesticulation, also, the discipline must be preparatory. Elocution should be studied previously; but no thought should be bestowed upon it at the moment. I know we are told that actors study every word and practice every gesture before a glass; and why should not the minister? The difference is the minister is original. He gives expression in his own words and to his own feelings. He has simply to be true to himself. The actor is not thinking of himself. He has no thoughts and no feelings of his own. He familiarizes himself with the thoughts of others through their words, and he imitates the expression of their feelings through his actions. His highest glory is to speak and act just as they are supposed to have spoken and acted. All his study and all his preparation bring him just to the point where the minister starts, if his heart be full of his subject and if he feels his deep responsibility. While I earnestly recommend the study of elocution as a preparatory discipline, I once more caution you against imitation. Improve your own voice, and do not try to imitate the voice of another. I have known some young ministers who have lost their sprightliness and vigor of utterance in attempting to acquire a deep, sonorous kind of utterance. Students from different schools of theology, colleges and universities can frequently be distinguished from each other by the manner of intonation acquired in their elocutionary exercises.

For myself, I never had any difficulty in finding suitable language to express my thoughts. My great anxiety to reach some hearts early led me to brave, in great measure, the presence of men of superior intellect and commanding position. My voice seemed in every way unfit for public speaking. It was weak and the pitch was high. By close application to study I had become stooped. My lungs were weak, and I was troubled with a cough. I wore plasters for years, and many of my friends feared that I was going into consumption. I spoke because I felt that I must speak. At the end of my first year my physician urged me to desist from preaching. I was junior preacher on a circuit, in which I preached twenty-eight times to the round. I took up also six additional appointments, making thirty-four. One of these appointments was in a small village, and was in the sitting-room of a house belonging to a humble widow. It would not seat more than twenty people. On my second and last visit to that place I was informed that a physician there, who was an infidel, desired to see me, as he thought he might be of some service by directing me as to my health. I called, and he said he had heard that I was in feeble health, and gave me some simple suggestions. I was pleased with his general advice, and at the close of the interview I asked him in regard to my continuing to preach. He answered that as to the religious question he had nothing to say, but simply as a physician he would recommend me to ride eight or ten miles and preach once every day. (Laughter.) The suggestion harmonized with my own feelings, and I resolved to follow it; and the only request I ever made for any appointment was that, on account of my weak lungs, I might be placed where I could ride eight or ten miles and preach once every day. My presiding elder promised me his full concurrence and heartiest support; but I was sent to the city of Pittsburgh, with its smoke and dust, right in the midst of the time when the Asiatic cholera was prevailing there. My friends were alarmed at my going there; but I went. My health was preserved by careful attention to God and exercise, and by keeping regular hours. My voice gradually strengthened, and, though never musical, I acquired the power to address the largest audiences. My conviction today is that if I had not continued to preach I should, in all probability, have fallen an early victim to bronchial or pulmonary disease. Often, when called to face danger, that passage has seemed to ring in my ears: "He that will save his life shall lose it; and he that will lose his life for My sake, the same shall save it." (Applause.)

The Dream.

We are such stuff
As dreams are made of, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.

Reader, do you believe in dreams? A true, or titions and harmful! Have you the n forgotten old Pharaoh and his dream, and Joseph, the interpreter of dreams, with the profit thereof? Old times, and miraculous, that have gone some thousands of years? But then let us remember old John Bunyan and Jean Paul, and the like of them, if there be yet any like them.

But, be this as it may, yet I myself (alas) had a dream. On the space "spanning brilge" that may be crossed in the twinkling of an eye, or on some electro-dynamic stream, or mayhap on some currents too subtle for star-eyed science to ken—mysterious, supernatural, miraculous—if we consider it aright—I was borne to the snowy top of the loftiest Icarian mountain. That it was not Olympus seemed indisputable; for his summit lies above the snow altitude—"level with the starry plane;" albeit, the sublimest of English bards, following Homer, sings of the "snowy top of dread Olympus."—erring. A hundred rills born of the white bosom of the snow by Phœbus' kiss, sparkling, sung adown the woody slopes I stood upon; the old earth bed on which Jupiter slumbered, beguiled thereunto by the wiles of Saturnia, abled and abetted by the seductive arts of Venus and Somnus. In perennial freshness were yet bloomy hyacinths, and dewy lotos, and flamy crocus. The golden clouds were, indeed, nowhere visible. But then we remembered that these were extemporized for the nonce. Far in the distance appeared a waste, wild and arid, as of the site of some ruined city, sown with salt, washed by a sluggish stream, that might answer to the ancient Xanthus or Samander, quickly lost in sea.

Hard by I espied a thing the like of which had never before greeted my eyes. It looked as if, when time and it were young, it might have been of huge dimensions, but now shrunk and shriveled like an Egyptian mummy; hard it seemed, and yet impalpable, and withal so transparent that the light streamed through it, casting no shadow; on its cheeks, pale and wan, glittered pendant tears, like stalactytes in a cave, frozen or petrified; rather, I should say, it seemed the ghost of some grand old classic god searching—as mortals do sometimes—on earthly heights for a lost heaven; and so it proved—almost.

I approached with awe, not unmixed with terror, and accosted it: In the name of all the gods in the Pantheon, what art thou, wandering in such questionable shape, so lonely, sad, and in woeful plight, on these old god-haunted mountains?" "Mortal," it replied, "am I then so changed, so fallen, that thou dost not recognize the old cloud compeller, whose bolted thunders and forky lightnings hurled kingdoms down, and set the world on fire?" "If this be so," said I, "where is the magazine in which you used to store your ammunition and weapons of immortal temper?" He merely turned his eyes to a heap of rubbish lying near his feet, mostly dust and vapor, in which, by searching, I found some unkindled thunder, mouldy, damp and mossy. As if fearing that I might rob him of his treasures, he attempted to stretch out that red right arm that was wont to lift the thunder, but it merely shook, and did not move from his side, whereby I perceived that it was paralyzed. His ambrosial curls, that of yore flung such majestic grace over the nod of fate, were fallen off, leaving his head bald and wrinkled.

It was difficult to spell out the meaning of his talk, for he had no language or dialect of all the babbling earth at complete command. One might have concluded he had been graduated in the school of Babel, so diverse and confused were his languages. He declared that he had "eschewed Greek when it became the vehicle of the new cultus, under the reign of the Nazarene;" he had lost all taste for Latin since that old dreamer had apostatized, in his sleep, and beside the cross on his banner had written, "In hoc signo vinces," still he had sometimes used it in intercourse with his quasi friend, the Roman pontiff; he seemed more at home in Chinese and Hindoostance, and could speak Pigeon English.

While we were engaged in conversation the sun reached the zenith, and, punctual to the minute, old Chronos put in his appearance, and after him came other gods, numbers on numbers, till a full senate was convened.

This senate had been summoned, it appeared, to devise ways and means to recover their old domination, at least, on the foolish earth. Most of them seemed in as woful plight as Jove himself. Even old Chronos confessed that "Anno Domini had routed him from the domain of civilization, even the Turk had yielded thus much to the new religion." Bacchus and Venus, of all the senate, seemed in good condition and spirits.

After long debate, and much criumination and recrimination on all sides, without results, Bacchus arose, down with insolence and wine, his nose carbuncle, his cheeks live coals, from which there seemed scarcely extinct, an odor fœted and foul, as of dying alcohol, streamed out on all sides of him, as if he were completely saturated with it—had been drunk through and through, from time immemorial. He said: "I have worked late and early,—mostly late—with a zeal that knew neither pause nor limit to gather and hold worshipers at my altars; if other gods had been as diligent as I, the temples had not been fallen, abandoned and hymnless. Churches called Christian have done much to destroy my worship, and there have been organizations against me by those who disliked my sway, but, in spite of all, I have been enabled to dot the civilized earth with depots, where my faithful ministers, by the instigation of mammon, have constantly vended my religion. I have not scrupled to use this god to serve my purposes—the end justified even such means." As he said this his lip curled as in scorn, and his face grew redder as in shame, as if the god of drunkenness disdained the association, and yet could not work without such tools. "Combinations had come against him in all the pomp and magnificence of glorious war—Washingtonians, Teetotalers, Sons of Temperance, Good Templars, et id genus omne—but he had broken, routed and scattered them all, in turn, like Chinese gong-beaters by British riflemen." Nevertheless, he confessed that he had lost much, outwardly and seemingly, since Alexander the Great, though a world conqueror, could not be satisfied unless he could add to his laurels the fame of being also the greatest drunkard of his age, since wits and literary men in good old England wrote to each other, in boastful strain, of their drinking capacities, since Charles James Fox—then premier—and the Prince of Wales, deep in drunken carousal, were shot at for highwaymen!" Yet he had legions of devoted worshipers in secret, which proved that it was not mere lip service, but from the heart. Some of these, indeed, find bowed the knee, and bound themselves by sacraments to Jesus, but their hearts were his. Many Christian churches, so called, spent more time and money in his service than for their gospel. Even Christmas day was more devoted to him than to the One born in Bethlehem. Another fact, too, was significant, and shed light upon the future. Formerly men in youth sowed wild oats, but reformed in after life, becoming as staid and humdrum as any ancient maiden lady; now it is otherwise—thanks to the druggists! All of which redounds to his praise and glory. So that men can still sing: most alley.

He said and sat.

Forthwith Venus arose. Her wonderous cestus shining radiant as the light threw sparkles all around, like a meteoric shower from the direction of Andromeda, when Belus resolved to star dust, shot earthward. Her eyes seemed two stars shining on the rosy edge of day. All the graces, even the youngest—divine Pasithea—hawreathed her form, presiding in every motion. One circumstance, however, indicated that she had lost somewhat of her ancient beauty, either from the heat of debate, or from the agony of this her maiden effort at public speaking; the perspiration began to stream down her face, plowing great gullies in her rosy cheeks, suggestive of rouge—and expedient of waning beauty and fading charms.

She suggested that Bacchus had overlooked one fact fatal to his claim of world conquest." With all his arts and power, and auxiliary aid of gods and men, he had utterly failed to bind the best part of the mortal race to his worship. Woman had stood like a vestal virgin, keeping the fires of virtue burning through the ages on the home altar. So long as woman should have the care of childhood, and remain true to the religion of Christ, she and her God would hold the field against all odds. "Now," said she—and her eyes, sparkling, illumined all upturned faces, and drew audience, as the harp of Apollo—"if some one will do for woman what Bacchus has done for man—cause her to sully her purity in sensual pleasures, and thus divorce her from the spiritual service of her God—the old godhead of Jove may be rekindled, and the ancient empire of the gods restored. And for this I have labored night and day—mostly in darkness, as my coadjutor, Bacchus, has done, and as all must do who would succeed in the like enterprises. It was I who by aid of the dancing master a most every way qualified for the work, with no brain, no heart, having only the culture of the heels, as one of his most eminent friends has testified led women into the giddy mazes of the sensual dance. I have bewitched her by the same old art of love as I did the Argive Helen. I have made her believe that it is the surest way to win the heart of man. I have so wrought up her fears of old maidenhood that she has become ready to tread any broad way that will lead her to a husband. Indeed, if we are to credit the God of Drunkenness, that is the only way to secure suitors to [illegible]

"And then, lack-a-day, a hundred years ago, by my wits, I invented a new dance. Well do I remember the prudes that gathered on the face of a continental mansion when I witnessed this new device for the first time at the court of St. James, all Europe in amazement. But familiarity rubs off the down of modesty most assuredly if it be in the arms of such as worship at the altar of Bacchus. Now this dance wins favor in other than metropolitan cities—has invaded almost all towns and villages and hamlets where civilization stretches. And now the merry dance and the ruby wine, boon companions, are drawing men and women down to one common level of sensuality. So, then, if Bacchus be worthy of honor among the immortal gods, at least, claim no less for myself," she said. Forthwith Bacchus arose, staggering, and, seizing the hand of the goddess of love, said: "Behold, ye gods, my spiritual affinity."

Slowly Jupiter arose, some of the old dignity on his broad, majestic brow, meanwhile his frown darkened heaven, and struck all faces with black terror or pale affright. "Are these the terms, these the conditions," said he, "of my recovered godhead?" then let me be enthroned. Most piquant and lovely woman, reversing the Darwinian hypothesis, he remanded to the sensual brute that Jupiter may reign, or, rather, that the drunken Bacchus and the lewd Venus may bear sway." Well do I understand the design of your selfish, black, rebellious hearts. But you shall be disappointed. Better, a thousand times better, for gods and men that this order of things should cease, than that these should succeed. Did not the god who dwells above the Olympian mount, higher than that above the level earth, destroy a world by water, when all flesh had corrupted itself in the direction of brutality, so that we want not highest precedent when we judge that men and gods are ripe for the harvest of death." So saying, he stamped upon the ground, the earth trembled, the woody forest nodded, as moved by the tread of earthquake, the Icarian mountains parted, the smoke, as of the bottomless pit, ascended, the waves from beneath billowed to the edge of the amphitheater, where the senate sat, floating on the waves came innumerable black ghosts shooting through the sulphurous smoke, and stood among the gods. Meanwhile the tumult swelled and swept as if destined to uproar the universe.

Nevertheless, through the smoke and din and wild confusion I beheld and could hear Jupiter as he took the old faded crown from his own head, that of right belonged to old Saturn, and, placing it on the head of Pluto, said: "Brother, henceforth rule thou over earth and hell." And I saw in my dream that immediately the two worlds were fastened together by a mighty chain, and shooting the abyss of Chaos and old Night spun around the center of darkness, as other planets around their suns, and the everlasting storm howled, and the eternal thunder pealed forth the dissonance of their orbit. Meanwhile the distant star sentinels, that keep watch and ward on the confines of the luminous ether, fled toward the central galaxies, and the sun and moon and all the orbs that float in the blue seas of space, as a kite when the string is broken, shivered, and staggered and shot upward, and then fell backwards, and in the path of their downfall followed trains of fire. And, as world met world in their random rush, there were sounds and smoke, and the scattering of flaming fragments, as if a magazine in the center of a world had burst, throwing its debris upon the wings of cross cyclones, so that the universe seemed a rumble of falling worlds, wildfire and darkness. Then I awoke, and was glad that it was but a dream.

Sanctification.

MR. EDITOR: I desire to say a few more things in this important subject, which appears to be now so generally engaging the attention of the church.

We prefer making these observations in the shape of interrogatories, to which I solicit conscientious replies.

1. If we cannot live above sin, does not God require an impossibility of us, and is not the plan of redemption incomplete?

2. If "the blood of Jesus Christ His Son," cannot "cleanse us from all sin," did not Satan do mischief in the Garden of Eden, which the Almighty can never repair?

3. All God's other plans and works are perfect. Why make an exception of this crowning glory of omnipotence and divine love?

4. Dare we lower the scriptural standard of holiness erected by God himself?

5. What do such passages of Scripture mean? "Be ye holy as I am holy." "Be ye, therefore, perfect, as your Father in heaven is perfect." "Grow in perfection." "Who so looketh into the perfect law of liberty," etc.—or have they any meaning at all.

As to the possibility of apostasy from a sanctified state, we reply unhesitatingly, in the affirmative. It does not destroy man's free moral agency. The very angels in heaven fell.

Is this not to be satisfied with barely escaping the torments of the damned, God calls us to strive for an abundant entrance?

JOSEPH ATKINSON.

A Sad Visitation and a Triumph.

MR. EDITOR: I have seen no notice of the sad visitation in many of the papers, and in the reports from stricken cities, this being in the county was overlooked. Hillwara is a landing on the Mississippi river, I believe, not far from Vicksburg, on the Louisiana side. Three years ago Bro. Powell removed from Fayette Landing, on the Yazoo river, to this place. His family then consisted of himself, wife, one son and two married daughters, with their husbands and children—three, I believe. Bro. Powell was long known in Mississippi as a Methodist of the camp meeting type. Full of faith and zeal, he frequently attended meetings twenty or thirty miles distant from home. His family were all Methodists, partaking of his love for the church. His two daughters, Hattie and Lila (afterward Mrs. Langham and Barham), were pupils of mine at Black Hawk, Miss. I therefore had every opportunity of knowing them, as well as through them, the family, and while I can without qualification speak well of all, of these two I must say that their characters were of rare loveliness. My affection and esteem for them were unfeigned and full. Such was the family, as a whole. But now to the sad story.

August 4, Robert B., Jr., died of yellow fever. September 1, Hattie Langham and her little boy, Charlie. September 5, Robert B., Sr. September 7, his wife. Oct. 1st, Lila Barham and her babe. The only ones left are the husbands of the two lovely daughters, and a child of each—Percy and Ada.

Such is the brief, yet melancholy record. The light, however, of the dark picture is: That they "all died in the faith," full of joy and the Holy Ghost.

A letter from Mr. Langham, requesting me to write his wife's obituary, encloses this message from my dear departed pupil: "Write to Mr. and Mrs. A. and tell them I loved them till death." Such a message assures me that not all the seed have fallen in desert soil.

Hattie J. Langham was born November 11, 1854, and was, therefore, nearly twenty-four years of age at her death. She was early converted, and lived consistently with her profession through all the changes of girlhood, womanhood and motherhood. An open, guileless character, sunny and affectionate, she made cheer wherever she went. When told that she must die, she said: "Accept of me, O God! Accept of me, O God!" She then sang "Hold the fort," "O, how I love Jesus!" and several other songs, with praise upon her countenance. Said she: "I'm too weak to shout, or I would." Once she said: "O that the cord would snap and let me go!" "Charlie's dying," said her weeping husband. "O yes!" she replied, "we'll mount the golden stairway together." When no longer able to speak, she still signified by her hand that all was well. Thus passed away one of earth's loveliest. How poor we grow here by death's doings, but how rich over there! The death of the others was equally triumphant.

The lines below were written in answer to a letter of Mrs. Langham, complaining that we seemed to have forgotten her. By a strange coincidence they were read to her, when half unconscious, upon her death-bed. Will she know them over there?

TO HATTIE.

I snatch from envious care
And o'er life's blackest hue
The light sheds inward rays
[illegible]
Catch the brightest ray,
And cull the sweetest flowers
For Cattie far away.

I have a little time, Hattie
To look at you I see,
That Eye of sunny shine
[illegible]
Never can I forget
How bright it always shone
[illegible]
Though clear or face.

THE TYRANNY OF MOOD.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

I.

NIGHT.

I press my cheek against the window-pane,
And gaze abroad into the blank, black space
Where earth and sky no more have any place,
Wiped from existence by the expunging rain;
And as I hear the worried winds complain,
A darkness darker than the murk whose trace
Invades the curtained room is on my face,
Beneath which life-and-life's best gifts seem vain.
My swelling aspirations sicken, sink
As yon cloud-blotted pillar hopes that shone bright
As planets yesterevе, like them to-night
Are cuffed, the impenetrable mists betwixt.
O weary world (I cry, how dare I think
Thou hast for me one beam of gladness more

II.

MORNING.

It is enough: I feel, this golden morn,
As if a royal appanage were mine,
Through nature's queenly warrant of divine
Investiture. What princess, palace-born,
Hath right of rapture more, when skies adorn
Themselves so grandly; when the mount dus shine
Transfigured; when the air exults like wine;
When pearly purples step the yellowing corn?
So satisfied with all the goodliness
Of God's good world—my being to its brim
Surcharged with utter thankfulness no less
Than bliss of beauty, passionately glad
Through rush of tears that hovers the landscape dim—
Who dares," I cry, "in such a world, be sad!"

Christian Evidences.

BY S. AUSTIN ALLIBONE, LL. D.

Undoubtedly there are many sincere deists (of whom I assume your correspondent to be one) and there are also a few honest deists to which class your correspondent may belong). What is the difference between "sincere" and "honest?" the reader may ask. The difference is vast.

If I accept a logical conclusion drawn from premises however narrow I am "sincere;" but if I refuse or neglect to adequately examine all the premises which appertain to the subject, I am not "honest." You may be "sincere" in your assertion that you do not believe the Bible to be a divine revelation, but if you refuse to examine the evidences adduced to prove the Bible to be a divine revelation you are not "honest" and your opinion is worthless.

What value would you attach to the opinion of a man who should assert his disbelief in the existence of Julius Cesar or Charlemagne, of the occurrence of a London plague in 1665, or of a London fire in 1666, acknowledging that he had never consulted the historical annals of those periods? And now to the subject immediately under notice.

We find ourselves inhabitants of a world admirably suited to our necessities, comforts and happiness by the great Being who adapted us for its occupancy, and it for our use. The regular succession of seasons, of day and night, of periods of labor and rest; the diversities of faces, handwritings and voices, essential to the good order of society; the intellect and the emotions, and their manifold uses and applications; all these and many more such phenomena prove that we are the objects of the guardian care of our Creator.

And can it be possible that he who thus evinces such interest in our physical wants and intellectual constitution can be indifferent to our moral and religious well-being—has given us, with a necessity of spiritual action, no means of ascertaining what character of action will be acceptable to him and promotive of our own happiness? It is inconceivable. A priori, then, we have reason to expect a revelation from the Creator; and we have in the Bible what professes to be such a revelation.

Let us consider briefly a few arguments in proof of the assertion that the Bible is the word of God.

1. There is contained in the Hebrew ritual in the Old Testament a body of moral, religious and sanitary law, such as is not to be found in the records of any other nation. From whence did the Jews derive these laws if not from God? To this question no answer can be given.

2. The character of Jesus stands entirely by itself; in all history there is nothing which resembles it. That His biographers should have drawn such a character from imagination is impossible; they could not even have conceived of it.

3. If Jesus Christ arose from the dead and ascended to heaven this fact proved the divinity of his mission. The Supreme Being would not have wrought a miracle to confirm an imposture; and Christ, if not what he represented himself to be, could not have raised himself from the dead. St. Paul asserts that he was seen after his resurrection by "five hundred" at once, of whom the greater part were alive when he wrote this statement. If this had not been true would he have dared to assert it? Unless he could have referred to some of these witnesses for corroboration it would have been a worse than useless falsehood.

4. Unless men were satisfied that Christ wrought miracles and rose from the dead it would have been impossible ever to have gained a foundation for His religion. What success would men have who should try to establish a religion upon the assertion that a man, or one to form of a man, had performed miracles—healed the sick and restored to life—in the streets of London or New York? Who would believe them?

5. But if Jesus was a messenger from God we must accept His declarations; and what were these? (a) That He himself was a Divine Being: "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, . . . the Almighty, . . . Who is and was and is to come, the Almighty."—Rev. i. 8, 17. (b) That a day was coming when all men should be judged, and that "unless a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God;" that those who believe in Him should be saved, and that those who reject him should be damned.

6. If Christianity had not been of divine origin it never could have triumphed over the opposition of kings, governors, priests, and the passions of men.

7. An overwhelming proof of the divine origin of Christianity is found in its fruits. What other system ever wrought such changes in the characters of men; made the wicked good, the violent meek, the drunken temperate, the licentious chaste? What community in Christendom cannot show transformations of this kind? Is not every conversion a miracle?

8. The evidences of Christianity have been sufficient to satisfy such reasoners and philosophers as Grotius, Bacon, Sir Isaac Newton, Boyle, Dr. Johnson, Shakespeare, Napoleon the First and Lord Macaulay, who says of it: "Its sublime theology confounded the Grecian schools in the fair conflicts of reason with reason. The bravest and wisest of the Cæsars found their arms and their policy unavailing when opposed to the weapons that were not carnal, and the kingdom that was not of this world. The victory which Porphyry and Diocletian failed to gain is not, to all appearance, reserved for any of those who have, in this age, directed their attacks against the last restraint of the powerful, and the last hope of the wretched." ("Edinburgh Review," January, 1830.) Again: "May she long continue to bless our country with her benignant influence, strong in her sublime philosophy, strong in her spotless morality, strong in those internal and external evidences to which the most powerful and comprehensive of human intellects have yielded assent, the last solace of those who have outlived every earthly hope, the last restraint of those who are raised above earthly fear." (Speech, April 17, 1845.) Again: "God, the uncreated, the incomprehensible, the invisible, attracted few worshipers. A philosopher might admire so noble a conception, but the crowd turned away in disgust from words which presented no image to their minds. It was before deity embodied in a human form, walking among men, partaking of their infirmities, leaning on their bosoms, weeping over their graves, slumbering in the manger, bleeding on the cross, that the prejudices of the synagogue and the dullness of the academy, and the pride of the portico, and the fasces of the lictor, and the swords of thirty legions, were humbled in the dust." ("Edinburgh Review," August, 1843.) So much for Macaulay, who will not be rated a very credulous man.

Sir Isaac Newton says: "I find more sure marks of the authenticity of the Bible than in any profane history whatever."

Dr. Johnson declares: "We have more evidence that Jesus Christ died on Calvary in the manner stated in the gospels than we have that Julius Cesar died in the capitol."

Napoleon the First says: "Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne, and myself, have founded great empires; but upon what do these creations of our genius depend? Upon force. Jesus alone founded His empire upon love, and to this very day millions would die for him. I think I understand something of human nature; and I tell you all these were men, and I am a man; none else is like Him. Jesus Christ was more than man. . . . This it is which proves to me quite convincingly the divinity of Jesus Christ."

How does an acute lawyer estimate the evidences of Christianity? Prof. Greenleaf published in 1847, "Examination of the Testimony of the Four Evangelists by the Rules of Evidence Administered in Courts of Justice, with an Account of the Trial of Jesus," and he tells us the following respecting a great judge of our own country:

"He (Judge Story) had studied the evidences of Christianity with professional closeness and care, and had given to them the testimony of his full assent; and he has often been heard to declare that, in his judgment, the great facts of the gospel-history were attested by a mass of evidence which in any court of law now would be perfectly satisfactory and conclusive." (Discourse on Judge Story.)

Let the deist procure "McIlvaine's Evidences," or Nelson's "Cause and Cure of Infidelity" (or if he should dislike to come to the office of the Christian Advocate he shall have a book sent to him) and weigh the matter with that seriousness which becomes the character of the subject. There seems to be a prevalent opinion that it is entirely an optional matter whether a man shall examine this question or not. But it is not so; it is a most solemn duty to examine it. If you refuse to avail yourself of the light which is placed within your reach you must bear the penalty of the omission. It is more than forty years since I, always a layman, commenced the study of the Christian evidences, and I have read more against revealed religion than most of the unbelievers would have met; and what is the result? Briefly this: I believe in the divine mission and in the divine character of Jesus of Nazareth, and in a final judgment, as firmly as I do in my own existence.—Christian Union.

Old-Time Church Singing.

BY WILLIAM R. WEISS.

Singing in New England was, at first, practiced so rudely that it fell into derision, and punishments were frequently inflicted for "speaking contemptuously of singing psalms." In public worship during the first century of New England there was nothing that could be called a "service of song;" there was no band of singers "to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord, saying: For He is good; for His mercy endureth forever."—Second Chronicles, v. 13.

The "Bay Psalm Book" was in general use for more than a hundred years. It was prepared by Richard Mather, Thomas Weld and John Eliot, ministers, and the first edition was printed at Cambridge in 1640. Although a rude production, it was no ruder than the musical ideas of the people. The following version of a familiar psalm, copied literally from its pages, is the best specimen of the contents of the book, and it corroborates what its authors, in their preface, say of the whole, to wit:

"If therefore the verses are not always so smooth and elegant as some may desire or expect, let them consider that God's Altar needs not our polishings.—Ex. 20."

PSALME 137.

The rivers on of Babilon,
there when we did sit down;
Yea even then we mourned, when we remembered Sion.
Our Harps we did hang upon the willow tree.
Because there they that us awa
led in captivitee,
Require'd of us a song, and thus askt mirth: of waste who laid,
Sing us among a Sions song,
unto us then they said,

Dr. Watts' hymns came into use early in the last century; but the New England ministers differed in opinion as to what hymns might be sung as sacred, and what ought to be discarded as profane. In 1736 the Boston ministers were greatly perplexed about the propriety of singing any "hymns of mere human composure," as they called them, and Dr. Colman, of the Brattle Street Society, protested against using the hymns of Dr. Watts, except such as were paraphrases of the psalms of Scripture.

There was no correct knowledge of sacred music in New England previous to the year 1720, or thereabout. It is said that, at this date, not more than five tunes were in use; these were called Hackney, York, Windsor, Martyn, St. Marys; and the only identity which they preserved in the different towns was the name. St. Marys, as sung near Boston, was not the St. Marys which echoed in the meeting-houses on "the great river," as the Connecticut was called, and neither of them very closely resembled that which delighted the people in "ye governmente of New Haven with ye plantations in combination therewith." The tunes had been preserved only "by ear," and they finally became so corrupted that no two persons sang them alike.

In 1721 Thomas Walter, of Roxbury, Mass., published a book entitled "The Grounds and Rules of Musick Explained; or an Introduction to the Singing by Note Fitted to the Meanest Capacity." The character of church music at that time, is thus described in the preface of that book:

"The tunes now in use are miserably tortured and twisted and quavered, in some churches, into a horrid medley of confused and disorderly noises. Our tunes are left to the mercy of every unskillful throat to chop and alter, twist and change, according to their infinitely divers, and no less odd humors and fancies."—New York Observer.

Christ Hid in God.

As we look over His career, how can we describe its serenity and composure except in these words: "God hid Him in the secret of His presence from the strife of tongues." How the strife of tongues raged about Him all His life! From the time when Herod and the scribes debated where He was to be born, that they might murder Him, down to the day when the people cried, "Crucify Him," and mocked Him as He hung upon the cross; in the day when the Pharisees gathered around Him in the temple and poured their subtle questions fast upon Him to try to drive Him to a foolish word; in the day when the disciples came to a quarrel in His very sight about their poor ambition to be greatest; in these, and countless days like them, He lived right in the midst of the strife of tongues. But, close to his Father always, clear in His own duty always, and always trying to help men so earnestly that He was not capable of being provoked by them. He was completely apart from all the strife, He was hid in the secret of his Father's presence. We cannot but be struck with awe when we think what that phrase, whose beauty and significance we have partly understood as it applied to us, must have meant to Jesus. Our closest communion with God is so distant, compared with the perfect oneness between Him and His Father. We run into the shelter of the divine life, just creep across the threshold where no trouble can pursue, and stand thankful and trembling there. We hide ourselves behind the robes of the Eternal Mercy, and thence look out in an assurance, that is fearful still, upon the danger which cannot touch us there. But He, from the very heart of the Eternal Being, looks out on sin and sees its weakness, looks out on goodness and sees its strength. We cannot know His peace. It must have been so absolute. There must have been spots in His heart when they tormented Him, when they led Him to Pilate and scourged Him, when they nailed Him to the cross at last, and all the while the soul which they thought they were reaching and torturing was far off, beyond their reach, hid in the secret of God's presence, hid in God. It was as if men flung water at the stars and tried to put them out, and the stars shone on calmly and safely, and took no notice of their persecutors, except to give them light.—Rev. Phillips Brooks.

The passion for education in Japan is illustrated in this paragraph: "The American Board have a girl's school in the 'Kioto Home.' The Mission a year and a half ago placed the limit of the boarding pupils at fourteen. It was fully up to that number the first day, some of the applicants coming from a distance of three hundred miles."

All men look to happiness in the future. To every eye heaven and earth seem to embrace in the distance.

Our Young People.

IN A BIRD HOUSE.

The little bird-wife to the window came,
And forth she looked with an anxious eye,
Where a cold and an angry sun rise flame
Stormily burned in the eastern sky.
"Will it be a fair day, do you think?" she said;
"I am always afraid when the sky is red.

She'd risen early, the little bird-wife,
And let Mr. Bird lie snug in his bed.
She had built the fire she looked after the boys,
And by starlight cold they had breakfasted.
They had gladdened this day's sorrowful page
For children's rise before sorrow's, you know.

They were going to see their daughter dear
A little bird-mile, or miles or so;
And, of course, it would never do to start
While weather looked all like snow.
Mr. Bird, he went out, and looked about,
He stretched it and he said, "No visit to-day."

And to bed he went and sat down by the fire.
The snow fell deep, and he slept and slept.
The little bird-wife she rested the house,
But whatever she did she wept and wept.
For the little bird-grandmother wished to see
The daughter and babies in the distant tree.

The Royal Guest.

"Oh! mother, mother, the Lord Jesus is coming here to-night."

Was it the words, or the sudden flush of sunset drifting in through the open door, that glorified the poor, low, dingy walls in the eyes of the wondering mother?

"The Lord Jesus," she repeats dreamily. "I havena kenned Him sin' I were a child. Did He tell you it himself?"

"No, mother, it was the old minister. He said the dear Lord Jesus had written to us, 'Behold, I come quickly;' and I ran all the way home to tell you."

"He'll be wanting the floor clean," she said, in the simple faith of ignorance, and she hastened to take down mop and broom. The wooden chairs were sanded and scoured, and a fresh, bright fire kindled in the old-fashioned fireplace.

"Maybe He'll be hungry and want something to eat," she said, at last. "I will bake him a little cake, for He shall na be fashed for warm supper the night."

Twilight wimpled, but still his footsteps lingered, and their watch was in vain. The father and Robbie were home from their work, and already baby Annie was fast asleep; but He came not. So they placed a candle in the window to guide Him through the darkness, and the welcoming light shone far out over the dreary waste. There was one who saw it and drew near, and a low, soft knock sounded on the oaken door.

"He's come," they whispered. The mother's face softened with an unspeakable tenderness, and even the baby smiled in her sleep, as if at some pleasant dream.

Robbie and Jessie stood on tip-toe with eager, waiting eyes, as the father, trying to still the loud beating of his heart, walked slowly to the door, and with tremulous hands unfastened the latch. Out of the gloom and darkness there appeared a strange vision—not The King of Glory, for whose coming the gates had lifted up their heads—but a poor lone woman, who stood shuddering upon the threshold. Her ragged hood fell back, and revealed a dull, expressionless face. Her toric garments, dripping with wet, hung about her in scanty folds, and her two thin hands were held out imploringly.

"I'm cauld," she said; "I'd like to bide a bit."

"It is only daft Jeanie," they whispered. And in the first disappointed moment they had almost closed the door upon her. But better thoughts prevailed, and they brought her in and placed her gently in the chimney corner. They chafed the red hands and quivering limbs, while the mother wondered if the Lord Jesus, when He came, would notice the muddy tracks across the floor. "I wouldna have Him see daft Jennie so," she said to her husband; and so she bathed the poor creature, combed her hair and put on a clean calico dress, too large for her by half; but I doubt if the angels saw a wrinkle in it.

A half-remembered verse came dimly into the mother's thought as she spoke through the door to Robbie: "Seek Him that's coming here to-night, if happily you may find Him!" She did not know the rest, poor soul, though He be not far from every one of us."

They gave food to the poor famished waif, who eagerly devoured it, sitting in the chimney corner with her motionless stare. Then they walked till midnight, and the expiring candles sent them up the rough ladder to the dark loft above. Morning stole softly in, and found the same weird figure crouched over the smouldering ember's on the hearth. The "parritch" was prepared, and she ate her share with the same stony face.

Then Robbie went to his work, and the father hastened to the old minister to tell him the sorrowing story of their disappointment at not seeing the Lord Jesus. "For we wouldna grudge Him aught we had," he said; "and maybe He would have left His blessing with us."

Reverently the aged pastor opened his Bible, and with trembling voice read the wonderful story of the judgment day. "Then shall the King say unto those on his right side: 'Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me.'

"But I cannia claim it," he answered, sadly, "for He dinna come. There was only daft Jeanie to eat the cake and 'parritch,' and to wear the missis gown."

"Listen a little longer," said the gray-headed man, and read on. "Then shall the righteous answer Him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?" And the King shall answer and say unto them: Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

The Child Jesus.

"I wonder what the Lord Jesus really did when he was a child?" said Willie, one Sunday evening just before Christmas-day.

"So do I," said Katie; "and I wish the Bible had told us more about Him; whether he went to school or not; whether he ever played; or whether he was always quiet and thoughtful."

"A good many people have felt the same wish," Aunt Kate answered; "but as it has not seen fit to tell us more, we may be sure there is some very good reason why we should not have our curiosity gratified. Still, we do know something about the childhood of our Lord, and the few stories we have teach us a great deal."

"He didn't go to school, I suppose," Katie said; "because the Jews asked, 'How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?' John vii. 15."

"Did Jesus never learn his letters?" asked Pollie, with some surprise.

"Well, the Jews didn't mean that Jesus had never learned the alphabet," Aunt Kate said; "but that He had not been taught in any of the schools of the Rabbis; and they were surprised that as He had being able to read, but to know so much about the Scriptures. Whether He went to school in Nazareth or not I can't say, for the Bible tells us nothing about it."

"At any rate, I suppose He used to help Joseph at his work," Willie said, "and that proves that He must have been something like other boys."

"I've no doubt that in a great many ways they found Him like other boys, only we can never think of His being idle or disobedient, or anything else wrong. Very likely He did work at Joseph's trade, for the people called Him the carpenter's son; and St. Mark tells us that once they asked, 'Is not this the Carpenter?'"

"And don't we know something else about the Lord when He was a child?" asked Pollie.

"Yes, there is another text which surely you will remember, that tells us what He did after Mary had found Him disputing with the doctors in the temple."

"He went home with Mary and Joseph, and did what they told Him," Willie said.

"Katie told me of the place in St. Luke, and read, 'And He went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them: but His mother kept all these sayings in her heart. And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man.'"

"And so," said Aunt Kate, "though we know hardly anything else about the Lord's childhood, we do not know that He was always obedient and gentle, setting an example to the boys and girls of Nazareth, and not only to them but to all children in all parts of the world."

"I don't wonder that everybody loved Jesus when He was a child," said Willie; "for He must have been so good. But then it was easy for Him to be good, and it's very hard for us."

"Yes; but Willie, you know that He who was once a child, and had to pass through all the temptations of childhood, knows how hard it is for you to be good, and if you ask Him, He will help you, so that you may be like Him, and as you grow bigger and wiser, you may also increase 'in favor with God and man.' And as we think of the Saviour, let us remember why He was born into this world, and lived and died for us. It was to make us pure and holy, and to save us from our sins. Come, let us thank Him for His love." And Aunt Kate prayed:

"O Lord Jesus, we thank Thee that though Thou wast rich Thou didst for our sakes become poor, that though all power was Thine, Thou didst for us become a weak, helpless infant. We pray Thee to help us to be good and obedient and gentle like the Holy Child Jesus, that at last we may live with Thee in Thy Father's house above. For Thy Name's sake. Amen."—New York Observer.

The Skilful Spinner.

"Your spun so fine that it is like silk and cotton. How do you do it?"

"I learned when I was a little girl. Then, and I have practiced it ever since."

"Are there others that can spin so nicely?"

"Certainly. I know one who spins such fine threads that many hundreds together are not so large as one fibre of this flax, and you know how many fibres I twist together to make this thread that seems so fine to you."

"She is surely a skillful spinner. Where did she learn to spin?"

"She never learned. As soon as she saw the light of the world she began to spin, while other little children can do nothing but sleep, drink and cry."

"That is strange. This wonderful spinner must be very rich. How much money she must earn by her beautiful spinning."

"She earns nothing, and possesses nothing."

"Then she is poor; and yet you have told me that industrious people, who learn to do one thing well, are never really poor. Why does she not take what she spins to the store?"

"Because no one will buy it."

"Then she might take it from house to house."

"That she often does, but something bad always happens. The coarse, dowdy seams ruin the web, and it is so fine it is not very strong."

"That is very bad in the girl."

"Not so bad. We should send Mary if she allowed her to stop here."

"That is very strange to treat such a beautiful web, when I am not permitted to tear a piece of paper unnecessarily. But why does she not carry her thread to the weaver? He could make it into fine cloth, and she can easily sell that."

"The weaver cannot use it, and he serves but the same as other people."

"Then what does the poor spinner do with her thread?"

"She weaves it herself, and we call it the cobweb. Now do you know who this skilful spinner is?"

Jimmie's First Two Dollars.

Jimmie had noticed his "clerk in a tuition store" for one week, and received two dollars for his pay; the first money he had ever really worked for. These two dollars made Jimmie very happy indeed, and he wanted to do the best he could with them. So, like a good son should always do, he asked his mother about it.

"Mother, how much do you think I ought to give the missionary collection to-day?"

"Well, Jimmie, I think your father's rule of giving one-tenth a very good one for you to follow. You know we are told to cast our bread upon the waters, and that we shall find it again, though it may be many days after."

Jimmie had a twinkle in his eye as he said, "Well, mother, I've seen a good deal of 'casting' done, and now I'm waiting to see some of it coming back again."

This made his mother feel anxious, fearing that Jimmie, after all, might not want to give any of his money. Then she spoke of the widow's two mites that she was not content to give a portion of her money, but had given all that she had to give all for living.

As they walked home from church Jimmie said, "Well, mother, how much do you suppose I gave this morning?"

"Why, about ten cents," said his mother.

"More than that," said Jimmie.

So his mother went on guessing, adding ten cents at each guess till she reached fifty cents, when she stopped, saying she would have to tell her.

"Well, then, mother, I did as the widow did. I cast in all that I had. I gave my two dollars."

You may be sure that this made his mother very glad and happy indeed, to find him so willing to consecrate the "first fruits" of his labor to the service of the Lord, who loveth the cheerful giver.—Children's Friend.

The teacher of an infant school had her attention called to one little fellow who was listening to what she said. She had been teaching her class the elements of English history, and wishing to see if he knew what she had been talking about, she suddenly asked, "I dare say, who killed King Rufus?" With a surprised look, he replied, "Why, I didn't know he was dead!"

Card from the Publishing Committee.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met in this city on the fourteenth and fifteenth of January, 1879, and organized under a regular act of incorporation. On account of the former publisher's inability to go on with the business of the paper, the undersigned sub committee were authorized to make a contract with some other party to take charge of the business, and to print and issue the paper. We have accordingly made a contract with Mr. G. T. Lathrop for this purpose, who will hereafter attend to the business affairs of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and to whom all communications on the business of the paper should be addressed for the future. Our agents and subscribers are assured that all business with them will meet with prompt attention, and that the paper will be regularly and promptly issued. We bespeak for the ADVOCATE the continued good will of our people, and the efforts of all to extend its circulation.

Munsey the Preacher.

The volume of sermons and lectures has been before the public long enough to enable us to form a nearly just estimate of the preacher. We may suppose that the able and discriminating editor has given us, on the whole, the best of Dr. Munsey's discourses. Out of a mass that would make several volumes, those selected, no doubt, represent the very highest achievements of the gifted author. His finest passages are in them, and his deepest and most elaborate thought. Much was expected, and as yet, we have heard no expression of disappointment.

The written sermons come nearer fully expressing the preacher than is usual in such productions, and for the reason in part that every sermon was written out complete, and closely read, or delivered from memory. They were written and re-written, and repeated often, and the more striking parts were kept, like unfinished pictures in the artist's studio, to be touched and re-touched from time to time. The labor bestowed upon some single paragraphs would astound us if we knew how much it was. Dr. Munsey once told us that it took him never less than three months to prepare a sermon, and, when thus prepared and preached, it was in some respects only begun. Probably no sermons extant have cost the author so much toil and care, and there are none that will better repay perusal and study.

The presence and voice of the preacher are not in them, and they are not accompanied by the subtle and magnetic power of a frame wrought up to the highest pitch of fervor in their delivery, but all else is in them. Every word is there, every period, every stroke of logic, every flash of imagination, every appeal to the heart, and every thrust at the conscience. If the very ipsissima verba were not always followed in the delivery, still it was like what was written, and, properly speaking, there were no considerable extemporaneous digressions. The sermons are as they were slowly, painfully and prayerfully elaborated in the study, and just as they were delivered in the pulpit. The delivery is the greater and more important part in some sermons. Apart from it, neither Whitfield nor Summerfield would have been known to fame. Chalmers' sermons read well, but to have heard him was an epoch in a man's life. While he held the manuscript in one hand, and kept the place with the forefinger of the other, and read with a strong Scotch accent, he was absolutely overwhelming. Munsey's sermons gained something in the delivery, but less than in the case of many other noted preachers. Their excellence, and nearly all that made them attractive and popular in the living preacher, are transferred to the printed page. Hence they are not a mere memento of a wonderful man, nor the faint echo of words that burned, but they are the man himself, and the very voice that thrilled and enchained. They are not pictures faded or hung in the dark, but fresh and luminous, and still moist with the last touches of the pencil of genius.

Before reading them we had thought that their value and attractiveness depended almost entirely upon the descriptive and imaginative passages. If these, however, were left out, they would still be instructive discourses, remarkable for clear, compact statement, philosophical insight, and spiritual discernment. The great truths and doctrines of the gospel are made prominent, and are exhibited with masterly skill. They are calculated to awaken careless sinners, and to inform and strengthen believers. The diverse powers of Dr. Munsey's mind were, in reality, harmonious, and the same qualities in various combinations are manifest in every part of the sermon. There is an under-play of imagination and of subdued coloring in the most metaphysical statements and in the closest chains of argumentation, while in the most splendid scenes, where fancy and imagination revel, there are strokes that reveal the sovereignty of severe and well trained reasoning powers. There is, in fact, nothing incongruous in the striking contrasts. The wonder is not in the excellence of the reasoning, nor in the sublimity of the imagination, so much as in the fact that one and the same mind should be almost peerless in both. It was the completeness of his faculties that explains the marvel. His mind was well rounded, and all the faculties equally and grandly developed. The sermons are the work of such an exceptionally endowed nature. They abound in plain common sense, simplicity, strong doctrinal statement, metaphysical acumen, while the creative faculty illuminates the whole. The mind that reasons is also the mind that soars. The qualities are differently combined, but they are all, with more or less prominence, in the mental action. The threads are all in the loom, but the designs and figures thrown to the surface are varied at will.

Some will doubtless read the sermons merely for the wealth and exuberance of imagination, but the more thoughtful will enjoy them as a whole, and in the end reach the conclusion that they are even more instructive and spiritually edifying than merely wonderful and pleasing. Some faults of style there are, and the taste is not always perfect. Some very rare and technical words might have been left out to advantage, and the use of the ancient mythology is rather lavish. There are also recurrences of images and figures in the descriptive passages which impress the reader unfavorably, but which are, in fact, surprisingly few when we consider how numerous and extended these passages are.

While to imitate Munsey would be the greatest folly, to study him will be profitable to all. His head reminded us of the classical bust of Cicero, his face was luminous and beautiful, and we know his heart to have been as guileless and as humble and simple as that of a child. The symmetrical brain, the warm heart, the overflowing poetry of a nature most delicately strung, and a soul always reverent with a sense of God, are all in these wonderful sermons.

Sweet Home.

We are, for the most part, a changing and restless people. With too many the idea of a permanent home is scarcely entertained. Home as a place, and for its own sake, is not among the things desired. For it nothing is to be sacrificed. The spot where the most money can be made, and where the largest fortune can be secured, is steadily sought. Our farmers and planters, who ought to be most permanent and most settled in their plans, are ready to sell out and move on. Local attachments and associations have but little influence. Home is not an end in itself, but only as a necessary lodging connected with work and gain. This being always on the move, or ready to move, and always prospecting for a better location, and looking for a better soil and climate, is destructive of one of the most beautiful and conservative sentiments of our nature.

People may live a long time in one place, but if the sense of permanence be not in them they are really homeless. And the absence of a contented and settled feeling is a bar and hinderance to all efforts to make a home of the place in which they dwell. Affection for local objects are not permitted to take root, and neither time nor money are expended to beautify the surroundings, or to give adornment and comfort to the house. Why should we plant trees, or make durable improvements, when we do not expect to reap the benefit of our care and labor? Worn-out and neglected lands, ill furnished houses, and dilapidated barns, cribs and fences, are the manifestations of this unsettled spirit. There are thousands of families that know little or nothing of real home feelings, and have never had the comforts and satisfaction of a true home, because they have moved often, or they have always been about to move. The sweetest enjoyments and truest pleasures of this life have been sacrificed to a spirit of discontent, or to the disposition to change. With a fairly-chosen location that family will be happier and more prosperous that has an abiding place, and that has its history brightened with the memories and associations of a settled home. It would be better for the children that their early years be connected with a spot memorable and sacred as their home, and the home of their parents, and as associated with the pleasantest incidents and the most potent influences of their experience.

Settled home-feeling is what our Southern country most needs at this time for its best and highest development. With this there will come improvement of every sort—school-houses, churches, better roads, and a superior condition of society. The man who believes himself settled for life, and who regards the country he is in as his own, and his children's home, will make a better citizen and a better neighbor than one who is always ready to sell out, and to strike his tent at a moment's notice. Over-flowing and crowded centers are relieved by dispersion, and enterprising young men may find advantageous fields in newer countries, but none who are settled and doing tolerably well, should venture to pull up their homes, and attempt to plant them elsewhere. To have a settled home should be the endeavor, and to adorn it, and to keep it with taste and care should be a high duty. Such homes are essential to the complete and best education of the children. They will impress and mould the character of the young, and aid in developing domestic, social and political virtue. Within certain isothermal limits our people have become almost nomadic. In feeling generally, and largely in practice, they never continue in one stay. This roving propensity costs a great deal, and has but few compensations.

The most of those for whom we write are in the best country in the world. Taking everything into the account, they can find none better. Let them make themselves at home in it, and let them themselves to feel that it is theirs to live and to die and to be buried in. Let them plant orchards, take care of the soil, build comfortable houses, and plan and labor for tasteful and attractive homes. "Sweet Home" will then be something more than a half-forgotten song. It will become a reality and a power for good in our material development, and in our moral, religious and social welfare.

The Pastoral Term.

With us the limit is four years. In the Methodist Episcopal Church it is three years. The Methodist, we believe, advocates the removal of all limitations. Zion's Herald has this to say on the subject:

The question of the necessity of extending the pastoral term in any given locality might be submitted, through the presiding elder, to the Bishops at their last meeting previous to the approaching Annual Conference, and the question be decided by this board. This would be better than to submit it to a vote of the Conference, or to the decision of the presiding Bishop. It could be done more dispassionately, and permit of a more careful consideration. A more disinterested or safer tribunal could not be arranged than this. On many accounts it would seem better to test this policy by some such tentative plan as the above, rather than at once to throw off all the restraints, and to appoint pastors every year, and continue the relation, as is argued in some quarters, at the direction of the appointing power, as long as there seemed to be adequate manifestations of its fruitfulness.

Every system has its own virtues. Congregationalism has its. Nothing can be more grateful to a studious, quiet, earnest minister than an ideal, unchanging pastorate. But such are hardly to be found in these days; and Congregationalism has no resources to meet the restless and nervously active condition of the present time. If you attempt to congregationalize Methodism, you simply spoil both. By the somewhat serious sacrifices of a few ministers and a few churches, the whole connectional body is enabled to carry easily and with little friction hundreds of ministers who could not secure permanent preaching places for themselves, and to minister to and build up hundreds of small charges that could not so efficiently, if at all, supply themselves with acceptable pastors.

We are confident that it is not for lack of a permanent pastorate in cities that our churches, in some instances, do not grow rapidly. It is because our form of Christian worship is not fashionable, and the social tide does not flow toward our sanctuaries. Revivals alone turn this tide and save us; without them we always weaken. In our large, wealthy city churches, where they have the services for many years, with only term interruptions of the same pastor, and he one of our most gifted preachers, the condition of things is not changed for the better. Methodism has its own work. It is a church on wheels, with the presence of the "living creature" in them. It is specially intended for aggressive service, and only grows when in motion. By its marvelous internal machinery it secures equally well the Christian nurture and edification of its disciples. When it settles down into simply a "family church," it becomes as weak as others, and suffers more, because it is not in fashion. It is not an iron system; it has already introduced many modifications to meet the exigencies of its work, and it can render itself equal to all the wants of the community and the age in which it exists; but to touch the seat of its power for the sake of selfish accommodation, or as a matter of taste, would be an act of unparalleled folly, and an ecclesiastical suicide.

Bayard Taylor. George Henry Lewes.

These two eminent literary men have recently died. As authors and men, whose influence is to live after them, it is right that their character and opinions should be fairly and truly estimated. The following statements are made by the Christian Intelligencer, some of which are a surprise to us; but, coming from such a source, they have challenged our attention, and seem to be worthy of credit:

Two literary celebrities have recently passed from among men—Bayard Taylor, of this city, and George Henry Lewes, of London. Frankly we say, we are not among the admirers of either. We have no animosity toward them or their friends; had none toward the men while they were living, and have none now. We regard both lives with regret and sorrow. Both of them persistently assailed through a generation, and to the day of their deaths that which we regard as more precious than any other thing in the world; that is, the Christian religion. An admirer says: "Both though of religious nature, as true artists of any kind are apt to be, were avowed rationalists, who kept fully abreast of the advanced thought of the time." Mr. Taylor visited India and reported that there was no difference between the results of Brahminism and Christianity, that Hindoo society in Calcutta was the same essentially as Christian society in London or New York. His last work, "Education," almost posthumous, the book he leaves behind him as his final work, is a history of the course of human thought, concluding with his hope and expectation for the future. An indulgent critic says of it: "Its philosophy is not Christian, and the ideal man of the poem is not Christ." We cannot be charged with misrepresentation or antagonism when we say that it is decidedly, and often almost sneeringly, anti-Christian. It is aimless, incoherent, obscure, as modern rationalism usually is, and will be read only by a limited circle.

Mr. Lewes put away from him his first wife on the ground of infidelity. On representations that she was penitent, he took her back again. Finding that she had not changed he put her away again. This is what his friends say. The woman is still living. After consultation with friends it was decided that Lewes and the authoress known as George Eliot should live in the same house, as it is very euphemistically phrased, "disregarding conventionality for the sake of mutual assistance and mental growth." The two lived together for many years preceding the death of Lewes under the same roof. George Eliot has been known for years as Mrs. Lewes, and they were never married, as he could not obtain a divorce from his first wife. The example was certainly pernicious, and the relation in our judgment produced a steady moral deterioration in the works of George Eliot. Mr. Lewes' works are read only by a very small circle, and are thoroughly anti-Christian. The results of these two lives we contemplate chiefly with sadness.

Praying for Editors.

Dr. Deems, editor of the Sunday Magazine, writing on this subject, says:

In all our travels and associations with ministers we have never heard editors prayed for as a class. Those who make, those who expound, those who execute our laws—the army, the navy, physicians, lawyers, clergymen—are all prayed for; but who ever prays for editors? And how much they need it! Perpetually under strain, perpetually liable through carelessness or want of judgment to insert what should be omitted or omit what should be inserted; perpetually tempted to put in only what shall please, without regard to what shall profit; many of them having to consult their publishers, and even sometimes diminish their influence to please publishers who do not in every respect know their best interest; perpetually liable to publish crude ideas as if they were well-formed opinions, and in moments of exigency or feeble health to seize and publish in order to supply the perpetual call for copy; acquiring great influence over their readers from the very fact that their productions are printed; who are the men that require more constantly the aid of God's Holy Spirit than editors?

And again:

But suppose that, generally, the editors all over the country knew that their readers were praying for them, that they were committed solemnly to God once a day at every family altar, that those thousands of souls were offering solicitations to God in their behalf, that they might be kept from publishing what deadens the moral sense of any reader or unduly stimulates his imagination; what gives any help to sin or hindrance to righteousness; what should keep any bad man from becoming good, or any good man from becoming bad; that his patriotism may never be injured by his partisanship, nor his religion by his sectarianism; that the whole tone of his periodical may be strong and healthy. Suppose each editor knew all that, with what a solemnity would his responsible function be invested. The editor of a leading journal is more powerful than the President of the United States. Why should an editor not be prayed for?

In our editorial experience we are frequently cheered by a word from correspondents—some of them little children—assuring us that we are remembered in their prayers. Such assurances are like cold water to a thirsty soul. Yes, pray for the editors and for their work and for their papers. Prayer will help the circulation of our religious literature.

Rev. J. E. Newman, writing from Limeira, Province of Santo Paulo, Brazil, December 31, says:

"I spent last week in Rio de Janeiro with Bro. Ransom. He is doing well, and has a fine field for usefulness. He is working very diligently, and has made an excellent beginning. He has work enough on his hands for two men, and I heartily wish he had a colleague in that great city. He has organized an English and American Methodist Church, has twelve members, and will soon have more. He has also organized the first English-speaking Sunday-school ever organized in Rio. It now has nearly forty scholars. I attended their school, and preached in their "upper room." The children sing finely, and for the first time, in the history of this city, their cheerful songs are made to ring out, along its ancient streets, the praise of God.

J. E. NEWMAN."

PLEASE REMEMBER.—Address all communications on business of the ADVOCATE to G. T. LATHROP, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

In requesting changes, give the postoffice from which as well as that to which the change is to be made.

In sending obituaries, marriages or communications of any kind, the address of the writer must be given, although it may not be published.

We have several communications on hand signed anonymously. We must have the full name and address of the writers before we can consider the question of their publication.

Dr. Robert A. Young, of Nashville, preached twice at the Carondelet Street Church, in New Orleans, on Sunday, February 2. The doctor, we believe, came by on his way to Mobile, and while here did a good business in increasing the already large subscriptions to the Publishing House bonds.

The Diocesan Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church assembled in New Orleans last week, and elected Bishop Henry D. Wingfield, missionary Bishop of northern California, to succeed Bishop Wilmer as Bishop of the diocese of Louisiana. Bishop Wingfield is reported to be an able administrator, and an eloquent preacher.

The Louisiana Legislature adjourned Saturday, February 1. A convention, to form a new constitution, is to be held in April. The repeal of the Lottery bill passed both houses, and takes effect from December next.

Rev. W. Fowell Brown, of the British Wesleyan Conference, London, gave us a call last week. Bro. Brown is on a brief visit to New Orleans for health and rest. We wish him a pleasant sojourn here.

Rev. Arthur Davis, a superannuate of the White River Conference, died, in great peace, at his residence, one mile south of Forrest City, January 19, 1879.

Marshal MacMahon has resigned the presidency of the French Republic. He was elected to serve seven years, and the term would have expired in 1881. M. Grevy, a civilian, has been made his successor. The event is regarded as a triumph of the Republicans over the Monarchists, and probably decides the question of a permanent Republican government for France. These important changes, though profoundly exciting the public mind, have not been attended by any violent demonstrations.

The Louisiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Bishop Andrews, presiding, closed its session in New Orleans, Monday, February 3. Rev. J. C. Hartzell remains presiding elder of the South New Orleans district. Ames Church is left to be supplied.

Books and Periodicals.

—Dr. McFerrin, in a recent notice, says:

"We will issue by the first of March, 1879, a brand new Sunday-school music-book. It is the work of Prof. R. M. McIntosh, the popular author of the 'Amaranth,' 'Emeraid,' 'Gem' and 'Good News.' We have sold more than a hundred and fifty thousand of some of these books, and expect the demand to continue for a generation. But, popular as they are, Prof. McIntosh says 'New Life' will be the book of his life. He has bestowed great labor upon it in adapting appropriate music to the beautiful words he has been selecting for several years past, and now feels prepared to supply a book exactly suited to the times. To meet the popular demand, we propose to issue it in two forms of musical notation, round and patent notes, corresponding in size and style with the 'Amaranth' and 'Gem.' Single copies, thirty-five cents; per dozen, $3 60; by mail, $4 per dozen."

—Our Nashville Sunday-school periodicals for February have been received. Our Little People is on tinted paper. The new head of the Visitor pleases us greatly. It is exactly to our taste. The Visitor is altogether a most charming and complete paper for the young. The most valuable part of the Magazine is the expository notes on the lessons. Every teacher should have the Magazine.

—The Sabbath-School Teachers Quarterly, first quarter, 1879, seems to contain about everything a teacher needs for teaching and for records. David C. Cook, publisher, Chicago. Single subscription, thirty cents a year; four copies at twenty-four cents each per year.

—Gospel Gems is an excellent collection of hymns, sacred songs and tunes, by W. Warren Bentley. George D. Russell, publisher, Boston.

—We have received the "Annual of the Sunday School of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Vicksburg, Miss., 1878." This is a neatly printed pamphlet, containing rules and regulations, roll of officers, teachers and scholars, catalogue of library and other information concerning the school. The first page is headed "In Memoriam," and contains the names of twenty-six scholars, who died of yellow fever. The Sunday-School Annual is a good thing, and its publication shows that we have an active working Sunday-school in Vicksburg.

—The North American Review for February has the following articles: 1. The Conduct of Business in Congress, by Senator Hoar. 2. The Mysteries of American Railroad Accounting, by An Accountant. 3. A Statesman of the Colonial Era, by General Richard Taylor. 4. Reconstruction and the Negro, by D. H. Chamberlain. 5. The Empire of the Discontented, by a Russian Nihilist. 6. The Scientific Work of the Howgate Expedition, by O. T. Sherman. 7. Sensationalism in the Pulpit, by William M. Taylor, D. D. 8. Mediæval French Literature, by Prof. T. F. Crane.

—The National Repository for February has: Winter With the Poets, Illustrated; Saunterings in the Tyrol, Illustrated; A Word for Ameer Shere Ali; Deaf-Mute Education; Christian Life in the Fourth Century; Among the Thorns; Impotence of Time; The Scientific Basis of Theism; The Dunmore Indian War; Caricature in America from An English Standpoint; The Dream of Phidias; Clara Barton; Second Adventism in India; Music—Holy, Holy; Editorial Miscellany.

—Wide Awake for February has its usual variety and interest. The pictures are numerous and spirited; the articles such as will entertain and instruct. This magazine is always eagerly received by our young folks at home.

—With the first number of this year the Christian Intelligencer entered upon its fiftieth volume. May it live and flourish a thousand years! It is one of the best religious papers we know of.

MARRIED.

OBSLEY–COGAN.—At the residence of Mr B. Hammett, by Rev. W. H. Lewis, January 22, 1879, Mr John F. Cobley to Miss Katie R. Cogan, all of Jefferson county, Miss.

GLENN–DRINKARD.—On the twenty-third of January, 1879, at Mrs. C. Drinkard's, by Rev. W. W. Graham, Mr. W. H. Glenn to Miss Lillie E. Drinkard, all of Choctaw Corner, Ala.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

—The fifteen Jewish newspapers in Germany have an aggregate circulation of 25,000 copies.

—At a recent meeting of Paris, France, it was decided to adopt the International Series of Lessons next year.

—The Christian Index, of Atlanta, Ga., estimates that the Roman Catholic Church is losing more than it is gaining in that State.

—The breach recently healed by the union of the Irish Wesleyan Conference and the Primitive Wesleyans, occurred sixty years ago, when the latter was organized by seceding members.

—It is reported that in Berlin, with a population of over a million, only about 35,000 persons regularly attend public worship, and that 7,000 burials take place every year without any religious service.

—It is reported that it costs the United States seventeen hundred dollars a year to support a soldier engaged in fighting the Indians, while a missionary among the same people costs only eight hundred dollars per annum.

—The Scriptures give four names to Christians, taken from the four cardinal graces so essential to man's salvation: believers, for their faith; saints, for their holiness; brethren, for their love; disciples, for their knowledge.—Andrew Fuller.

—Over ninety per cent. of the Fijians are Wesleyan Methodists, and contribute yearly in cash about $5,000 toward the support of their churches. 2/3 of their number are local preachers, 55 of the 60 are ordained ministers, qualified to expound the doctrines of the Holy Scriptures.

—The seceders from the native Theistic church of India, the Brahma Somaj, call the new organization the Sadharan Brahma Somaj, Sadharan meaning general. The schism was caused by the marriage of Chunder Sen's daughter, while under age, to a Prince, also under marriageable age.

—An Episcopalian is the first to respond to the appeal of Major Malan for funds for a mission in Central Africa by the American Board. He offers to give five hundred dollars toward the enterprise. It has been suggested that the American Board and the Presbyterian Board make it a joint undertaking, in which case the $25,000 could, no doubt, be more easily obtained.

—An English clergyman has been so rapid in conducting the service at his church that the wardens have addressed a letter to the Bishop, stating that "Sunday after Sunday common decency is shocked by a strong, healthy young clergyman of the church of England, shuffling the cure of souls, with £1,000 a year stipend and no family, getting through the entire service in forty minutes."

The January number of the Missionary Herald, speaking of Japan says: "President Clark, of the Agricultural College, established, an Agricultural Institute under the direction of the Japanese Government. His account at the time of the moral and religious impressions produced upon the students was of striking interest. At the request of President Clark, a Methodist missionary from Hokodati, Rev. M. C. Harris, has visited and baptized twenty-two students, and expects soon to organize a vigorous church there."

A Gospel Garden is the latest religious novelty. It has been started by the Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., at Seventh Avenue and Thirty-Fourth Street, New York, and consists of an apartment fitted up with a fountain, floral baskets, urns of plants and whatever will give it an inviting appearance. To the ceiling are attached long linen fans, which are kept all the time in motion and supply a cool and refreshing atmosphere. On last Sunday evening a large audience assembled to hear Dr. Tyng preach. Services will be held every night for two weeks.

—The question of Ritualism has again been introduced in the English Parliament, by E. Jenkins. He offered a series of resolutions proposing royal commission to inquire what doctrines contrary to law are taught or practiced by the clergymen of the Established Church, what ceremonies of the Roman Catholic Church are used, what monastic or conventual institutions there may be under the sanction of church authority, and whether there is a party among the clergymen who inveigh against the Reformation and urge a reconciliation with the church of Rome. After a long discussion, the resolutions were withdrawn, with the statement that they would be presented next year, if it was found that legislation was required.

MICHIGAN LUTHERANS.—The Michigan annual district convention of the German Lutheran Church was held in Grand Rapids last week. There were eighty-five delegates present, forty churches in all sections of the State being represented. The Rev. Otto Fuerbringer, of Frankenmuth, Saginaw county, presided over the convention. The proceedings were entirely in the German language, and related wholly to the government and support of that religious body. It appears from the addresses and reports that Lutherans of this State not only hold together well, and preserve the church discipline and forms of worship which they brought with them from the Fatherland, but are also growing in aggregate membership and in the number of their churches, and that their finances are on a good footing, with the prospect of their resources meeting all requirements.

—The English Baptist expedition up the Congo river was to set out from Cameroons river in May. Mr. Comber writes from that point April 1, explaining his plans and stating that the preliminary expedition up the Congo in February would prove to be very valuable. Its advantages were: "1. We have gained some knowledge of the district, the river and the use we can make of it with our own boats; the available currency; the men we can take from Cameroons, etc. 2. We have secured the fullest assistance from our kind, obliging Dutch friends there, offered with the greatest cheerfulness and readiness a passage up in their fast steamer whenever we may require it, and food, stores, cloth, etc., that they can supply from their stores. 3. We have found out the best time of the year for traveling in those latitudes—generally declined to be May. 4. We have been able to give some intimation to the King of Congo about our coming. 5. A few of our important assistants here have been to the Congo with us, and have thus been prepared for its distance and for going into a new country. Were this not so, we might find it wholly impossible to persuade any one to go there for six or eight months' absence."

—The Rev. Mr. Wilson, the surviving member of the original mission to Lake Nyanza, writes to the Church Missionary Society an account of his Sunday services at Mtesa's palace, at Uganda, which he was compelled to leave. He says:

"As in all tropical countries, we are early here, so about half-past seven every Sunday morning I set off for the palace, the fact of its being Sunday announced to the public by the king flying his flag from the flagstaff by his palace. This flag is a non-descript sort of thing, consisting of pieces of red, blue, and white calico sewn together. The service begins with a chapter from the Old Testament. I read three or four verses in English, and Mutta then reads them in Kisuahili—the king generally translating into Kiganda. I then explain and comment on the verses just read and answer any questions that may be asked; then three or more verses are read and explained, and so on till the chapter is finished. A chapter is then read and explained in a similar manner from the New Testament; and I give a short address, consisting principally of a sort of summing up of what we have just read and drawing particular attention to anything of special importance. This keeps the people's attention better than reading long portions at a time, and also gives them more opportunities for asking questions, of which I am glad to say they avail themselves pretty freely. We then conclude with some prayers from the Prayer Book, in English and Suahili, the people (except the Arabs) all kneeling and joining in the 'Amens.' The people, as a rule, are very attentive, and seem to take an interest in what is read, especially in our Lord's parables; and the hearty expressions of assent we get come from them when anything comes to them with special force are very pleasant to hear. I was much pleased last Sunday with what the king did. The passage from the New Testament was the raising of Lazarus, which was listened to with unusual attention. At the close, after speaking of our Lord's power and willingness to save all who come to Him, I urged them to come to Christ at once, while yet there was time. As soon as I had finished the king took it up and spoke most eloquently to them, telling them to believe in Christ now, saying they could only do so in this life. When they were dead it would be too late. These services are attended only by what may be called the aristocracy of Uganda; but it is a great thing that in so young a mission we can give some, at any rate, the opportunity of hearing regularly the Word of God, and we have God's promise to encourage us that His Word shall not return unto Him void. I, of course, do not confine my work to Sundays; but, whenever I go up to the king's court, which I do several times each week, I take my Bible, and generally contrive to read or say something about religious matters. At these courts the attendance is more mixed, and there are people present from all parts of Uganda, so that one cannot but hope that the seed thus sown may be carried far and wide, to spring up in due time, to God's honor and glory."

While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the real value of the goods advertised. In ordering please mention the ADVOCATE.

WE REFER parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 12 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so good a first class house, having reduced its rates to $2 and $2.50 per day.

ATTENTION is called to the advertisement of Essences of Meats, that are highly recommended by the medical faculty throughout the country for use of invalids, infants and travelers. The London Manufacturing Company have an explanatory advertisement in another column to which we direct our readers.

COTTON FACTOR AND COMMISSION MERCHANT.—Captain Henderson is so favorably known to a large number of shippers of cotton, that he requires no introduction at our hands. Possessed of ample means and long experience he is satisfied that he will give satisfaction to all who may favor him with their orders. Read his card on this page, and send him your orders.

SHADINES.—Howe & Odell, 147 Reade street, New York, are the only packers of the genuine Shadines; the celerity with which a luncheon or a meal can be prepared renders them peculiarly acceptable to travelers and families. Wherever used they have become very popular. See that you do not get the imitation.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT.—At 51 St. Charles street will be found everything necessary for sportsmen, and our friends in the country could not send their orders to a more worthy and honorable gentleman than Richard Rhodes, the popular proprietor.

DRY GOODS.—E. H. Adams & Bro.'s advertisement will be seen on this page. This firm has been established for a great many years and has always been noted for its reliability and honorable record to strangers. We commend them to those who know them; no word of approval is needed at our hands. Country orders solicited.

DRY GOODS.—The house of D. H. Holmes is one of the most complete and properly appointed stores in this country. A special feature which causes this famous house to retain its old trade as well as constantly increase in popularity and attract new customers, consists in the fact that all the goods sold here are bought at the lowest figures of manufacturers in Europe. See advertisement on this page and send them your orders.

NEW ORLEANS WATER WORKS.—[illegible]—No better opening for the safe investment of money can be found than in the bonds which the New Orleans Water Works company offer for sale. In addition to saving your principal and drawing, without fail, your interest, you are at the same time helping the city of New Orleans to have a better supply of water than ever before, and which may be the means at some future day of saving your own home from the destroying element of fire.

UNDERTAKER.—There is no better man to [illegible] in the undertaking [illegible] than P. W. [illegible]. This gentleman has been engaged in the business for many years, and has made a host of friends by his kindness and polite manners. He has the [illegible] and any undertaker in the South.

STOVES.—The "old reliable" Stewart stove is [illegible] among the new and improved stoves, and is never [illegible]. Mr. J. H. Campman is the wholesale and retail agent for this stove, and keeps [illegible] on hand. Call on him at 131 Poydras street.

LOUISIANA EQUITABLE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—The most excellent and perfectly reliable Life Insurance Company is a home institution, and a credit to be respected by the citizens of this State, and by the agents will be meeting the large expenditure they continued to receive, and keep them employed, they have complied with the state law, which requires that the capital stock shall be paid in and invested with the state Auditor.

T. R. M. and B. J. MONTGOMERY.—The largest and most stock of furniture in the city is that of the above well known firm, and is [illegible] in that large and elegant building on the corner of Poydras and Camp streets, in the city of New Orleans. Everything in their line, at prices to suit every purse, can be found in their handsome warerooms, from the grand [illegible] furniture to the plain little bed-room sets. And whether you wish to furnish a large house or only to buy one piece, you will find them attentive, courteous and willing in their efforts to please.

FITS OR EPILEPSY.—Read the advertisement of Dr. H. G. Eno, of Pearl street, New York, and see what he says about his valuable remedy. He has performed some wonderful cures.

NATIONAL PLATING COMPANY.—The advertisement of this reliable house appears in this issue. This company have [illegible] capital in their business, and employ over three hundred men and women. All the departments of their extensive establishment are conducted with system and precision, and nothing whatever is neglected that is calculated to protect and enlarge their well earned reputation. Our readers may rest assured that they will get their money's worth when they give them a trial.

MECHANICS' & TRADERS' INSURANCE COMPANY.—All who are called to the advertisement of this reliable Company. The [illegible] ability and [illegible] of its capable president, Col. Calendine, is too well known to our [illegible] Community to require any comment at our hands. The affairs of the company under his vigilant supervision cannot be over estimated, the careful management of which is best shown by the security given their customers and the satisfactory [illegible] paid to their [illegible].

SOAP.—J. H. Keller is the oldest merchant in the manufactory of the above article in the South. His goods, which are in the hands of all the leading grocers, can be had of any house bear through orders direct to them. The superiority of this soap may be attributed from the many awards it has received at the [illegible] State Fair.

LUMBER.—Geo. Purves, whose card appears in this paper is well known in the South by reason of his popular and honorable course of dealing. His stocks of lumber are always carefully selected and prepared to supply the peculiar wants of the section, and consequently those who favor him with their orders will always find large supplies at his place of business.

Not Medicine, But Food.

The fall and early winter season is the harvest time of hacking coughs and debilitating forms of Catarrh, just as the later spring is the seed time of malarial fevers. To know a certain cure of the one, and a preventive of the other, is to have within easy reach the most inestimable blessing of the period. We do know of them, for these really marvelous properties are combined in Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod-Liver Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda.

There is no form of physical weakness and prostration that a beautiful use of the Emulsion will not change to glowing health, and full life and vigor, and then it is not a disagreeable medicine, but the most delightful kind of food.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW ORLEANS WATER WORKS CO.

$500,000 First Mortgage 6 Per Cent. Bonds,

1000 of $500 each, Payable in 30 Years,

INTEREST PAYABLE SEMI-ANNUALLY AT THE LOUISIANA NATIONAL BANK IN NEW ORLEANS.

The New Orleans Water Works Company having obtained from the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, Extra Session of 1877, a charter for fifty years, with the exclusive privilege of supplying the city of New Orleans and its inhabitants with water, and having been organized and placed in possession of the works on the tenth of April, 1878, is now ready to issue the above bonds as authorized by its charter.

The payment of said bonds, both principal and interest, is secured by a first mortgage of all the property and franchises of said company, including its franchise to be a corporation, and the property and franchises acquired or to be acquired, said property being the same that formerly of New Orleans acquired from the Commercial Bank in 1858, and which was valued by experts at $2,000,000.

The bonds are issued for exclusive use in improving and enlarging the works of the company and increasing the supply of pure water to the inhabitants, to promote the public health and to afford greater security against fire.

The interest on the above bonds will form the first charge upon the revenues of the company as required by section 10 of the charter, and the present net revenues are estimated at [illegible] per annum, which secures [illegible] on the interest payments.

The Directory have adopted the plans and specifications submitted by Mr. Moses Pardee, C. E., the eminent engineer employed to replace the works of New Orleans in favorable contrast with those of larger cities in the United States, and furnish to the city an abundant and pure supply of water with a guarantee head of seventy-five feet at all points in the city, and thereby increasing very largely the revenues of the company.

Application will be received at the office of the company until the fifteenth of February, 1879.

No application will be entertained for less than one and a [illegible] bond. The bonds will be issued in the contemplated improvements progress, say:

[illegible] months,
[illegible] months,
[illegible] months.

The remainder of the loan will only be issued in the event of the adoption of a contract to deliver clear water. If the applications offered should exceed the amount required, the bonds will be issued pro rata.

Those persons proposing to bid for bonds will find a detailed statement of the affairs of the company open for their inspection at the office of the company.

By authority of the board.

INVESTIGATING COTTON WORMS.—The best of all scientific periodicals, the Popular Science Monthly, published by Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., New York, says in its issue for January:

Prof. A. R. Grote is at present visiting the cotton-growing States for the purpose of studying there the habits of the cotton worm, and more particularly of determining whether the fly from which it comes is acclimated in these States, or whether it is annually imported. The latter opinion is the one held by Prof. Grote, and it appears to be confirmed by this latter investigation. According to his theory, the fly comes from the West Indies with the south wind every year. Having reached our cotton producing States, it then raises its first brood. The eggs are deposited on the under side of the cotton plant leaf. In about three weeks the young worm "wells up" and becomes a black chrysalis in a thin cotton cocoon within a fold of the leaf, and in due time the perfect insect emerges. This new fly, born in the South, moves in a general northerly direction, and in this way the country is overrun by the several ensuing broods. If the worm appears while yet the plant is young the planter can exterminate it by the use of poison; but if it comes late it will not do harm enough to warrant much expense in killing it. Paris green, in a liquid form, or dilute carbolic acid, kills the worm when applied to the under side of the leaf as spray.

PROCESS FOR RAISING CREAM.—Mr. Henry F. Bond, of Northborough, Mass., recently described a new process for raising cream, devised by himself, illustrated by experiments. This process had proved satisfactory, saving time and labor, obtaining nearly all, if not all, the cream, with the assurance of its sweetness, as well as that of the milk. He substitutes for the old tedious process by gravitation, centrifugal force, which quickly and perfectly separates the cream and the milk. A German patented process employing this force, at first very rapid and then gradually slowing to perfect rest, was only a partial success, as the cream and the milk in the latter part of the time tended to combine again. The usual time for raising the cream in pans in the old way is from thirty-six to ten or twelve hours, according to the care and skill of the dairyman, or the improvements at his command. Some time may be gained by first raising the temperature to 120, and then gradually cooling it; but no process came anywhere near his time, namely, fifteen minutes. In his process the milk is cooled by the spray of water, ejected by fans in the outside of the central reservoir, the only motion necessary being the centrifugal one. As churning may immediately follow the separation, the process is best carried on at the temperature of 60. The apparatus is a combined separator and churn, working horizontally as a centrifugal separator; by tipping it up, the apparatus becomes a barrel churn.

He then put about two quarts of milk into the apparatus, separating the cream in fifteen minutes, and making from it in fifteen minutes quite a pure butter, in the proportion which the milk ought to afford.

ABOUT THE CURRY COMB.—A great many farmers make a mistake in buying their curry-combs. They buy them in the spring at about the time when they get a new hired man. The proprietor tells his man to clean his horses well. So the new groom, with the new comb, scratches the horses up and down, backward and forward, for five or ten minutes. I would like to see a horse that would not get angry with such treatment. I always buy my curry-combs in the fall—November or December is a very good time. At that time the horse has a thick coat, and then there is not much danger that you will scratch a horse so bad that he will bite or kick at you. I know a man who always has horses that kick or bite, and I am satisfied that it is his own fault. He whips and kicks his horses more in one week than I do mine in five years. I advise those who want to buy horse brushes to buy the best they can get. Eleven years ago I bought a brush that cost three dollars and fifty cents, and it is as good yet as it was when I bought it. "The best is always the cheapest."—D. N. Kern, in Ohio Farmer.

DRAINAGE.—It is not half well enough understood that in the country, where air ought to be pure and water untainted, typhoid fevers, diphtheria, and a whole catalogue of malignant and dangerous disorders, are caused by the drainage of barnyards and filthy out-buildings into the well, which is often placed so low as to take even the surface drainage, to say nothing of the liquid filth which soaks through the soil and poisons the currents that supply wells with water. In addition to this, the wash water of the kitchen is often thrown out near the back-door, instead of being carried away by a wide and free drain. And then very few persons understand how dangerous to health are the decaying vegetables and all sorts of impurities that accumulate in cellars, under houses, unless they are kept dry and clean, and carefully watched.

SOAP CURE FOR HOG CHOLERA.—A year ago I bought six hogs from a drove of twenty that were dying with cholera, and found, on driving them home, that they were affected—they vomited often. I put them with twenty-five of my own raising, and boiled some corn in weak lye from ashes, used some soft soap in their slop from the kitchen, and I never lost one, while the last of that drove I left died. I have a new which took it a month ago and it would eat nothing; it seemed blind. I cured it by using of common soap, made thin with water, pouring it down with a tin cup, by holding the hog on its back.—Correspondent of New York Tribune.

TO SUGAR OR CRYSTALIZE POP-CORN.—Put into an iron kettle one tablespoonful of butter, three tablespoonfuls of water, and one teacupful of white sugar; boil until ready to candy; then throw in three quarts of corn, nicely popped; stir briskly until the candy is evenly distributed over the corn; set the kettle from the fire and stir until it is cooled a little and you have each grain separate and crystallized with the sugar; care should be taken not to have too hot a fire, lest you scorch the corn when crystallizing. Nuts of any kind may be treated in the same way.

EGGS FROM DIFFERENT BREEDS OF POULTRY.—Fanny Field, a lady correspondent of the Ohio Farmer, says that, after repeated experiments with the different varieties of fowls and comparisons with others who have experimented in the same direction, she has concluded that the laying capabilities of the principal varieties are about as follows:

Light Brahmas and Partridge Cochins—eggs, seven to the pound; lay 130 per annum.

Dark Brahmas—eggs, eight to the pound; lay 120 per annum.

Black, White, and Buff Cochins—eggs, eight to the pound; lay 125 per annum.

Plymouth Rocks—eggs, eight to the pound; lay 150 per annum.

Houdans—eggs, eight to the pound; lay 150 per annum.

La Fleche—eggs, seven to the pound; lay 130 per annum.

Black Spanish—eggs, seven to the pound; lay 140 per annum.

Leghorns—eggs, nine to the pound; lay 150 per annum.

Hamburgs—eggs, nine to the pound; lay 150 per annum.

Polish—eggs, nine to the pound; lay 125 per annum.

Bantams—eggs, sixteen to the pound; lay 60 per annum.

She regrets very much that she did not keep account of the cost of food consumed by each variety.

CUTTING GRAIN EARLY.—So long as the plant is alive, even after it apparently stops growing, it draws upon the soil for more mineral constituents, particularly the phosphates. When grain is cut early, but not too soon, the kernels fill out and ripen, taking the phosphates, &c., they require from those already absorbed by the plant. Hence it is less exhausting to the land to cut early than after grain is fully matured. Practically, this fact is most valuable in indicating our treatment of corn and of oats, both of which, cut up green, will ripen their grain while the haulm is better fodder and much more relished by stock than when it stands until the grain is fully matured.—New York Tribune.

RED CABBAGE PICKLED.—One red cabbage chopped fine, one quart of vinegar, if very strong reduce it by taking one-half water, one heaping tablespoonful ground ginger, one heaping tablespoonful ground cinnamon, one heaping tablespoonful ground cloves, one heaping tablespoonful ground allspice; make a bag for these spices and put them in the vinegar; two tablespoonfuls of salt, one tablespoonful of pepper, a small piece of alum, and some whole cloves. Boil all together five minutes.

PLAIN PASTRY.—One quart of sifted flour, one half pound of good lard chopped up very fine with the flour; chop it in with a chopping-knife until it is as fine as it is possible to make it; wet it with one small teacupful ice-cold water; this will make a stiff dough; make the dough into shape, roll it out thin, spread good butter over it, fold it up butter side in, and roll it out thin again, repeat this folding and rolling until one-half pound of good butter is used up.

DESTRUCTION OF SHEEP BY DOGS. The investigation into the loss of sheep during last year shows a total of nearly 3,000,000 sheep and lambs destroyed by dogs and wolves, and various diseases; and an aggregate money value of nearly $8,000,000. The average percentage of the loss is nearly 8. The proportion is the highest respectively, in North Carolina, Florida and Louisiana, and ranges from seventeen per cent. in the former State, to three, six, ten in Nebraska. The rate is the highest in the South and the lowest in the States having a dog law.—Rural Sun.

SALTING AND SMOKING BACON.—There are many ways of pickling and preserving meat, but the following will be found a good one: For every hundred pounds of meat use eight pounds of salt, three ounces of saltpeter, three ounces saleratus, one quart of molasses, two pounds of sugar, and water sufficient to cover the meat. Put all together, scald and skim off whatever impurities rise to the surface. Pack the meat tightly in a barrel, and pour on the pickle when it is cold. For beef it should be put on hot. Leave the meat in the brine six or eight weeks, then take out and smoke with green hickory or maple wood, if either can be obtained. If the smoke house is tight and cool, the meat may be left hanging in it all summer, or until used; but if there is danger of insects getting at the meat, wrap each piece in good thick brown paper, and rub the outside with salt and lime to the consistency of paint.—New York Sun.

CARROTS FOR HORSES.—One bushel of carrots and one bushel of oats, fed in alternate meals, are of equal value with two bushels of oats alone, while they can be grown at a much less expense. Henceforth carrots will preferably replace one-half the oats that we have fed. Horses, like human beings, require a variety of food, and thrive best upon a ration that involves a change of diet.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE MOST POISONOUS OF GASES.—It is well known that suffocation by burning charcoal in a closed room is not produced by carbonic acid. Death is caused by the oxide of carbon, which is due to the incomplete oxidation of the charcoal. The oxide of carbon unites with the red globules of the blood, so that one volume of oxide of carbon takes the place of one volume of oxygen; the globules of blood cease to have the normal provision of oxygen, and suffocation ensues. Recent experiments have demonstrated that the poisonous effects of oxide of carbon are much more virulent than were supposed—that is to say, that a much weaker dilution of this gas in air is fatal. Any man or animal that breathes during half an hour an atmosphere containing 1 779 part of oxide of carbon absorbs a sufficient quantity of this gas to make half the red globules of his blood incapable of absorbing oxygen. If the atmosphere contain merely 1 1429 part of oxide of caroon, one-quarter of the red globules of his blood become incapable of absorbing oxygen. These experiments demonstrate the danger of braseros and of several sorts of stoves. Whenever there is an incomplete combustion, oxide of carbon is invariably produced. All cigars, and especially all cigars that burn badly, all pipes, all cigarettes, produce oxide of carbon. The smoker absorbs it; it makes more or less of the red globules of his blood incapable of absorbing oxygen. Narcotic anemia, narcotic carcinical diseases, are probably caused by this absorbtion of the most poisonous gas known.—New Orleans Picayune.

PHOTOGRAPH UNDER DIFFICULTIES.—Prof. Duby of Brelan, when lecturing before the Photographic Society of that city, forgot that local custom authorized unlimited smoking on the part of his audience. The result was that when he tried to show the practical working of a certain process his bromide of silver paper refused to yield clear impressions, and it was unanimously agreed that smoking ought to be suppressed under some circumstances. Probably if the professor had given out beforehand that smoking would not be permitted his audience would have been distressingly amateurish. Such are the prejudices of some people.

—A solution of common salt is recommended by M. Mercier for preserving botanical and zoological specimens. It is cheaper than alcohol, does not evaporate readily, and does not disappear in other ways. Another advantage of the brine is that it does not change the color of the substances submerged in it. The saline solution having been boiled to expel gas, the specimens are placed in it at a temperature of 81 centigrade, and then the vessel is closely sealed.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

LIVER PILLS,

of a Disease of Liver

AGUE AND FEVER.

McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, in Ague and Fever, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a purgative, they are unequalled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated, have a red wax seal on the lid, with impression Dr. McLane. Each box of the genuine McLANE LIVER PILLS bears the signature of CYRUS McLANE, and PLUMMER & CO. on the wrapper.

Upon having the genuine DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of the name McLane, differently but same pronounced, you will procure the genuine article.

A. J. WRIGHT,
Woodville, Miss.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relict of the late R. H. Rozal, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet LeRoy, who would with a right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the control and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the people committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE—MADAME LOQUET-LEROY recognizes in her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have received. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant tasteless milk like curd masks of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The solutions of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first the celebrated Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia, now offered. The difference between these is most striking, for whereas the application of the latest scientific discoveries has rendered the Milk of Magnesia almost invisible, the old Magnesia as taken with water is still in large particles and crystals, in fact positively dangerous.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others will strongly recommend this preparation, and obtain explanatory circular by addressing

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last year your Pills were recommended to me. Used them out with little delay. I am now a well man. I have since used no other. Your pills are perfect, regular stools, free comfort, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

REV. R. T. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Acute and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and with certainty will relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, will render the healthy effects of these Pills of real value to those who are reduced below the standard by dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the most pernicious of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice. But if it has become habitual, one Pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the dose as you progress until a regular daily movement is established, which will soon follow.

OPPORTUNITY.

To harvest thick when fields and woods
Old dazzle sunset's glow,
And scythes clang hustle through the land,
It is too late to sow.
Too late! too late!
It is too late to sow.

In wintry days, when dreary earth
Lies cold in pulseless sleep,
With not a blade to cheer the soul,
It is too late to reap.
Too late! too late!
It is too late to reap.

When blasted violets are nestle,
And new born grasses creep,
And young birds chirp from withered limbs,
And the whole world is full of hope,
Then, we then we'll
And the harvest shall reap.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Feb. 3.—The Brooklyn Presbytery to-day appointed a committee consisting of three ministers and two elders to investigate the conduct of Rev. De Witt Talmage, it being rumored that he is guilty of falsehood and deceit, and of using improper methods in preaching, relating to bring religion into contempt, &c.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Feb. 4.—The Senate passed bills to establish the Warrior Agricultural District and to provide for the management of its affairs; to regulate the handling, storage and sale of cotton in Mobile, and to protect such cotton from depredations; to regulate the buying and selling of oysters in the shell by measure; to amend section 4,363 of the Code; amends the sunrise and sunset law by preventing the removal of cotton by night, except for the purpose of ginning the same; to amend sections 1,415 and 1,317 of the Code (relative to the delivery of cotton in Mobile).

The Senate adopted the memorial to Congress relative to the improvement of the Tennessee and Coosa rivers and for a canal between them.

The bill repealing the charter of Mobile reached its second reading and was referred to a special committee with Brooks as chairman.

The bill passed giving the colored normal school at Huntsville two thousand dollars instead of one thousand dollars annually.

The House passed the bill appropriating one thousand dollars for repairing the Medical College at Mobile.—Mobile Register.

A petition has been presented in the Alabama Legislature, signed by hundreds of Presbyterians, praying for a law prohibiting the running of railroad trains on Sunday.

OTTAWA, Feb. 5.—The Free Press says the reports in American papers about Sitting Bull having crossed over are apocryphal. Sitting Bull is encamped at Frenchman creek, at the head of Wood Mountain, twenty-five miles north of the boundary line.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—The select Senate committee appointed to investigate the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, submitted their report to-day, through Senator Harris. After detailing the operations of the Board of Experts who visited Memphis and New Orleans, the committee strongly incline to the opinion that neither yellow fever nor cholera is indigenous to any part of the United States; that a majority, if not all, epidemics of these diseases, with which the country has suffered, resulted from importation.

The committee is of opinion that the best and only certain means of preventing the introduction of these diseases from other countries, is absolute non intercourse with ports where the disease exists in epidemic form; the next best means is a well regulated national quarantine.

To this end the committee report a bill prescribing the duties to be observed by vessels arriving at United States ports from infected ports; establishing a bureau of health in lieu of the marine hospital service, which it proposes to abolish. The bill also contemplates co-operation with State and municipal authorities, without interfering with their respective systems. The report in conclusion recommends the enforcement of strict sanitary measures in every city and town.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 10.—A telegram says: All trains on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad were detained at Flora, Ill., from six A. M. to six P. M. yesterday, by the enforcement of a vigorous Sunday law.

FOREIGN.

CAPE TOWN, Jan. 21.—via St. Vincent.—On the 21st inst. a British column, consisting of a portion of the 24th Regiment, a battery of artillery and 600 native auxiliaries, was utterly annihilated near Tugela River by 20,000 Zulus, who captured a valuable convoy of 102 wagons, 1000 oxen, 2 cannon 400 shot and steel, 1000 rifles, 25,000 pounds ammunition, 60,000 pounds weight of provisions and the colors of the 24th Regiment. It is estimated 5000 Zulus were killed and wounded in the battle.

LONDON, Feb. 5.—The Times correspondent at Paris reports that M. Lepere, the new minister of agriculture and commerce, will be a protectionist or free trader, according to the ideas he forms while in office. The Cabinet, except on the points mentioned yesterday, has agreed on no general principle, but will lead a kind of from day to day existence, expecting neither immortality nor a premature demise.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—The Times Paris correspondent says: Five members of the Cabinet, as now constituted, are Protestants.

PARIS, Feb. 6.—An official note is published on the subject of the Russian plague. It says that the danger of its extension to France by land is not serious, and measures will be taken to prevent its transmission by sea.

The Government will also participate with others in studying the epidemic and the best means of combatting it.

MADRID, Feb. 8.—A quarantine against the plague has been ordered in all the Spanish ports.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—A mob of strikers at Liverpool yesterday caused a temporary suspension of work at the Waterloo Dock and Princess Dock. A number of laborers sent to Liverpool from Woolver-hampton were compelled to return by threats of murder. It is estimated that from 50,000 to 75,000 men are now on a strike at Liverpool. The demeanor of the crowd yesterday was most threatening, in consequence of sailors joining the strikers.

PARIS, Feb. 10.—Pere Hyacinthe Loyson's old Catholic Church was opened yesterday, in a building formerly a theater.

The Bishop of Moray and two other Protestant bishops were expected to assist at the dedication, but circumstances prevented their attendance.

BERLIN, Feb. 10.—It is officially stated that the Greek Government has received a report from its Consul at Kavala, on the Aegean Sea, confirming the rumors of the outbreak of the plague there.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—Reports from Russian villages continue to give alarming statements of the prevalence of plague and other epidemic diseases.

A Quietus put upon Southern War Claims.

The recent signal defeat of the bill for the relief of William and Mary College, coupled with the prospective defeat of the pending similar bill for the relief of the Fairfax Episcopal Seminary, is regarded as having been a quietus to everything like a claim for damages inflicted by the war. Both of these measures had features in the shape of professional and religious considerations, calculated to secure them favorable action at the hands of Congress, if there were a disposition to do anything at all in the way of helping individuals or associations injured by the war. The rejection is, therefore, regarded as the death knell of all the so called Southern claims. The greater number of Northern Democrats voted against the college bill on the ground that their people would not have any money appropriated, even for such cases as this, in the shape of war claims.—N. Y. Herald.

A Financial Plan.

At the request of the last Vicksburg District Conference we have prepared for publication the following suggestions as to a financial plan. We understood the resolution of the Conference to contemplate simply the setting forth of some practicable methods of facilitating the collection of church dues. The Methodist Church sends out her ministers without contract for their support or stipulation as to salary. The obligation to support her ministers never becomes, as in perhaps all other churches it may, a subject of enforcement by the civil law. Some of her members have, therefore, concluded that they are under no special obligation to support the church. Yet every one who enters her pale makes a solemn promise to "support her institutions." The obligation to do so is scriptural, rational, and of covenant agreement. Moral in its nature and grounds, and biblical in its authority, the duty of supporting the church is indefinite as to the time, manner and amount of service to be rendered, and is ordinarily to be enforced solely by the compulsions of an enlightened Christian conscience. It is a debt, not of law or honor, but of duty and conscience. He who denies this is disloyal to the church, and, we think, disobedient to God.

The church expects every member to pay, according to ability, for the support of the ministry; not as much as each one can (lest the ministry should in places be speedily made rich,) but that each shall, "according to ability," pay a just proportional part of the whole amount necessary to be raised. The desired end is by no means satisfactorily attained if a few persons guarantee or pay the whole amount assessed against a congregation or pastoral charge. The preacher may thus be paid, and all other church dues met; but a most essential proof of vital interest in the church, and consequently of saving union with Christ, the Head of the church, is lacking in the case of every member who pays nothing. The church looks upon the paying of something by every member, not simply as an assurance of increased revenues, but as a substantial evidence of individual interest in the cause of Christ. Every true minister would regard the paying of even the smallest sums by the poorest members, not simply as so much increase of his salary, but as a gratifying proof of their devotion to the service of God. On this point every faithful pastor could doubtless say, with the Apostle Paul: "Not because I desire a gift, but I desire fruit that may abound to your account." The support of the ministry, and of all other institutions of the church, is doubtless a great means of grace. God could, no doubt, have sent us the gospel by angels, who would have required no support from us; but He has not done so. On the contrary, He has said: "By them which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

A perfect financial plan should, in our estimation, lead to the accomplishment of two grand results: 1. The obtaining from every member of something for every church enterprise. 2. The raising of such sums in the aggregate as shall suffice for all church purposes.

It must be remembered that no plan can furnish members or money. These are supposed to exist in sufficient number and quantity for all financial purposes. Our aim is simply to facilitate the collection of money. In order to do this much will depend upon those who work the plan. No plan will work itself. Do not find fault with the plan till you have given it a fair trial. To this end the stewards must be both energetic and skillful. They must be apt to enlighten the ignorant, persuade the covetous to be liberal, and induce those who feel poverty-stricken to feel able and willing to support the church. A steward must not be offended or discouraged by a refusal. In the country charges, especially, he will often find it necessary not only to convince the people that the church ought to be supported, but to show them how it can be done. He must be a man of expedients, ready to show indifferent or reluctant contributors, by what methods various other kinds of property, besides money, can be made available for the payment of church dues. In many pastoral charges no plan of collecting has ever been adopted. In such charges any and every plan will be apt to meet with strong opposition. In some places sufficient amounts may have been raised without any plan. But in general, a good plan would greatly facilitate the financial operations of the church.

In order to the success of any plan it must first be admitted that every congregation is able to pay such amounts for church purposes as a judicious board of stewards or other authorized agents may assess them. Otherwise the church is put in the attitude of undertaking to do not only an impracticable, but a wrong thing, in asking her members to pay amounts which they are unable to pay. It being admitted that each congregation is able to pay its assessments, the question arises: How shall each member be most easily and certainly brought to bear a just proportional part of the burden? In answer to this question we propose the following

FINANCIAL PLAN.

1. Let the stewards, at the beginning of the year, promptly estimate for the salary of their minister—not what they think he is worth, nor what the people paid the year before, nor what they are likely to pay the present year, nor what they are able to pay (for that would in many instances make the preacher rich,) but what they think the people, whose abilities they are supposed to know, ought to pay the preacher, whose wants they are supposed to understand, and proceed without delay to ascertain what part of that amount each member is able and willing to pay.

2. Let a collection be taken for the support of the ministry at every public service. This may be done through envelopes marked with the names of the contributors, or by a hand (not hat) collection, accompanied with a list for crediting each person with the amount paid.

3. Let the stewards call on all who, from any cause, fail to contribute at the public collections once a month, or at most once a quarter, for their dues.

4. If any steward shall fail to make proper effort to collect something from every member on his list during a quarter, let him be complained of at the Quarterly Conference, under question 2, for "neglect of official duty."

5. If any member, known to be able, shall persistently refuse to pay anything for the support of the church, let such member be dealt with for "disobedience to the order and discipline of the church," according to directions found under answer 2 to the question: "How shall an accused member be brought to trial?"—Discipline, page 51.

6. Let the minister be diligent and thorough in pastoral visiting as well as faithful in preaching, remembering that some who attend public worship but seldom will readily acknowledge their obligation for services rendered to them or their families at home, and that the average member is willing to pay more for one visitation for five sermons.

7. Let all annual collections, as for missions and Conference fund, be faithfully attended to by the preacher in charge. Let him set an example to the stewards by meeting the assessments in full. His success in this respect, so far from impeding, will help the work of the stewards.

8. Let all incidental expenses be met by incidental collections, arranged to suit the necessities of the case.

9. In all our Sunday-schools let a collection be taken every Sunday for the purchase of literature, or the support of the pastor, or for missions, or for the Conference fund, or for other proper objects.

W. L. T. HENNICUTT.

NOTE.—In the foregoing plan we have supposed that the Church Conference, whose prerogative it is to "adopt its own method of raising money," orders the collections for support of the ministry to be made by the stewards.

Ministerial Power.

Bishop Simpson's seventh Yale lecture was on Ministerial Power. We give the conclusion:

Look at the vast multitudes that attended the preaching of a Whitefield, and the longer continued ministrations of a Wesley. See how thoroughly society was stirred to its very foundation—how the colliers from their sooty pits listened with uplifted faces and streaming eyes to the words of life, and how the rabble on the commons, though like wild beasts in their lawlessness, were tamed and sobered under their preaching. I heard Cardinal Manning say, in a sermon in London that had it not been for the preaching of John Wesley, no man could tell into how deep a degradation England would have sunk. Listen to the prayers and preaching of Latimer, and how the multitude was stirred. In our own country New England heard the voice of an Edwards, and was stirred to its center. What wonderful power, when the minister sitting behind him could no longer contain himself, but sprang to his feet, and, catching him by the coat, said: "But, O! Mr. Edwards, is not God a God of mercy?" And one of his auditors said that he fully expected to see the heavens opened and the Judge descend. What wonderful revivals followed! Listen to the ministry of Chalmers. It is said that Prof. Young, who occupied the chair of Greek in the university on one occasion, "was so electrified that he leaped up from his seat upon the bench near the pulpit and stood breathless and motionless gazing at the preacher till the burst was over, the tears all the while rolling down his cheeks." Dr. Wardlaw describes one scene he witnessed as follows: "It was a transcendently grand—a glorious burst. The energy of the doctor's action corresponded. Intense emotion beamed from his countenance. I cannot describe the appearance of his face better than by saying, as Foster said of Hall's, it was 'lighted up almost into a flare.' The congregation, in so far as the spell under which I was allowed me to observe them, were intensely excited, leaning forward in the pews like a forest bending under the power of the hurricane, looking steadfastly at the preacher, and listening in breathless wonderment. One young man, apparently by his dress a sailor, who sat in a pew before me, started to his feet, and stood till it was over. So soon as it was concluded there was, as invariably was the case at the close of the doctor's bursts, a deep sigh." Look at Kentucky and Tennessee at the beginning of this century; and what wonderful phenomena occurred among Presbyterians, Methodists and Baptists! People gathered from ten to fifty miles to attend the meetings; thousands were converted; the most strange phenomena accompanied them; and out of those assemblies camp meeting have continued and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church was organized. See how Bishop Asbury and his co-adjutors in Methodism passed over the mountains and valleys, and what extensive revivals prevailed. Look at Moody and Sankey in our own days, and see what thousands attended their ministrations, and how many hearts have been touched.

The attainment of this ministerial power should be the object of the most intense desire. I do not suppose that all may be equally robed with it. It is an attribute of divine sovereignty to give it to whomsoever He will, and in what measure He will. But when I remember that through this Spirit alone good can be accomplished, that God calls men to the ministry for the purpose of saving souls, that He is glorified by their success, that He has promised to fill them with His Spirit, I cannot but think there is a rich manifestation of the Spirit ready for every minister, that he may be thoroughly prepared for his glorious office.

What, then, shall we do, that he may be the most eminently successful? First, there should be an entire consecration of every moment of the time and of every power of body and soul to the service of God. If we expect the divine Spirit to dwell in us, the heart should be made ready for His reception. Like the saints of old, we, as living sacrifices, should be without spot and blemish. "Know ye not?" saith the apostle, "that your bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost? If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His." That Spirit is to dwell with us, and abide in us. Every faculty, every power belongs wholly to God; and we, set apart for His service, have a grand and holy mission among men. Yet as Jesus took upon Him the form of a servant, and cared for the sorrows and miseries of the wretched, so while our mission elevates, it does not separate us from the masses of men about us. We are to mingle with them, to love them, to enlighten and to save them.

Secondly, there must not only be consecration, but earnest prayer. It is God's pleasure to be entreated. Prayer is necessary, not only that we may receive, but that we may be in a condition to receive. We must first feel deeply the need of the Holy Spirit, that we may ask it. Seeing the responsibility laid upon us, the magnitude of the work, and our own insufficiency, and that there is no power adequate but that of the Holy Spirit, we pray for it; we wait in earnest supplication as the disciples waited the ten days from the ascension to pentecost. So must we wait until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, but we must wait as they waited, in the fulfillment of duty among the people of God in the temple, worshiping, praising and blessing God. We must wait expectantly, we must wait assuredly, not for any miraculous power, nor for conscious endowment, but with a full conviction that God will so take possession of our memory, reason and imagination, of our strength and of our learning, that each and all of them, vitalized by His own power, shall be made to glow with such heat that they shall burn their way by the truth to the hearts and consciences of those who hear us.

Thirdly, to intense prayer must be added fasting. If I am asked how fasting can bring spiritual power, I cannot answer satisfactorily. I simply know that Jesus hath said: "This sort cometh not out but by prayer and fasting." He had given His disciples power against unclean spirits, yet here was one brought to them which they could not cast out. It reigned only in the more fiery because of their efforts, and when Jesus came the sorrowing father applied to Him. One word was still sent, and the unclean spirit fled. The bewildered disciples asked the Master why they could not cast him out, and received the answer I have quoted. This implies different degrees of spiritual power—power sufficient to reach some hearts, but not all. But who that loves his Master does not covet a power sufficient to rescue the vilest of the vile, and to bring the strongest offender to the foot of the cross. While I cannot tell how the fasting operates, I can see that it is both a sign of deep feeling, and that it adds to its intensity. Who has not felt a sorrow that made him for the time regardless of food? Who has not been so absorbed that he has not forgotten the hours, and passed beyond the time of his meals? With a dear one on the bed of death, how tasteless and valueless is food? So if there be an intensity of prayer that absorbs the soul, we become like Him who said: "I have meat to eat ye know not of;" and again: "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me."

Again, it adds to the intensity of purpose. The men who sought the life of Paul bound themselves with an oath that they would neither eat nor drink till they had slain him. This marks the intensity of their purpose. When David prayed for the life of his child he took no meat until they brought him news that the child was dead. He would have but one desire. He would do but one thing. So the minister is so anxious to receive spiritual power, so anxious to rescue souls from ruin, so anxious to build the church of Christ, that sometimes he has little relish for his food; and at other times, such is the cry of his soul, that he resolves to take no meat until his prayer prevails with God. This intense desire thus marked lifts the soul for holy action, for sublime purposes. Its whole power has become concentrated on one thing. Thus as the ball, when the rifle has been pointed steadily at the mark, strikes to its center, so the minister, having but one aim, his whole soul absorbed on one point, finds his words going directly to the hearts of his hearers. How wonderful the example of Christ! Pure and spotless, he needs no prayer for himself. He prayed for others, for us, for the world. He continued whole nights in prayer, while loving disciples yielded to sleep. He prayed for others, as they would not pray for themselves. He needed no fasting for Himself, yet see Him fasting forty days and forty nights in the wilderness. After it the angels came and ministered unto Him, and He came out of the wilderness to heal the sick and to raise the dead. All night in prayer He was transfigured, and Moses and Elias came down to earth to talk with Him in the presence of His disciples of the decease He should accomplish in Jerusalem. Moses, with Israel on the mountain, came down with a shining face—shining so brightly with unconscious power that the people could not gaze upon him until he was veiled. So the minister coming out of his closet, through his seasons of fasting and prayer, is gifted with words which pierce to the hearts of the people; and sometimes it seems as if his countenance shone like the face of Stephen, who, gazing up into heaven, was illumined by a ray from the throne.

This Spirit also brings before us the most solemn thoughts in reference to our congregations. Immortal souls come to listen for tidings of the Saviour. God has stirred them by His Holy Spirit, and sent them to hear. If they are saved it must be through our words, and upon the issue of the sermon the destiny of immortal souls may be sealed. Who could preach carelessly could he thus feel? Besides, it may be the last sermon which some one shall hear. Almost every sermon is the last that some one does hear. More persons die every week than there are pulpits in the land. Could we single out some person in the assembly who would never hear another sermon, how would we try to preach Jesus? Our eyes are sealed as to destiny, but that person is in the congregation, and we must draw the bow at a venture, trusting that the Divine arm and eye will give to the bow sufficient tension, and to the arrow the right direction. When I have heard, as I frequently have, of persons present in assemblies where I have preached, who have been called suddenly away by accidents or disease, I have never felt to regret that my sermon was not more beautiful or more polished, but I have regretted that it was not preached with more demonstration of the Spirit and of power. I cannot conceal my conviction that but for the negligence and indolence of those of us who occupy the sacred desk, it would be more universal and more powerful. It seems to be that the possibilities connected with preaching have been only partially realized, and that a brighter and more glorious day will dawn upon the church. If there is one thing above all others that I have desired for myself, and that above all other things I covet for you, it is this ministerial power, this baptism of fire. Seek for this more than for learning, for wisdom, for oratory; and, above all, more than for any thought of your acceptability or popularity. To preach one sermon like Livingstone's would be worth a life of service. I believe you all may have such power, that thousands shall be converted under your preaching. If the Bible be true, and if you are divinely called to the ministry, you are lifted out of the common circle of business and conflicts of life. God comes to dwell in you, and to use all your powers for Himself; your highest glory will be to appear as living, walking Christs among men, and you will feel with the apostle: "For me to live is Christ."

THE RIDDEN ONE.

Far up the rugged mountain side
Where all was barren, bleak and chill,
Rebellion had scarce died,
A hedonistic Angel's crew
And with their tiny lips all blue
Worshiped their Maker—God.

They spilled their perfume on the air,
And o'er as much of glory wear,
As though in garden grown.
The wild old mountain seems to smile
To see its rocky, desert guile
So beauty-lit its own.

The storm, a month was blown resistlessly by
That little flock you recently let lie
Those tiny mountain powers—
They heard the Angel's anger,
And when He sent storms all once more
Bust in its golden showers.

How much the storm for mountain side
To Christ's eternal God will hide,
Pilgrim of sin, think now!
He drinks its tears—heaven's love,
And yet bids thy prayers above,
Form stars made of snow.

Though pastures green by waters still
His weary steps may in or middle
Before the mighty pursued,
Faith ever makes His heart rejoice
And guided by the star shall come
He sings the pilgrim's road.

The tears of Christ must pass away,
Their open sins must vanish too,
Love's arms be held for me
In brighter than the stars above
Is the eternal love,
The infinite one's shine.

Letter from Texas.

MR. EDITOR: The circuit, Navasota and Millican, to which I have been assigned by Bishop Keener, is, I trust, an appointment sanctioned by God. Of one thing I am very sure: that there was no effort on my part to obtain any special appointment, being ignorant, so far as personal knowledge is concerned, of either the attractions or distractions existing in any of the works composing the Texas Conference. It is certainly an important work.

For the information of my friends, generally, I would say that the trip from Anite City was accomplished with comparative ease, in good health and safely. We had extremely cold weather from beginning to end; a very boisterous time on the gulf, so that some of our party lost their appetites, and became very humble, preferring the floor to any other place for the time being. Luxurious food and nice appointments generally lose all their charms in a spell of sea-sickness. We arrived here on the night of January 9, were kindly received, hospitably entertained, and suitable arrangements made for a home in which we are now living. The Lord has been kind to us in our preservation, and in turning the hearts of strangers to us in kindness and love.

A portion of the Price party went still further up the country, and are now established on a farm in Ellis county. Two other of our sons are engaged on a farm not far distant from this place. Thus the process of segregation has already commenced, but we are comforted by the knowledge that the localities selected are good in soil, society and healthfulness—matters of great importance. So greatly has the future interests of our children pressed upon our minds that we prayerfully concluded, at length, to bring them into this land of vast resources and advantages. I think the move is a good one for them, morally and financially. As for myself, it matters but little where I am. I am hearing the "better country," and feel joyful in the hope of "an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." From the depth of my soul I thank God for the prospect.

Navasota is a thriving town of three thousand inhabitants. We have here a good church edifice, a flourishing Sunday-school, but rather small membership. Millican is a much smaller town, with good church building, live Sunday-school, and large membership. Both of these towns are on the Central railroad, one hundred and twenty and one hundred and thirty miles from Galveston, and in the midst of a very fertile portion of the State, some of it [illegible] Farmers here. Corn and cotton are the principal staple products.

The people have held their prejudices in the dying, and voted a competent spirit, and the ladies of the church have performed some very kind deeds for our benefit, and organized a mission society for the building of a parsonage. The president of this society is Mrs. Susan Sledge, a daughter of Rev. Valentine Cook, of precious memory. Her whole mind and soul are devoted to the advancement of religion.

I have not met with any of the "Holy Band" as new set to which Bishop Keener alluded in one of his letters last fall. An evangelist of theirs visited this place before my arrival, and is now on a farm near by. I am told that he professes to enjoy entire holiness. He works awhile, and then spends the proceeds in evangelical work. Not having any personal knowledge of the character of their exposition of this great doctrine of the Bible, or their methods of Christian work, I am not prepared, from this standpoint to express an opinion. What I have read and heard about these bands of holiness would incline me to believe that they were described long ago in Second Peter ii, 17: "These are wells without water," etc.

I trust that I shall have leisure to write frequently on some topics that may interest and profit the readers of the ADVOCATE.

Fraternally,

THOMAS PRICE.

NAVASOTA, TEXAS, Jan. 27, 1879.

A Few Facts

MR. EDITOR: I wish to state a few facts relative to appointments, missionary appropriations and salaries of preachers, that I think are worthy of notice and consideration in ours or any other Conference. I am going to refer to, but two appointments which I fear represents many. Last year (1878) there was an appointment which paid the pastor a salary of $300 or more; the missionary appropriation for this charge was $275, making a salary of near or quite $580. When on another district there was an appointment which paid the pastor the small pittance of $134, with no missionary appropriation. Both ministers were unmarried, good preachers, and did faithful work. And, doubtless, more and harder work was required, and perhaps done, on the charge that paid the least salary.

Were the preachers to live like ministers ought to live, it would cost nearly or quite as much at one place as the other to support them decently. But, instead of this, one preacher lives plentifully, and the other one lives like a poor beggar, from house to house.

Is this right? "I trow not."

I would not have my readers to think that I am either of the pastors alluded to, for I can assure them that such is not the case. Both of these appointments are stations, with a little mission bracketed to the latter. The one paid a salary of over $300, with an appropriation of $275; and the other station paid $65, the mission paid $69, making $134, with no appropriation at all.

And this year (1879) the first station referred to proposes to pay $400, with an appropriation of $300, making a salary of $700. When the other station only promises to pay $100, with an appropriation of $50 for the little mission bracketed to it, making a salary of $150 for the labor of two men performed by one.

Is this right? "I trow not."

In this poorly-supported charge the duties of the pastor are more than quadruple. He conducts three prayer-meetings a week, holds class-meeting every week, superintends Sabbath-school every Sunday, does his pastoral work well on foot at that, lectures every Tuesday night, preaches eleven sermons a month at the station, and five sermons in the week on the mission, making sixteen sermons every month.

This is no guess work nor hearsay, because I know whereof I speak.

In my opinion the very idea of making a self-supporting station out of a church that has not paid but $65 in a year, and does not promise to pay but $100, is ridiculous and absurd. I emphasize the word "promise," because many of our most faithful ministers have realized the meaning of the word to its fullest extent. Each of the two charges referred to have new pastors this year, and I pray for their prosperity; but I say now, in the fear of God, that if matters are not altered, the pastor of the last mentioned charge must always suffer. The reason why this appointment pays no more is because it cannot—a good reason. The membership is small, and most of the members are poor women and children who would pay, but they cannot.

I trust that the presiding elders and Missionary Board of our Conference will remember this, and endeavor to remedy the inequality of the support of our faithful and self-sacrificing preachers. And may God help his poor young disciple in this lonely, far-off clime, to be faithful in the full discharge of his whole duty.

Yours, J. B. ANDERSON.

Spiritism.

The prevalence of this wretched sorcery, and the commonness of these sacrilegious rites in Christian countries and even among Christian people, is truly deplorable. It cannot be said to be a new discovery, for it is old; it is not a trick or legerdemain, for it is real; but its nature is evil, and its source diabolical.

Some have supposed that it is an advantage to mankind, in that it confirms one of the cardinal doctrines of Christianity—the immortality of the soul. But any advantage of this sort is more than neutralized by its direct tendency to worldliness, and its utter destruction of true holiness, and of heartfelt piety. In all my intercourse with spiritists, I have never known a real, true, spiritual person.

It was the filling up of the iniquitous cup of King Saul that he sought an answer from the dead. This sort of impiety was punishable by death (the highest penalty) under the Mosaic law; and in the new dispensation it was attributed to evil spirits.—Acts xvi, 17, and Deuteronomy xviii, 10.

There is no doubt, as the historian Rollin declares, as also Josephus, that the ancient oracles, particularly those of Delphi, were through the direct agency of evil spirits; and history informs us of similar responses from departed spirits in various other portions of the earth in different periods of time.

St. Augustine, in his confessions, speaks of it as being practiced in his day, and rejoices that he never "sought answers from spirits," calling it a "sacrilegious compact," which his soul abhorred. And in Book x, chapter 42, he says: "Many desiring to return unto Thee, and not being able of themselves, have, as I hear, attempted such ways, and fallen into the desire of curious visions, and so have deserved to be imposed upon by delusions. For they sought Thee, being puffed up with the pride of their knowledge, and exalting, rather than heating, their breasts; and they drew to themselves, by the likeness of their dispositions, the powers of the air consenting with them, and associated with them in their pride, by whom they might be deceived by magical operations, while they were pretending to seek a mediator, by whom they might be purged, but it was the devil transforming himself into an angel of light." And it was a great allurement of proud flesh that they had lighted upon a spirit who had no body of flesh."

Is it not deplorable that evil or deluded men have taken up the rites of an impious sacrilege which the Fox girls introduced as a money-making scheme, to found a pretended church upon! Yet such, I am informed, is the fact. May it not be properly denominated "the synagogue of Satan."

GEORGE T. VICKERS.

The New Preacher.

The new preacher, our new preacher, has come and gone, and the question: "How do you like him?" has gone the rounds, and the answer in almost every instance has been: "We like him very much." To "the church that is in our house," in our neighborhood, in our circuit, this is the event of the year. One question answered, another looms up, which is this:

"Watchman, tell us of the night,
What its signs of promise are.
Traveller, o'er yon mountain's height,
See that glory-beaming star."

Perhaps it is rather early to venture such an emphatic answer to the question, but our preacher says he "thinks we will have a good year." With the sure ken of faith he sees the "glory-beaming star," "because," said he, "there is one prayer-meeting on the circuit." From this one grain of mustard seed he builds his ladder of faith, and hopes, before the year closes, to see spring from that little seed a tree of large dimensions. May God grant that this:

"Night may change to glad tradition,
Faith to sight and prayer to praise."

But I must confess that this one little prayer-meeting had a hard struggle to live last year. Sometimes it was too cold or too hot, too wet, too dry, or too far off to go, and sometimes the members themselves were like the church at Laodicea, "neither cold nor hot," and that was the worst excuse of all for lukewarm Christians. Like the last straw that breaks the camel's back, this will kill a prayer-meeting quicker than anything else. But, thank God, the little prayer-meeting still lives, and the prayers of the faithful few, that the "Lord would behold and visit this little vineyard that He had planted, and send us a husbandman that would look after and take an interest in the laborers," has been answered in part. For our new preacher on his first round has, to the hoary-headed grandsire, to the little children, to members, to backsliders and outsiders, spoken of the blessed Master that sent him to preach the gospel to every creature.

He has gone "from house to house," and "visited the widow and the fatherless." In most of them he found the welcome that greets those "who bring glad tidings," and, if he met with rebuffs at some, he knew that he was only helping Simon a little with the weary load up Calvary's hill, from the summit of which the crowns of the faithful are in full view.

And so we, too, think we may say, with the poet, that we, also, "see the glory-beaming star," because our preacher's theme in the pulpit and out of the pulpit is all of Jesus. Could he choose a better theme? Ah, no! for this is the "Sweetest note in seraph song,

Sweetest name on mortal tongue,
Sweetest carol ever sung,
Jesus, blessed Jesus!"

The personal questions our preacher puts to every one has stirred up the Laodiceans even; and, although he may have found "ninety and nine" sheep in the flock, there is more than one "out on the hills away." But we will hope and pray that the Shepherd may be able to say, before the year is over: "Rejoice with me that the sheep are found," and that he may leave his flock safely housed in the fold militant for a little while, to meet again when work is done in the blessed fold triumphant.

PATIENCE.

To Our Brother Rev. F. M. Featherston.

Eight of your family have left you—God called them. You have proven to the disconsolate that Christ is your consolation. Your beloved eight are with Jesus. You will meet them in the "home of the soul." I have visited several of my charge who are in great affliction. I tell them of you, of your Saviour, and of your hope.

We will fear no evil. "Lo! I am with you alway," is yours—it is mine. It is our inheritance.

To our loved ones we say farewell,
We say it Lord forever.
Since He doeth all things well,
We know that—oh, never!

I. W. COOPER.

OCEAN SPRINGS, MISS.

SABBATH REST.—It is a well established fact that more real work is performed by those who labor only six days than by those who devote all the seven to unremitting toil. It has been proved in the case of the over-wrought statesman and professional man, as well as in that of the 'bus-driver, who works for sixteen hours a day from one week's end to the other. In this occupation few pass the age of fifty years. The celebrated Mr. William Wilberforce, so well acquainted with all the great statesmen at the beginning of this century—with Pitt, Fox, and other giants of those days—has recorded that "he could name several of his contemporaries in the vortex of political cares whose minds have entirely given way under the stress of intellectual labor so as to bring on premature death." Sir David Wilkie's experience was that "the artists who wrought on Sunday were soon disqualified from working at all," adding that "he never knew a man to work seven days in the week who did not kill himself or his mind." Lord Chancellor Bacon, Sir Matthew Hale, and Sir William Blackstone among our judges contribute the same testimony, and give their experience of the mental injury caused by the practice. The latter says "that a corruption of morals usually follows a profanation of the Sabbath." While the great Roman Catholic, Montalembert, writes, "Il n'y a pas de religion sans culte, et il n'y a pas de culte sans Dimanche."—Social Notes.

"HAVING NOTHING."—"Blessed are the poor in spirit." So, then, the more we misgive ourselves, and the less we trust in ourselves, and the more we accuse ourselves, and the less we think of our attainments, whether without Christ or with Him, the nearer we are to heaven. The simple, child like, self-renouncing, self abhorring is commonly, in its fulness, the very last of God's gifts, of the Holy Spirit's graces, in the Christian. In early life, in strong manhood, alas! too often to a late old age, there is still a lurking hope that at least we are something, or we are just going to be something, in and of ourselves. Sin itself is often deplored as a humiliation rather than as unbelief. It has disappointed us about ourselves, even more than it has grieved us as being an ingratitude to Christ, or an affront and an ingletty toward God. The entire willingness to be nothing, and to receive everything; nay, not even to receive, as though, when given, the grace would be ours; but rather to have nothing, to be nothing, still; to be only in Christ, only a creature covered up and hidden and lost in Him; that is a blessedness against which a hopeful person has kicked inwardly almost to the last. He will ask his Father for the portion of goods which falleth to him, rather than stay within that Father's sight, just sustained, just lodged, just fed, day by day, but, of his own and for his own, having and willing to have nothing.—C. J. Vaughan, D. D.

NEAR VIEWS OF GOD.—Humility and repentance are the result of large acquaintance with God. Job said: "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee." It expresses two kinds of knowledge—the one speculative, the other practical. He had formerly a distant and vague acquaintance with God, without contemplating Him by that faith which seeth Him who is invisible. He now had an intimate, a deep and practical sense of God, very different from the mere vague conceptions he had when he only heard of Him; that knowledge which is practical, deep, intimate and profound. The two effects were humility and repentance. Humility is produced by the sight of His greatness, repentance by a knowledge of His purity. It is the union of these that forms the idea of God.—Robert Hall.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS. VIRGINIA G. MILLS.—The Church has been called upon to mourn the death of many of her truest, faithful sons and daughters during the late wasting pestilence. Young and old, brave and fair, were like leaves this Among the number was a mother in our Methodist Israel, who for years was identified with the struggles and conquests of the gospel in these parts and whose memory is as precious as her life was useful, and its closing sweetly peaceful.

Mrs. Virginia G. Mills was born in Virginia, January 2, 1807, and died at Smith's Station, Hinds county, Mississippi, September 8, 1878. When about twelve years of age her young heart was touched by the spirit of God, and soon thereafter she became a member of the Methodist Church. Her religious character rapidly developed, which was ever positive and outspoken, and her experience singularly clear and comforting. The doctrine of assurance found in her an earnest advocate and convincing illustration. As a Christian worker she was active and aggressive. Prayer was her vital breath and "vantage ar." Her place was rarely vacant in the class and prayer meetings, where her voice was heard in testimony, song and supplication. She was ever ready to give a reason for the hope that was in her, having an open door and hospitable home, it was a coveted resting place of the travel-worn preachers of early Methodism. For the young itinerants, entering upon their great life-work, mind discouragements, and always craving sympathy, she had an encouraging word, and gave them much godly counsel.

She was a lady of high literary culture and extensive reading. She was specially, if not exceedingly, well informed in the history, poetry and literature of the church; this lifted her for eminent usefulness.

With the advance of years her Christian experience deepened and brightened under the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit. She was ever going on to perfection, and while nearing the close of sixty years' service in the church, almost continually sat "in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."

She was twice married: first to Robert Elliott and then to the late Judge Wm. Mills a few days before her death she had to give up to the grave her youngest son, in the prime of vigorous manhood. But without a murmur, she exclaimed: "The blow is heavy, but, O, God! I will trust Thee though Thou slay me." In a few days she was stricken down with the fever and passed peacefully to the Christian's home in glory. God be praised for such a life and Christian character. It is a precious and inspiring heritage to the church.

CHAS. R. GALLOWAY.

MRS. MARY C. BAIRD, daughter of John and Elizabeth Allen, was born in Winnsboro, Fairfield district, S. C., April 12, 1824, and died at her residence near El Dorado, Ark., on Thursday morning, January 16, 1879. About four years ago God called our dear mother home. One month later we buried a brother, who claimed our deepest and warmest love. Since that time two darling sisters have been taken from us. With these losses we imagined that our cup of grief was full. But God knows best how much it can contain. Our dear, good mother is now gone to join the loved ones, whose absence from earth made her life so sad and lonely here below. We do not know how to write an obituary notice of the darling mother, who has labored to gladly our every wish from our earliest infancy to the present time. We can only record the fact of her departure for the information of her many relatives and friends, in this and States, who with us will long mourn the loss of one so amiable, so pure and so good. She has been a consistent member of the Methodist Church ever since any of her children can remember. She leaves behind her four sons, three daughters, a number of grandchildren, one brother, and a large circle of relatives and friends, all of whom will join us in bearing testimony to the fact that through all the vicissitudes of life she was as good as she could be. Dear mother, we cannot write more about thy beautiful and exemplary life, which, in the eyes of thy children, has ever been so gloriously perfect and pure. Then and God above dost understand the undying love for our hearts gave to thee. God help us to bear thy loss, and follow the footsteps of thy devoted Christian career, until Heaven's portals shall open for us to be received again into thy loving arms.

S. B. H.

ZOE CARTER died at the residence of her parents, in Iberville parish, La., a week ago, of that dread disease, spinal meningitis.

I am not the one, nor is it my purpose to write an obituary of this lively girl, but I wish simply to pay my tribute to the memory of one whose sweet and gentle manners and liveliness of disposition won for her so many friends during her stay in Greensburg last year. She was here as a pupil of Newville Collegiate Institute, and during a member of my Sunday-school class, in the Methodist Church, the first Sunday, I think, after her arrival. I remember so well the pleasing impression left upon my mind by her bright, happy face. After that first Sunday she was always promptly in her place with lesson well prepared, and with a smile and often an affectionate caress for her teacher. My relation to her as Sunday-school teacher continued till the close of the session, when she returned to her home in the full flush of radiant health, but doomed, alas! to be the victim of a painful disease, and to fill an early grave, I am a stranger to her parents, but I trust they will pardon the impulse which prompted me to pay my tribute to one of the loveliest characters I have met. Her schoolmates will also permit me to indulge the hope that they will strive to imitate the beauty of heart and life which made her so lovely.

To the sorrowing parents I would scarcely dare offer a word of consolation, for it seems almost sacrilege for a stranger to "intermeddle" with such grief as theirs must be. But I will simply say that I am a mother, and "I have felt the same." I too have "lambs in the upper fold." "Christ, the Good Shepherd, carries them, and that is best."

MARY J. PARKER.

MISS MYRA HEATH died, December 12 1878, at the home of her parents, near Beauregard, Miss., in the sixteenth year of her age. In the prime of youth, beauty and happiness.

Myra was converted several years ago at a Crystal Springs camp meeting and has continued to be a faithful, consistent Christian. Well does her teacher remember the earnest attention she ever gave to advice and instruction, and how her eye kindled with emotion, how the sympathetic tear welled up, whenever allusion was made to our Saviour's suffering, and his love for us. Mother, father, sisters, "Aunt Mat," rejoice that your darling is with the redeemed!

The following resolutions were adopted by the Beauregard Sabbath-school, on Sunday, January 19, 1879:

WHEREAS, Our heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom and goodness, has seen best to remove from our midst our lovely sister, Miss Myra Heath; therefore be it

Resolved, 1st. That while we bow in sorrow in submission under His afflicting stroke, we are grateful as a Sabbath-school, and especially are the members of her class grateful for the pleasure we have had in her society, and for the example which she ever set us of a faithful, cheerful student.

2d. That we will endeavor to emulate her many virtues, and to meet her "On that bright and shining shore."

3d. That we deeply sympathize with her bereaved parents and sisters in their irreparable loss, and pray our Divine Master to sustain them by His grace.

MRS. DAISY F. CHRISMAN,
For Committee.

EDWIN O LUM died, at Rocky Springs, Miss., October 21, 1878, in the fifty-fourth year of his age. He was a son of Erastus and S. A. Lum, and was a member of the church from his youth. For many years, in the latter part of his life, he was a subject of great afflictions in body and in mind, and he sometimes indicated that this life was but little enjoyment to him, and that he would willingly exchange it for the life to come. Finally the yellow fever preyed upon the tenement of clay, and the soul returned to God who gave it. He had not waited till the last days of his life to prepare for death, and if he had he was not in a proper state of mind to attend to it in a dying hour. His wife was away from home with a daughter during his sickness, but her brother, Mr. George Farrer, ministered to her husband, as occupying her position. Another daughter's son followed the father in death. His place is vacant in the family and in the church, and his absence brings sadness to loving hearts; but there is comfort in the thought that he is "present with the Lord."

J. W. SANDELL.

FOR as much as it hath pleased Almighty God, in his wise providence, to take out of this world the soul of our deceased father in Israel, Rev. John B. Hudson, so long and favorably known among us as a Christian man and earnest lover of Wesleyan Methodism; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Quarterly Conference of East Feliciana circuit, Woodville district, Mississippi Conference, that we bow with Christian submission to the will of God, knowing that He is too wise to err and too good to be unkind, and doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the sufficiency of that grace that enabled our father in Israel to preserve so long his Christian character and to die in such glorious triumph.

Resolved, That this memorial be spread upon a separate page in the Recording Steward's Journal.

JAMES A. GUMBREY, P. E.

WILLIE, eldest son of T. F. and Julia Abney, died, of putrid sore throat, near Montrose, Copper county, Miss., November 5, 1878. Willie was a bright little boy of ten summers, and the most intelligent child I ever knew. He had but few equals, and I dare say no superiors. He was so kind and obedient ever, and the pride of the household. He was a regular attendant at Sabbath-school and preaching and, indeed, I might say, Willie was a Christian child, beloved by all who knew him. During his illness of fourteen days, though he suffered greatly, he was never heard to murmur or utter a complaint, but bore his afflictions with manly fortitude.

N. M. CLARK.

OUR darling little LOTTIE was born November 7, 1877, and died, December 18, 1878. She was thirteen months and eleven days old. She was the daughter of John and Anna Smith. She has gone to meet her two little brothers and two little sisters in heaven, who went before her. Oh, how inviting to those parents is the prospect of meeting their angel children in the spirit land; our only comfort in giving up our precious jewels is that they have gone to be with the angels in the bosom of the loving Saviour.

HER AUNTIE.

If, as is well known, there be a million Herods on the earth at this hour, is he or she a true parent who permits anything to prevent him or her from keeping watch for the slayers by night and day?

Hunting is a relic of the barbarious spirit that thirsted formerly for human blood, but is now content with the blood of inferior animals.

MAKE CHILDHOOD SWEET.

BY LOUISE S. PEDAM.

Wait not till the little hands are at rest
Ere you fill their full of flowers;
Wait not for the crowning tiberose
To make sweet the hurried hours;
But, while in the busy household hand,
Your darlings still need your guiding hand,
O, fill their lives with sweetness.

Wait not till the little hearts are still,
For the loving look and phrase;
But while you go daily hand in hand,
The good deed gladly praise;
The word you would speak beside the bier,
Falls sweeter far on the living ear;
O, fill young lives with sweetness!

Ah! what are kisses on clay-cold lips
To the rosy mouth we press
When our wee ones flies to her mother's arms,
For love's fondest caress!
Let never a worldly babble keep
Your heart from the joy each day should reap,
Circling young lives with sweetness.

Give thanks each morn for the sturdy boys
Give thanks for the rosy girls;
Will not over a wealth like this at home,
Wealth richer than pearls
Wait not [illegible]
But daily answer [illegible]
And fill young hearts with sweetness.

Life Abroad.

BY REV. WILLIAM DRAPER

FRANCE.

The way seems rapidly preparing for the spread of the gospel through out France. There is a period of calmness in the political world that has not been known for many years. The condition of the people is remarkably prosperous. Religiously needs and tendencies are upstirring everywhere, which give hope for the future. Religious meetings are no longer limited to a select number, but awaken interest among the masses. Even Romanism languishes and decays. Nowhere is not in the entire country a single important center, where popular lectures on the gospel will not attract numerous hearers, and meet with deep sympathy. Appeals are made, in addition to Bible and tract distribution for open-air preaching. The encouraging work during the winter with the exhibition will occasion a more energetic evangelization all over France. Christian conferences and evangelistic meetings are held in many localities, and in several instances the theater has been opened for Protestant services. Much inspiration and aid in this direction come from Switzerland. The purpose on the part of the Genevese Society, to send a New Testament to every school-master in France, has now reached twenty-seven thousand out of the eighty thousand, and the work is being pushed on.

HOLLAND.

The religious conflict deepens in this land. A school law has recently been adopted by the States General (Parliament) threatening the existence of the Christian schools, and giving fatal strength to the public schools, which, admitting Catholics and Jews, prohibits the Bible and the mention of the name of Jesus. A deputation from all the provinces of the kingdom, and from many of its Protestant churches, presented to the King a petition signed by more than 300,000 inhabitants, with a request not to sanction the law. The public mind is thoroughly aroused, and the phlegmatic Dutchman has exhibited enthusiasm.

A circular has just been issued by the Netherlands Missionary Society, whose labors have been so successfully carried on in the Dutch settlements of Java, Sumatra, Borneo, the Celebes, and other isles of the Indian Ocean. One of the most flourishing mission fields of the world is in the northern peninsula of the Celebes. Of a population of 114,000 upward of 50,000 are converted to the Christian faith, or as children form parts of Christian families. There are 193 congregations and 125 schools, and 2,000 members are added yearly. The society has four stations with five missionaries and twenty assistants on the isle of Java, a single station containing 2,000 Christians and a school of 400 children. Christians of Holland are much alive to missionary work, and are pushing it with persistent vigor.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

A recent statement gives an interesting account of this British organization. The society was formed in 1834 and now comprises a very wide sphere of work, including almost the whole Eastern hemisphere. It has sent out about 200 European teachers, and there are at present also employed 300 native teachers. Three hundred and seventy schools are in connection with the society, and others are helped by it. Its operations extend over India, China, the Malay peninsula, the Mauritius, south and west Africa, and the Levant.

The mission in Cairo, Egypt, commenced seventeen years ago, has three hundred boys and two hundred girls in its day-schools, with religious instruction, women's meetings, and general evangelistic services. Both Moslem and Copt, young and old, are reached, and the work is spreading to other localities.

DAMASCUS.

Four schools, three Bible women and one Scripture-reader are employed in this ancient but declining city. One of these school is appropriately called after St. Paul, and numbers 230 girls, Greeks (in religion) and Jews. Another school is exclusively for Mohammedan girls. There are also night schools for both sexes, Sunday-schools, cottage-meetings, house-to-house Bible-readings, and other evangelistic services. Openings are numerous, and the need pressing. Moslems, Druzes, Christians and Kurds, in the city and neighboring villages, are thirsting for the water of life.

THE BIBLE AND PRAYER UNION.

This organization dates back to January, 1876. The purpose is for the members to read the Bible consecutively, one chapter daily, with mutual prayer for each other. It becomes oftentimes a center for religious effort, as others are invited to the reading. The 50 members have increased to 53,000. Unions have been formed in almost every country of the globe, using various languages, in the Armenian, Greek, Nestorian and Roman Churches, as well as in the Protestant. Each person wishing to join sends a penny stamp for card of membership, which contains a calendar of the chapters for the year. "Monthly Notes" are issued, containing suggestions and helps on the portion being read. Conversions, religious quickening, Christian fellowship, have all been promoted by this simple agency. It draws the people to the word of God—the only bond of union. It is missionary in its aim and cosmopolitan in its aim and effort. Applications for membership should be addressed to Rev. Thomas Richardson, Mill End road, London, England, with postage for card enclosed.—Zion's Herald.

Religion of the Old Egyptians.

The honor due to parents sprang naturally from the belief in God as "our Father which art in heaven." We constantly find inscriptions on the tombs such as the following: "I honored my father and my mother. I obeying brothers. I taught little children. I took care of orphans as though they had been my own children." In letters of excellent advice, addressed by an old man of 110 years of age to a young friend—which form the most ancient book in the world, dating 3000 B. C.—we says: "The good reign of a doctrine is a blessing. God loves obedience. Disobedience is hated by God." The obedience of a son maketh glad the heart of his father. . . . A son teachable in God's service will be happy in consequence of his obedience, he will grow to be old, he will find favor." This is the earliest appearance of the "first commandment with promise." Diodorus says the Egyptians were the first to find and train which was the "science of Hermetism." The moral code of the Egyptians was exceedingly elaborate. It consisted of forty-two commandments or heads, under which all should be dressed. For conduct was to ideal placed before men on earth—it was the standard of perfection according to which they would be judged in heaven. Some of them are of local interest only, but most belong to the eternal laws of right and wrong written on the tables of the heart. Men were taught from childhood, as children are nowadays taught their catechism, that they must appear in the presence of the Divine Judge, and say, "I have not privily injured any of my neighbors. I have not killed any, nor caused any to weep. I have told no lies. I have not done any wicked thing. I have not done what is hateful to the gods. I have not calumniated the slave to his master. I have not been idle. I have not stolen. I have not committed adultery. I have not committed murder." Anderson. But their commandments were positive as well as negative. On the tombs we find the common formula: "I have given bread to the hungry, water to the thirsty, clothes to the naked, shelter to the stranger." In the lamentations at funerals the mourners see the deceased entering the presence of the Divine Judge, and they chant the words: "There is no fault in him. No accuser riseth up against him. In the truth he liveth, with the truth he nourisheth himself. The gods are satisfied with all that he hath done. . . . He succored the afflicted, he gave bread to the hungry, drink to the thirsty, clothes to the naked, he sheltered the outcast, his doors were open to the stranger, he was a father to the fatherless." This was the principle of the final judgment announced by the Son of Man, to whom "all judgment is committed," some 1,000 years afterward, among the hills of Palestine. This tenderness for suffering humanity is characteristic of the nation. Gratefully does a man acknowledge in his autobiography (1000 B. C.): "Wandering I was fettered and was hungry, bread was set before me; I fled from the land naked, there was given me fine linen." It is a glory to a man that "the poor shall make their moan at the door of his tomb." An inscription on a tomb at Beni Hassan written about 2,500 B. C. reads: "I have not oppressed any widow. No prisoner languished in my days. No one died of hunger. When there were years of famine I had my fields plowed. I gave food to the inhabitants, so that there was no hungry person. I gave the widow equal portions with the married. I did not prefer the rich to the poor." On a wall of the Temple of Kachak there is sculptured the earliest known extraditionary treaty. It is between Rameses the Second and a Khetan prince. The last clause provides that political fugitives are to be sent back, with the following humane provision for their personal safety: "Whoever shall be delivered up, himself, his wives, his children, let him not be slaughtered to the death; moreover, let him not suffer in the eyes, in the mouth, in the feet; moreover, let not any crime be set up against him." This treaty was engraven for the Khetan prince on a silver tablet. In a volume of maxims we read: "Make not an enemy, let your wife find in you her protector; marry her not. Save not thine own life at the cost of another?" On the tomb of a man at El Kab (1000 B. C.) it is recorded that he "never let home with anger in his heart."—Fortnightly Review.

Handwriting of Authors.

Joaquin Miller is one of the few who write so it is almost impossible to read his manuscript. J. R. Lowell writes a lady-like, running hand, all very plain, until it comes to the signature; there the J looks as much like a D as anything else. The letter of his I have is a charming one. It is in answer to one from a friend who has thanked him for some literary work given gratuitously: "I hope you will say no more about anything I may send you," he writes. "The pleasantest thing in the world is to throw one's self away, and the next to that is to give one's self away to one's friends." Here is a specimen of Tom Hughes' penmanship. It is a jolly letter to a friend, who gave it to me. "Aren't you a rum old cove?" it begins, in the neatest of English hands. There are four closely-written pages, and there is no falling off from the first word to the last. J. Anthony Froude writes a distinct, though fine, hand, with the words very far apart. "Yours in haste, just going to hear Eechter, Kate Field," written in a square, bold hand, very characteristic and recognizable under any circumstances. I don't think that any one could form a proper idea of Julia Ward Howe from her handwriting. It looks as though the pen barely touched the paper, and bears the marks of haste. It is said hard to decipher, however, after the Howe in the signature, that differ as well as anything else. Nasby I come to the worst writing I ever saw." It is a page of the manuscript of one of Mrs. Oliphant's stories. If she had written with the point of a hair the strokes of her pen could not be any finer. I remember when this manuscript was first received in New York, some six years ago, the printers refused to set it up. They declared that they could not read it; so a friend and I set to work to rewrite the whole story. He being good at deciphering and writing, read aloud, and I wrote down his words. You would not wonder that the compositors rebelled if you could see the manuscript covering a large sheet of blue paper, and running diagonally across the page. George MacDonald writes a large, open hand, with bold, black strokes, and an unmistakable signature. Robert Buchanan writes nearly as well, but hardly so heavy. And though he was [illegible] and like it altogether. The little fifty [illegible] Walter Wood writes the most remarkable hand of any author I ever saw. The letters look like [illegible] The directions on an envelope [illegible] plain, as if you begin them with the intention of being understood, you are bound to succeed. I have a letter of his now in my possession [illegible] other but the real [illegible] pens [illegible] pressure. [illegible] pressure. They should write [illegible] distinctly, for the reason that there is no time to reverse their proof. I believe that there is a specimen of Governor Boss' writing in almost every printing office in the country preserved as a curiosity.—Brattleboro, in Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

Dr. E. Worthington desires us to remind F. F. that John Wesley anticipated Elihu Burritt nearly a hundred years in criticising the use of emotions, expressions in hymns. In his sermon on "Knowing Christ after the Flesh," he takes Dr. Watts to task for this flagrant offense against good taste and pure religion. "A person of deep piety" called Wesley's attention to the fact that some of Watts' hymns, in the Horæ Lyricæ, dedicated to divine love were, as the phrased it, too amorous; little to be addressed by a lover to his fellow-mortal than by a sinner to the most high God." Other writers, Wesley thinks, "speak in the same ungnarded manner." He objects to the use of the word "dear," and says he has endeavored, in all hymns addressed to our blessed Lord, to avoid every fondling expression." His brother allowed such jet phrases, but the founder of Methodism thinks it is "using too much familiarity with the great Lord of heaven and earth."

It was this gross, indecent familiarity with the Divine, doubtless that led the elder D'Israeli, in his Curiosities of Literature, to characterize the hymns of the Countess as "scandalous compositions, full of affinity obscenity and blasphemy."

Wesley's remarks would have rebuked the leading pulpit lights of the children's Sunday-day taught such contemptible cant as

"Come in the arms of Jesus
Sing of all gentle hearts" and a world more of the same flashly fancy jumpy stuff. As for the beloved disciple leaning on Jesus' bosom at the last supper, it is doubtful if anything more is meant by the allusion than that he occupied the post of honor next to Jesus, as they reclined, according to oriental custom, each man in his fellow-feaster's bosom; that is, toward the bosom of his next neighbor, as they ate.—Methodist.

Mr. George Muller has issued the thirty-ninth report of the work at his Orphanages at Ashley Down, Bristol. He says: "Since the founding of the institution we have received, simply through prayer and the exercise of faith, above £78,[illegible] 6[illegible] children, of growth up persons, have been taught in the various schools, entirely supported by the funds in the institution, besides the tens of thousands who have been benefitted in the schools which are assisted by its funds. Religious Intelligence.

—The United Free Gospel or Independent Methodist Churches of Great Britain have held their seventy-third annual assembly in Glasgow. Fifty representatives were in attendance, chiefly from Lancashire and Yorkshire. Rev. A. Donovan, of Glasgow, who is eighty years old, was chosen President. The Union rests on an evangelical basis for its doctrinal system, is Methodistic in form and worship, and holds to the independency of each church in the transactions of its local affairs. It was reported that the principal and boundaries of the Union are being extended.

FRANCE.—The Paris Exhibition is to be made a means of moral as well as intellectual improvement. The "Christian Evidence Society" of London have made arrangements for a course of lectures on religious topics in one of the Exhibition buildings, the Salle Evangelique, a room which is devoted to Protestant religious meetings. There are to be both French and English lectures in the course. The "Bible Against Modern Objections" and "Bible Miracles" are continually given. Our Young People.

A NEW PHILOSOPHY, OR STAR SHOWERS EXPLAINED.

BY PAUL H. HAYNE.

One luminous night in winter,
All crystal clear and still,
A band of wondering children
Were grouped by the window sill.

The window looked out northward,
Where through the tranquil hours
The skies kept falling, falling,
In a ceaseless shine of showers.

Ah! beautiful, white these children,
As they gazed on the magic skies,
With their rosy hands uplifted,
And their large, bright, marveling eyes.

"What [illegible] asked [illegible] Alfred,
Of his elder brother, Cyril,
"Do you think it is coming nearer?
If it comes, can it fall on us?"

"No, stupid!" the boy determined,
But somehow was touched by doubt,
And we spoke a shade more gravely,
Almost [illegible]

For, indeed, the [illegible] darkness
Now [illegible] grander height,
And [illegible]

An Answer.

To Bible Puzzle which appeared in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, January 23, 1879:

Once upon a time there lived a little girl whose name was Naomi. This sweet name means beautiful, graceful.

Naomi was born on the second month, on the seventeenth day.

On the morning of her twelfth birthday she awoke to find that loving hearts had devised means for her pleasure while she was wrapt in refreshing slumber, and testified their affection in the following manner:

Her father presented her with a diverce, and probably her pretty name was forgotten ever [illegible]

Her mother, like all [illegible] mothers, and willing to gratify the whim of the tiny maiden, gave her a gold ring.

Her aunt, who lived in the city of Lucknow, and who wished her present to be [illegible] book which, if carefully read, would improve her mind. Her brother sent her a knife that she might have a gentle pet to play with. This present was suggestive of purity and innocence.

The little girl was made very happy with her numerous gifts, but, like the majority of the human family, was not satisfied. She wanted more, and the wish arose in her heart that some one had added a pair of bracelets or earrings. This [illegible] must have been just a little tinctured with vanity; or was it only a womanly weakness, fond of adorning the person?

While gazing with childish delight on her many presents, she was startled by a knock at the door, and her surprise was no greater than her pleasure, when two little friends, Hannah and Mary, were announced. They too brought her a present, which was a beautiful basket filled with delicious grapes. After regaling themselves with the luscious fruit, they grew tired of the house and went out in the street to play. This being rather a public place, and not at all desirable for their sport, they went in the garden and rested under the shade of a fig tree. For a short time they remained under the grateful shade, and, feeling thirsty, returned to the house, where they found a bountiful feast spread by loving hands.

For the first course they had breads, meats, and other wholesome food, and for desert they had milk, honey, dried figs, raisins and wine. It is reasonable to suppose that if they consumed a great deal of the sumptuous fare, they were not in a condition to indulge in further sport that day.

So Hannah and Mary thanked their kind friends for the pleasant day they had spent, and, bidding them all good night, returned to their homes.

Naomi, like all good girls should do, kneeled by her mother's knee and said her evening prayer; kissed both parents good-night, and was soon wandering in dreamlands. May you experience many happy returns of the pleasant season, Naomi, is the sincere wish of

A FRIEND TO CHRISTIAN CHILDREN.

CANTON, MISS., Jan. 31, 1879.

The Moon, From a Frog's Point of View.

BY ELETA FORRESTER.

Miss Frog sat, in the cool of the evening, under a plantain leaf, by the side of her lily and placid lake. The day had been excessively warm, and so, as she sat, she gracefully waved, backward and forward, one of her delicate web feet.

It was a beautiful, natural fan, and served admirably the purpose intended.

Aramni Miss Frog arose the varied warble of other frogs. The little polliwogs had all been put to bed, and now, ranine stealing on the season for silent thoughts. Always anxious to improve her mind, Miss Frog gazed about her to find a subject on which to fasten her attention.

She had been once sent to a southern lake to finish her education, and was really quite superior to ordinary frogs.

"There is no one here, in this mud-hole, to appreciate me," she regretfully sighed, as two silly frogs passed her leaf, flirting so hard that neither of them observed her.

She drew around her her shawl of lace—made from the finest cobwebs of Florida—and sulked.

Just then arose the moon, taking its solitary silvery way across the sky.

Her attention was arrested at once.

"How like a polliwog it is!" she ejaculated, "save that it lacks a tail."

"And a ghostly polliwog it is, daughter of the water!" croaked a sudden hoarse voice beside her.

She hopped with fright, and gasped as if about to faint; but calmed herself again as she recognized the tones of the rough-skinned Sage of the Frogs, who dwells alone in some remote corner of the lake. He it is who always sings "Kerdunk," when he condescends to sing at all.

This learned hermit, after clearing his throat repeatedly, thus expounded himself:

"There is a legend, connected with our race, that runs in this wise:

"Ahem!"

Upon a time, in a certain valley, where once flowed a considerable stream, the waters suddenly failed and the stream dried away.

Upon the unfortunate frogs who dwelt therein, was showered numbers, the mid-summer shone its fiercest rays unhindered.

"Dreadful!" piped Miss Frog.

"Yes, it did," said the Sage, reproachfully; "and if you wish to hear this story, you must be careful not to interrupt me again thoughtless girl."

As Miss Frog was very desirous, indeed, of hearing the story, she remained quiet, and the hermit frog continued:

The waters dried away, and hundreds of wretched frogs died in those parching days. Dying flies gasped with their last breath for a drop of rain water, and bobbed their wails with those of their sub-aqua kindred.

At length, one old frog, who had lived out to the last, confessed:

"Neighbors, I and wicked I have been. I have denied my God. And now I have no power to remedy the evil I have done."

At this, all the frogs, who were not yet dead, gathered around the tough old frog, and listened to his words.

"Woe was an evil day," gasped the speckled sinner, "when I poked my nose out of water to have a saucy kingfisher, who was mocking the whole fish tribe in his usual exciting manner. 'Catch me, if you can!' I cried, darting about at my ease.

"But the bird beguiled me. He made me believe that, if I would only work a little hole through that dam there, I could descend with the escaping waters to the stream below; and make my way to the sea, where, as I heard, the fishes were all kings, and ate nothing but diamonds for dinner.

"I enticed all the frogs that I could in the piece to assist me, and we wriggled and wriggled our noses into the gravel for a long while, apparently to no purpose.

"But, at last, a little leak started, and our water dripped away, drop by drop; but not in sufficient volume to carry us with it.

"When the waters had receded, so as to make the stream very low, back came that artful kingfisher, to dive for us in the shallow pools.

"And now, what the drouth had not destroyed, that tempter has gorged himself upon."

"Oh-h-h!" Boo-hoo-hoo!"

The frogs freely forgave him because he cried.

But the problem remained, how was the supply of water to be renewed.

At this juncture, an earnest, meek-eyed, polliwog limped feebly, and said: "Show me the place, where these waters leak away."

Astonished at her manner, the sobbing train indicated the spot.

"Drag me thither by my tail," exclaimed the heroine, resolutely.

Then the frogs used their last remaining strength to do as she bade them, and waited in exhausted surprise, to see what would happen next.

"Good-bye!" wept the brave little polliwog, wriggling with feeling and groaning some. "If any of you survive me, tell it to your children that I laid myself in the breach!"

With these few farewell words she crowded herself into the hole, out of their sight.

Presently, the stream began to rise and the pools to fill up. The frogs sat knee-deep in water, and the fishes swam upon their sides.

Day by day things improved, and the fishes began to sit up in bed, while the frogs were heard incessantly dressing the little polliwog. One night, she appeared to them in the sky, as you see her to-night; returning nightly, for many nights, to beam at them, growing larger and brighter at every appearance.

"Such," said the Sage, "is our Legend of the Moon!" And he leaped into the waves with a resounding plump!

Miss Frog felt so many different sensations at once that she dropped her lower jaw involuntarily, and sat so, unconscious of aught until awakened from her reverie by a cricket jumping suddenly into her throat.

Hastily gulping him down, she gathered her shawl about her, and, with a spring sprawled gracefully toward her wave.—St. Nicholas.

Card from the Publishing Committee.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met in this city on the fourteenth and fifteenth of January 1879 and organized under a regular act of incorporation. On account of the former publisher's inability to go on with the business of the paper the undersigned sub committee were authorized to make a contract with some other party to take charge of the business, and to print and issue the paper. We have accordingly made a contract with Mr G. T. Lathrop for this purpose, who will hereafter attend to the business affairs of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and to whom all communications on the business of the paper should be addressed for the future. Our agents and subscribers are assured that all business with them will meet with prompt attention, and that the paper will be regularly and promptly issued. We bespeak for the ADVOCATE the continued good will of our people, and the efforts of all to extend its circulation.

What Ought Christians to Profess?

There can be no doubt concerning their duty to confess Christ. This is so expressly commanded that there can be no clear Christian conscience without it. Christ is to be confessed as their Lord and Saviour, and the confession is to be before men. It is a public and explicit avowal to the world of faith in Him, and of discipleship. Confession in reference to Christ is a profession of the Christian religion. This Christ demands. He cannot approve of secret discipleship. The end for which the profession is fulfilled is for the spread of the gospel and for the salvation of others. The profession may endanger life and involve the loss of property. It may alienate friends and kindred, and lead to other sacrifices. But, at whatever cost, the duty is clear. There is no middle ground between confession and denial. Not to confess Christ is to deny him. Not to profess the Christian faith is to deny it. No release from this obligation was ever granted by Christ, or by his apostles, even to save from persecution or death. To be an accepted and approved disciple there must be an open avowal, a profession, public and clear.

Beyond this declaration of faith in Christ, and a life consistent with it, is there any further profession required? Is it required of the Christian man to make specific public declarations concerning the various phases of his inward life, his struggles with temptation, his conflicts with sin, his degree of assurance, or the processes of a high and gracious experience? The telling of experience is of very ancient origin. There is much of it in the Psalms, and David says: "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul." In the days of Malachi, "they that feared the Lord spake often one to another." Paul and Peter were in the habit of telling some very remarkable things connected with their religious history, and the glimpses of the primitive assemblies, which we find in the New Testament, indicate that the believers were very intimate and communicative. Christians in their social intercourse, and in their social meetings, have always told what God hath done for their souls. The love that is in them prompts this interchange of views, and these unfoldings of the deep feelings of the heart. But even to the world without is it not a very important part of their testimony that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth? They are Christ's witnesses as to the supernatural in religion as to the direct work of the Holy Spirit in the heart. A profession to this extent would seem to be a testimony which it is incumbent on them to deliver to all men. It is not merely the profession of a doctrine believed in, but of an experience realized and felt. It is conceivable that Christ may be confessed, very boldly and very sincerely, before the conscious work of regeneration has taken place. The profession of conversion, embracing this sense of the new and spiritual birth, is, therefore, the complete testimony which the Christian bears for Christ and the gospel. This is a duty to the world and also to the church. It is a profession which the world needs, and which the Christian must make. Christ, as his personal Saviour from sin, is professed before men.

In this sphere of experience, however, there may be innumerable lights and shades, and various degrees and aspects. There are conflicts and victories, there are wrestlings and revelations, there are humiliations and wonderful upliftings of soul, and there are depths and heights. The world at large would not comprehend these, would scarcely hear them if they were told. They would be pearls cast before swine. And there may be things in the secret spiritual life which are better kept. The disclosure of what is best, or of what is worst in us, is equally repugnant to the devout soul. There is a privacy that may not be invaded without damage to the finest and most delicate touches of the indwelling Spirit. There are things that come within the range of the innermost consciousness of the child of God that ought not to be made matters of profession. We may tell to the church and to Christian friends more than is embraced in our profession to the world, and there are things between God and the soul with which none may interfeddle. The closet life of Christ is that part of the wonderful life of which we know but little. There was in Him an inner life of union with the Father, and of communion with heaven, and of divine revelations and mysteries which was never exposed to the gaze of men or angels. Where the sensibilities are pure and spiritual there will be as much shrinking from nudeness of soul as from nakedness of body.

After we have granted all that the duty of profession requires, and all that the communion of saints demands, there remains much that is most beautiful, precious and sacred which cannot and ought not be told. No compromise should be made in reference to the duty of profession, and there should be no restraint upon the freedom and liberty of religious fellowship, but we must learn to recognize and respect certain reservations in the domain of experience. To make these the subjects of profession may work mischief, and rob the soul of their possession. The sensitiveness of some devoted Christians has led us to the endeavor to distinguish between the things to be professed, and those which properly belong to the secret experiences of the religious life. The disposition to shrink from the revelation of all that the heart feels is right in itself, only let us not give it more weight than it is entitled to.

The Cessation of the Manna.

The children of Israel had been miraculously fed for more than forty years. The necessities of their situation required a miracle. When the necessity was removed the miracle ceased. There may have been enthusiasts at that time who expected the miracle to continue, just as there are now those who believe that Christians ought to use prayer and faith for the healing of the sick, or the obtaining money for charitable purposes, and such like. These enthusiasts forget that God works miracles in his own way, and that his way of working is infinitely varied. He never pursues one plan long enough for men to copy or counterfeit. So soon as men begin to do so with their enchantments, he adopts another. Another reason exists in the very idea of a miracle. If it continues without variation it ceases to be miraculous, and becomes a fixed law. Thus the sunlight might have been a miracle had it not been governed by that regularity which destroys the miraculous quality. For the same reason the conversion of a sinner is not miraculous since it is the result of a well-defined law. The answer to prayer is not miraculous, except in those cases in which the ordinary law is suspended by the operation of the extraordinary. But these two never conflict through the agency of human will. No artificial emergency can be produced. It must be an emergency, rather, which man has been doing all in his power to avoid; but, failing to do this, the divine interposition is necessary. So that miracles are not only possible, but they are, no doubt, as frequent now as at any time of the world's history; but they are not of man's procuring, but, on the contrary, they are most likely to occur when man is least expecting them.

Let us notice that the miracle of the manna was continued thirty-seven and a half years longer than it might have been had Israel been strictly obedient to the divine will. We are, therefore, justified in the inference that miracles are often wrought for man in a low state of spirituality, rather than when in a high state of holiness. If God is working frequent miracles for me it excites a suspicion that I may not be doing my own duty so well as I ought. The people of Israel were truly favored for two and a half years by the manna. For that length of time they could have truly boasted that God was taking care of them when they were unable to obtain anything by their own exertions. But for the remainder of their pilgrimage the miracle of the manna was a rebuke to their unfaithfulness. So it may often be with individual Christians. Improvident, indolent or timorous Christians frequently have manna to eat, when they might be eating "the old corn" of the promised land. They have something good from the hand of the Lord, but they might have had something far better, and yet nothing miraculously provided.

Miraculous interposition, therefore, is not infallible proof of the highest state of grace. I have seen indolent Christians, indolent preachers and indolent churches miraculously fed; but they were people that God had been trying for forty years to get to a self-supporting condition; when, if they had followed his direction, they might have been there in as many months. Yet they point to these evidences of divine favor with an air of triumph that defies all logic. Thousands die eating manna. Churches die with manna all around them. Miracles, then, in this light, are a sort second choice on the part of God to man. He is the God of law. He does not "make void the law through faith" on man's part, nor through miracles on his own. The reign of order is to be fully restored, and therefore the farther advances toward perfect holiness are marked by the elucidation and explication of what was once mysterious and marvelous. That man can ever fully understand or explain all of his providences is quite another question.

But it is not the object of this paper to discuss the general topic of miracles. Let us learn another lesson from the cessation of the manna. We cannot keep the blessings of God which were designed for one state of Christian experience when we have passed to another. They were given to relieve wants that pressed then and there. The desert could afford nothing. Human resources are of no avail in many of the wastes of life. Industry and ideleness are on a par. Money possesses no value. The distinctions of wisdom and rank are a mockery. The social sympathies furnish no capital. Man is helpless, and the ambitions of life reach not beyond the dingy horizon of to-day, nor do the aspirations of man rise above the dreary stretch of its desolate and seemingly interminable sand-hills. Thus day by day man's daily wants are met by the daily manna. But, when he has passed these wastes, better things than manna surround him, and he again becomes conscious that his mental powers and moral qualities and social rank and material means are all available, and that there is merit in his using them aright. God did not create the moral waste for man's habitation any more than the physical, so that the products of man's own toil in his proper sphere are to be preferred to God's miraculous gifts out of it.

The cessation of the manna may teach us another valuable lesson: It indicates to us that we are coming to a better country. Oftimes the Christian pines that some particular manifestation of God's grace comes no more. Let him rather rejoice, unless he knows that he has been sinning against the light. He has lost the immediate evidences of God in his heart, but around him are the mediate, which in a thousand ways display his bounty. Before there was no evidence of his care but the manna; now the signs of his love are everywhere—in the bright sky and the green hill-sides, in the purling brooks and the umbrageous trees, in the teeming earth and even the black thunder cloud. O, blind Christian! how long will you bemoan the manna which grew offensive and wormy in a day, while around you bloom perennial flowers, and above you wave the fruitful palms and evergreen cedars? You realize the manna as the creation of God for your benefit; why are you so slow to realize that these, too, are his creation, made for your use and constant enjoyment? But the manna fell from heaven while you slept; these must grow from the earth under your toil and care. There is the difference, and it may be well if you are reminded that when work is your duty prayer is blasphemy; when the law of cause and effect is clear faith is presumption; when God's fields of bounty and toil are below the aspiration after those out of reach is impiety.

One more lesson from the cessation of the manna. Rich as some spots in life's pilgrimage may be, none ever supplies fully the wants of man's spiritual nature. Manna comes nightly to the pilgrim who went to sleep hungry for spiritual food. He falls asleep wondering how he can live through the heat and toil of to-morrow. Silently as the dew settles down, God stoops and breathes into his nostrils; as he did with the first man, and life is diffused throughout nerve, brain, heart. The pilgrim awakes as Jacob, and says: "Surely God was in this place, but I knew it not." Around him lies the manna of to-day. Were to-day to be as hot and long and deceitful as yesterday, he would not begin its journey. But hope sets out singing on the morning air, and faith's hand points to the cloud which is "for a glory and a covering." At last the pilgrim comes to living streams. He takes hold on real fruits—"the old corn" that grew while he was eating manna. He eats, and the manna ceases. The desert is past and Canaan gained. "The gates are past and heaven is won."

Maffit's Grave.

MR EDITOR: You gave us, in the last ADVOCATE, an interesting paper on the late Rev. John Newland Maffit.

People will read about Maffit; they will not willingly let his name die. There were genuine elements in that character; there is granite in that fame. As the time in which he lived and labored recedes, what was eccentric, and fastidious, and superfluous, and weak about the man, sinks out of view, and the outlines of his real power and greatness rise up and abide within the field of vision of at least the generation next following him.

Two or three lives of Maffit have been written, and none published, so far as I know. Several years since, when I was in New Orleans, a gentleman of fine literary taste, then connected with the editorial staff of the True Delta, was engaged on such a work. His name (Overall) might connect him with an old Methodist family. To him I loaned my copy of the volume from which the article in your paper was made up. Later he wrote me from St. Louis that the volume was ready for the printer, but I have seen no notice of its publication. A well-written biography of Maffit would find readers. His character and career afford a study that has not been exhausted, and might be profitable as well as entertaining.

His grave is unmarked, and soon will not be found, unless some memorial is placed there.

He was buried in the Mobile graveyard—the Magnolia cemetery. About 1851 a movement was started by that elect lady, Mrs. Jane T. H. Cross (one among the thousands converted by Maffit's ministry,) to put up a monument; but with the war the project fell through.

Last month, passing through Mobile, and visiting the graves of my own dead, I sought out the grave of Maffit. Somebody had marked a rude board with his name, and stuck it into the ground, at least ten paces from the right spot. The grave can still be identified, beyond a doubt. It is near the burying lot of Mrs. Hunter.

Rev. Felix R. Hill, pastor of St. Francis Street Church, was with me, and I am glad he was. Maffit was often a guest in his father's house at Nashville. I think he was one of the seals of his ministry when he preached so wonderfully in Middle Tennessee and North Alabama, forty years ago.

Bro. Hill promised me (I believe he will not fail, until he carries it out,) to see that some enduring monument should mark that spot before the year is out. Whether tall or low, costly or humble, let it be solid. Many will seek for it, and read the inscription, and magnify the grace of God in him. Though it was an earthen vessel, there was a great treasure in it, as multitudes living and dead could testify, and

The weak son of mortal race
The immortal glory enjoyed.

Parsonages.

The Itinerancy cannot work well without parsonages. They are an essential part of the system. As between a church and a parsonage we should say: Build the parsonage first. The support of the ministry in the hardest times would be tolerably assured if every work had a comfortable and well-located parsonage. Dr. McFerrin, writing in the Nashville Christian Advocate on this subject, says:

Suppose you are a preacher, and have charge of a circuit or station, and your family is ten or twenty miles distant. How are you going to look after the interests of your charge and protect and comfort your family? Some of your members are sick; but you are not near to visit them; one dies, but you are too far away to attend the funeral. A child is to be baptized, but you are away. A couple is to be married; but the bridegroom does not know your residence. Your family may be sick, but you are so far from home that your wife and children are neglected, or your flock must be without a shepherd.

Well, you ask: "How is this to be remedied?" I answer: Remove your family to your circuit or station. But, you say: "I can find no house suitable. No parsonage there; and if I could hire a house, I am not able to remove my family and pay the rent. I am in debt now for last year's rent—a debt the stewards should have paid. My credit is gone; I am ashamed to meet my landlord and grocer and merchant. I am opposed to going in debt, but my family were out of provisions, and out of clothing, and my rent not paid, and I had to take some money for which I sold books of the Publishing House, and won't be able to replace that; and here I am away from my people, and am put to a sad inconvenience. I want to visit my members, and be at the week-night prayer-meetings, and to attend to all my duties, but it is physically impossible. O, if there was a good parsonage in the heart of my circuit, where my family could be located and their wants supplied, how I would work for the Master! There is Bro G., on the A. circuit; he seems to have everything furnished him—bacon, pork, flour, sugar, coffee, corn, hay, and a cow to give milk for his children. Why, he says he has provisions for thirteen months in the year! Now, if I were in the midst of my people, and in their own house, I would fare equally well; but, alas! I am away fifteen miles, and am cut off from all these advantages. My people do not seem to consider the advantages of a preacher's home. They are kind; they have not a great deal of money, but they have everything else; and if I were in a parsonage, and lived with my people, they would take an interest in me, and they cannot feel otherwise."

Such, Mr. Editor, is a true picture of life as it exists in many of the old Conferences of our connection.

Five things should be:

1. There should be a district parsonage in every presiding elder's district well located.

2. There ought to be a comfortable parsonage in every well-established circuit and station.

3. The preacher should be required to live in the parsonage.

4. The parsonage should be supplied with heavy furniture, and the preacher's family should be provided with the necessaries of life.

5. The preacher, then, that would not do his work, unless providentially hindered, ought to retire from the list of workers.

Sunday-School Literature.

Bishop McTyeire contributes a timely article to the Western Methodist on "Methodist Literature for Methodist Sunday-Schools." We endorse every word of it heartily. Read and digest the following extract:

The good that is being done by Sunday schools is a matter for rejoicing among Christians. The systematic study of the Holy Scriptures that is going on in them is one of the best signs of our times. The opportunity afforded by this institute for shaping the religious character of the rising generation justifies the church in providing for it, and giving directions concerning it. Shall these provisions be made available? Shall these directions be observed in the conduct of Methodist Sunday-schools? That is the point to be considered by those in charge of them when purchasing their Sunday-school literature.

Show the pushing agents of the patent outside literature, manufactured for the trade in the North or East, just as iron cotton ties and wooden pumps are manufactured; show them the Sunday-school publications got up weekly and monthly and quarterly by Dr. McFerrin, book agent, and Dr Cunnyngham, editor, and challenge comparison in cost and quality with their publications; and the result may be stated about this way:

They affect to have our most enterprising "workers" on their side—to be in sympathy with them. Indeed they themselves are "workers;" know what is wanted; they are "live men," you know. All well enough—your Sunday school literature; only it is behind the times. General Conference was not made up of practical Sunday-school "workers;" old fogies, mean well; very safe; but not up to the age. Young people are wide awake, you know—want something fresh and taking, you know.

And such tricks of trade have resulted in loading down some of our Sunday schools with books, magazines and papers, that would suit a Congregational, a Unitarian, or a Universalist school as well. No distinctive doctrine is taught in song or lesson. The best that can be said is there is a studied vagueness of teaching and a pleasing generality, with much scene shifting. One result, however, is secured—a good deal of matter, printed and bound in various styles, has been sold, and trade is lively.

All the moral and religious reasons that call for Methodist preachers in Methodist pulpits call also for Methodist literature in Methodist Sunday-schools.

It will be gratifying to all good people to see that the recent investigation of the cipher dispatches completely vindicates Mr. Tilden from any complicity in attempt at bribery or fraud. Without regard to his political position, all will rejoice that the man who was elected president of a great nation is clear in the matters that have been charged against him.

We have received complimentary tickets to the Gulf States Mechanical, Agricultural and Industrial Exposition. The Exposition opens February 17, and continues eight days.

PLEASE REMEMBER.—Address all communications on business of the ADVOCATE to G. T. LATHROP, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

All other communications are to be addressed to the editor.

In requesting changes, give the postoffice from which as well as that to which the change is to be made.

In sending obituaries, marriages or communications of any kind, the address of the writer must be given, although it may not be published.

We have several communications on hand signed anonymously. We must have the full name and address of the writers before we can consider the question of their publication.

The Work in Mexico.

Rev. W. M. Patterson, Superintendent of our Missions in Mexico, writes to the Texas Christian Advocate, January 15:

Our work here cannot advance much without schools, and our schools at present are largely dependent upon the aid the ladies are willing to give us. I have been running some schools in hope of the help from the ladies rallied for by the Mission Board at the first of the year; but only the societies in New Orleans have furnished any money, and their operations were cut short by the yellow fever. I shall be very glad if I yet receive some assistance from that source before the close of the (missionary) year, so that I may not come out behind financially.

Again: We have a mission station (Jocotigo,) where there is already a congregation in charge of one of our preachers, now numbering over one hundred and fifty; but we have no suitable church—no house that will hold half of them at one time. I have visited the place myself, and find the people anxious for a church. They have no money, but are ready to do what they can in work. A nice lot can be had for a church. The place has 2500 inhabitants. Three other important towns—all larger than this—are at hand, and can be brought under our influence, if we can make a good stand at the first place. Now, cannot "all hands" in Galveston raise for the purpose of building a church in Jocotigo $100? It will require about $400 to do the work; and I have promised that it shall be done. Other places will help us. I think a few hours work by our friends will meet the demands of the case. We shall be encouraged to know that they are willing and trying to help us.

I might ask pardon for writing you this letter, but I know that it is no trouble for you to talk for missions.

I believe our work here is doing well. We have now ten preachers with regular work; five teachers, and one hundred and fifty members, with many others "on trial." No other mission has grown half so rapidly; and all these compare well with the other missions. We are just now ready to prosecute our work successfully. A rich harvest awaits us, and we shall gather it soon, if we can only get the hearty sympathy and prompt support of our people at home. Talk for us, Doctor, and I do not think you will regret it.

Last week, on one of my trips to the interior, I was robbed by a band of Mexicans in the mountains. Lost a watch that I valued very highly, and other things, but not much money. This, however, is what travelers experience every few days, and is hardly noticed or thought.

Our Publishing House.

Dr. McFerrin, in a late number of the Nashville Christian Advocate, says:

The time is rapidly approaching when the future of the Southern Methodist Publishing House will be determined. Since June 1, 1878, the Book Committee and the Book Agent have been experimenting as to two points:

Can the Publishing House, embarrassed with the old debts, be so run as to sustain itself and make a profit? Eight months' experience encourages the idea that this can be done beyond a doubt. If the church will rally to the support of the House, it can be so conducted as to sustain itself and create a sinking fund to aid in the final liquidation of all the debts. The business of the House is increasing; the subscription lists to the Christian Advocate and Sunday-school periodicals are enlarging, with the hope of a great increase. Let the church, the whole church, work for its own interest, and success, a grand success, will crown the effort.

We are making some progress in procuring subscribers to the four per cent. bonds. This work will be prosecuted with vigor within the next few months. The Agent, and Dr. R. A. Young, who is aiding in the work, will visit soon several important points in our connection, where they hope to meet a cordial welcome and liberal response. Within the past few days we have been encouraged by a few private subscriptions. One from a gentleman of North Carolina of $5,000; one from a gentleman of Louisiana of $2 500; one from a gentleman of Nashville of $600. These, in addition to what has gone before, have swelled our list handsomely. We are looking still for greater things. Surely the church, with 800 000 members and a million of friends, will not allow this matter now to roll back. Don't wait for another appeal from the Agent or Committee, but send in your responses, and let us finish up the job forthwith, and thus encourage our own hearts and the hearts of all our friends.

We notice with deep sorrow the announcement of the death of Rev. Philip T. Henderson. Bro. Henderson was at one time a member of the Louisiana Conference. Both he and his accomplished wife were greatly beloved by our people among whom they lived and labored. The Western Methodist says:

The Rev. Philip T Henderson, of the North Alabama Conference, and preacher in charge of Vienna circuit, died of pneumonia, at his residence in Decatur, Ala., January 21. He was an earnest and faithful preacher of the gospel a pure and devoted Christian. His ministry was begun in the Tennessee Conference, and for twenty years and more it has been prosecuted with usefulness and fidelity. A dear wife and three children survive to mourn their great loss—they have the sympathy of many friends.

How It Is.

The thing is in a nut shell: We must cut all poetry of all sorts out of obituary notices in order that we may protect our columns from occasional doggerel. When a worthy family lacking in nothing but poetical taste sends a ridiculous stanza we cannot interrupt their heart-felt and genuine grief by a critical letter explaining how their jingles limp. There is no middle course. It must all go out. The lines:

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are."—

are very true and beautiful, but they cannot be repeated eleven times in the same issue, as they would have been had we not once interfered. Please, brethren, be perfectly reasonable. We prefer to meet your wishes, but we cannot make the paper absurb at times when we see the whole question as you cannot.

The above clipped from the Northwestern Christian Advocate, Chicago, explains a delicate point in a straightforward manner. We would be pleased to print occasional verses of real poetry in obituaries, but to begin would be to invite a torrent of This, That and the Other, especially the Other.—Methodist Recorder.

State Sunday-School Convention.

This convocation received the endorsement of the recent Annual Conference. It will be held in the Lafayette Square Presbyterian Church, February 20, 21, 22. It will be composed of two delegates each from the evangelical Sunday-schools of the State. Superintendents in the city and throughout the State are urgently requested to send the names of their delegates, without delay, to Mr. Joseph H. Spearing, secretary, No. 25 Carondelet street, New Orleans.

The delegates may be the pastor, superintendent or teachers.

Arrangements have been made with the railroads and some of the steamboats for reduced fare for persons attending the Convention.

Rev. John B. Higginbotham, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference, died January 1, aged seventy-seven years. Bro. Higginbotham was one of the most devoted men we have ever known—a man unlearned, but useful, and by all beloved. For several years past we have been accustomed to meet him at the Seashore camp-meeting. He was there at the first meeting, and at nearly every one since. Hundreds will remember his fresh, and ringing talks in the altar and in the experience meetings. An obituary sketch, sent us by Rev. A. G. Jones, will appear in our next paper.

Rev. C. W. Drees, of the Methodist Episcopal Church mission in Mexico, who has been in charge of the work in Puebla City, has been appointed by Bishop Merrill to the superintendency of all the Methodist Episcopal Church missions in that country. He succeeds Dr. William Butler, whose resignation takes effect at the close of the annual meeting which began January 16.

A notice will be found on our eighth page of the regular quarterly meeting of the Methodist Sunday-School Union of the New Orleans district. The exercises promise to be of a very interesting character. The meeting is to be at the Carondelet Street Church, next Tuesday night, February 18, at seven o'clock. Let all attend.

The Mobile Register says: "There is not a vacant dwelling in the city of Montgomery, Ala.

Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

—A DEFENDER OF CHURCH GAMBLING.—The Wesleyan, from time to time, has entered its protest against all forms of church gambling to raise money for church purposes. And not without reason we think. A defender of the iniquity now comes forward, as the papers report, in the person of the Rev. Dr. Story, in one of the Scottish churches. At a recent church fair in Blantyre he undertook to excuse a lottery they were running in the name of the Lord. Quoting Wesley's saying that the devil ought not to have all the good tunes, he said he did not see why the same individual should have to himself the gratification of that innocent spirit of risk and adventure which is so strong in the human breast!"

If we keep on raising money by questionable means, there will rise up defenders and advocates of the practice. Indeed, we have read, in a Methodist paper, quite an elaborate defense of the practice of raising money by church fairs. Somebody will be defending raffling and other varieties of gambling the first thing we know. Why not sell indulgences? If we only had a Tetzel to do the auctioning, what an amount of money could be raised!

Central Methodist, Kentucky.

—We do not believe, and therefore do not affirm, that those who give these modern entertainments, and those who attend them, are not, many of them, pure and virtuous. But the facts fully justify the statement that among the impure and fallen of the land no species of public resort is so common as the dance. One further fact will hardly be questioned, and that is no deeply pious person, man or woman, was ever known to participate in a public dance.

The feature which, to modest and refined women, should forever condemn the modern dance, is the liberty which the ball-room allows with their persons. Not long since we were travelling upon an Ohio river steamer. There were on board quite a number of gentlemen and ladies, and soon the music and dancing began. In that dance, the regular fashionable dance of the day, a mode t young ladies permitted liberties with their persons by men of whom they knew nothing, and to whom they had just been introduced, which, had they been witnessed in the parlor at home, would have justly consigned them to infamy. And, worse still, these young men were frequent visitors to the bar room, and were soon flush with whisky and bold and reckless in their conduct. And this is not an exceptional case. It is a truth, patent to all, that every form of cultivated and polite society is made to bend at the behest of the ball-room, and these young ladies submit to the caresses of young men of known dissolute lives, to whom they would not speak on the public street, and who would feel insulted by a proposition to visit them at their homes. Why is this? The modern dance would be less objectionable were the rules of polite society observed inside, as well as outside, the ball-room. But such is not the fact.

Chicago Interior.

—The pestilence in the South was not all uncompensated suffering and unmitigated loss. The Christian heroism, both of men and women, which was illustrated in those dark days, is a valuable heritage to humanity. In no direction, however, did it lead to ends so beneficent as in the establishment of a better understanding between the people of the two sections. The immediate and bountiful response made by the Northern people to the cry of distress which came up from the afflicted cities opened the eyes of many in the South, who were before blind to the real attitude of the North toward them, and they now know and appreciate and reciprocate the sympathy and esteem of which they had such grand evidences. It is said that individuals from the North are now more heartily welcomed than ever before in Southern homes—a fact which is valuable only because it indicates a better state of feeling. The Howard Association, of New Orleans, in their report for 1878 say:

"And now, brethren, what more can be said, save if we attempt to speak in praise of and thanks to the generous hearts that sent to our people that bounty, so grand, which we have administered to the stricken and afflicted. We have already, as best we could, expressed in words the thanks we feel to them for their divinely-inspired charity. No human tongue, no human pen, can fittingly express it. It is as unutterable as the sorrow and suffering which their generosity has mitigated and relieved. Eternity alone will unfold all the good that they have done. We who have, in the administration of their bounty, been called to stand by the bedside of sickness and death, and in the house of mourning and destitution, can tell them only that we have seen the light of hope replace the gloom of an almost despair, and strength and courage revive in those who were ready to die. We have seen and we have felt, but even we do not and cannot know all here. The record of it all is written above and there only shall they read it."

Books and Periodicals.

—Foes of Society. Night Sides of City Life. Each of these works comprises a series of sermons preached in the tabernacle, Brooklyn, by Dr. Talmage. The sermons will have a wide circulation. It is to us a doubtful question whether they will do good. We hope they may. For sale by C. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

—The Preacher and Homiletic Monthly for February completes the supply of sermons and sermonic literature. Published by the Religious Newspaper Agency, New York, at $2 50 per year.

—Gurdon's March is the title of a piece of music, composed by Henry Schoeller, Dalton, Ga., and published by Louden & Bates, Savannah, Ga.

—We have received a copy of the minutes of the ninth session of the North Mississippi Conference. It is a neat pamphlet, tinted paper, matter well arranged. Edited by Rev. J. M. Boon.

—We have received the International Sunday-School Map, series D, Western Asia. It is colored, on cloth. Published by A. H. Ellers, St. Louis.

—Sunday Afternoon for February has: A Game of Five; A Conventional Conscience; Ministers and Hobbies; A Pair of Home Missionaries; As to Sunday Dailies; What is Conscience? The True Story of Hans Christian; A Just and Faithful Knight of God; Kasim Al Anwar; The Still Hour, and other articles.

—The Sanitarian for February contains the usual amount of valuable reading on medical and hygienic topics.

Publisher's Department.

While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the real value of the goods advertised. In ordering, please mention the ADVOCATE.

WE REFER parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 12 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found of so thoroughly a first-class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3 50 per day.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—Lamps with Bronze font, $4 50, $2 00, $2 50; Student, $6 00; Lanterns, 50 cents; $1 00 to $5 00. One of the most reliable crockery stores in the South.

STATIONER.—There is no stationer in New Orleans more deserving of a passing tribute at our hands than the prominent and liberally-managed house of J. S. Rivers, 71 Camp street. Established several years ago with a moderate stock, and again numerous competitors, this concern has, through the great business capacity, forethought and prudence of its proprietor, become one of those prominent landmarks of our city, which are easily discerned through their popularity and prominence by any stranger. His success may be attributable to his familiar experience with this business, in consequence of his long association with it, his close application and unlimited enterprise, which are so necessary to a thriving merchant. Mr. Rivers has recently fitted up one of the finest display windows in this or any other city, so arranged that the passer by at a glance may form an idea of the elegant and mammoth stock in his line. Send in your orders. He will give entire satisfaction.

UPHOLSTERING AND HOUSEFURNISHING GOODS.—The house of Heath, Phipps & Lard is one of the oldest in the South in this line, and have acquired an excellent reputation as good judges in the market. There is no establishment in the South that has so large or complete an assortment of goods of every variety in their line. Persons requiring anything in their line should consult this firm, who are offering great inducements.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS intending to buy chairs or settees should correspond with Gardner & Co., 35 Pearl street, N. Y. The reputation of Mr. Gardner as a thoroughly conscientious house, which has maintained an unblemished reputation for the strictest integrity and fair mode of doing business for so many years needs only passing notice. Suffice to say that any business entrusted to them will be promptly and faithfully executed.

S. ANDERSON, 115 Canal street, is one of the oldest as well as most popular of photographers in the South. His advertisement should be read carefully. After doing so drop in and see him, and you may depend Anderson will satisfy you.

THE NATIONAL SILVER PLATING COMPANY, of 705 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, have a very attractive advertisement on the last page. This company is reliable, and our readers may rest satisfied that they will be fairly dealt with.

R. & J. BECK, Manufacturing Opticians, 921 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, have an advertisement on the seventh page. This house carries the largest and most varied stock of goods in the United States, of prices which will suit the purses of everybody. They are reliable, gentlemanly and our readers, when wanting anything in their line, should give them the preference.

DRY GOODS at reduced prices at E. H. Adams & Bro.'s, 594 Magazine street. Everything appropriate to the season can be had there.

MADAME GRISWOLD, of 21 East Sixteenth street, New York, advertises for lady agents for her famous skirt supporting corsets. This lady stands very high in New York, and her corsets give entire satisfaction wherever used. Agents make plenty of money working for this estimable lady.

READ the advertisement of those eminent gentlemen, Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1112 Grand street, Philadelphia. They stand very high, and their treatment of chronic diseases is wonderful.

RICE, BORN & CO.—For all kinds of hardware go to the above firm, 59 Camp street, where you can find everything in their line, and the lowest market prices. They have the Mungo Home Scale and large quantities of barbed fence wire. Give them a call.

DRY GOODS.—The house of Yale & Bowling, 17, 19 and 21 Magazine street, occupies the leading position in the wholesale dry goods line in this city. This house offers the most inviting inducements to country merchants. Their spring stock is arriving, which they propose offering at very low figures, competing with any market South. They propose to give country merchants every facility as will induce them to buy here. This old concern has been in business over forty years, and their business integrity is well known. Country dealers may feel safe in ordering from samples sent, and all who visit the city may find the best bargains in this large and enterprising house. Remember the numbers 17, 19 and 21 Magazine street.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.—Those interested should call at the advertisement of Charles M. Evans, at 39 Carondelet street, and after March 1st, 63 Canal and St. Louis. We can recommend him as entirely reliable, and our readers may feel safe in ordering from him.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT.—R. Rhodes, 55 St. Charles street, keeps a full assortment of everything in his line for sportsmen. Give him a call.

THERE are few men in the South better known in the stove line than H. Haller, 55 Camp street. This gentleman has enjoyed the utmost prosperity, and that success which attends perfect system, and the application of fine business sense in mercantile transactions. Call and see one of Buck's Improved Brilliant Stoves, acknowledged to be as good as any made.

HARDWARE.—We take pleasure in presenting the claims of the popular house of H. DeVerges & Co., 17 and 19 Decatur street, to the consideration of our readers. The firm consists of active and energetic men, who have been a long time in the business, and who have proved themselves most excellent merchants. A reference to their card will show a portion of the extensive list of articles that can be found in their store. Their stock is one of the most complete of any house in the city, and when any of our readers want anything in their line they should not fail to address them, they will be found accurate and courteous and entitled to the confidence of those who wish to deal with pleasant gentlemen.

MILLINERY EMPORIUM, HAIR WORK AND FANCY GOODS BAZAR.—C. T. Schilling, 159 Canal street, has just received from New York a full supply of the above articles, which he proposes selling at reduced prices. This gentleman we have known for years, and it is a pleasure to us to recommend him to our numerous readers. Persons desiring good bargains should avail themselves of this opportunity to call and examine this fine assortment. See advertisement.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, cause blister or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers, can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 409 North Sixth street, St Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

What is Scrofula?

It is a consumption of the body, and differs only from Pulmonary Consumption, in that the subtle foe does not attack the citadel of life, and hence the patient's case of life is a little longer, but it arises from the same cause, is the offspring of the same parent, and consequently requires the same treatment. To correct the impaired time mits of digestion and nutrition, and enrich and vitalize the blood is the first important step. Cod Liver Oil is known by the medical profession to be the best remedy, but it has been objectionable for general use, account of its nauseous qualities. But in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil they are entirely overcome, and combined with Hypophosphite of Lime and Soda, is a most wonderful remedy in such cases.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS

NEW ORLEANS
WATER WORKS CO.

$500,000 First Mortgage 6 Per Cent. Bonds.

1000 of $500 each, Payable in 30 Years.

INTEREST PAYABLE SEMI-ANNUALLY AT THE LOUISIANA NATIONAL BANK IN NEW ORLEANS.

The New Orleans Water Works Company having obtained from the Legislature of the State of Louisiana Extension of its charter for fifty years, with the exclusive privilege of supplying the city of New Orleans and its inhabitants with water and having been organized and placed in possession of the works on the 16th April, 1878, is now ready to offer the above bonds as authorized by its charter.

The principal of said bonds in principal and interest is secured by a first mortgage of all the property and franchises of said company, including its franchise to be a corporation, and the property and franchises acquired or to be acquired; said property being the same that the city of New Orleans acquired from the Commercial Bank in 1888, and which was valued by experts at $2,000,000.

The bonds are issued for the exclusive use in improving and enlarging the works of the company and increasing the supply of pure water to the inhabitants, to promote the public health and to afford greater security against fire.

The interest on the above bonds will form the first charge upon the revenues in the company as required by section 10 of the charter, and the present net revenues are estimated at 4 per cent. or $20 00 per annum which secures beyond question their punctual payment.

The Directory have adopted the plans and specifications submitted by Mr. Moses Lane, C. E., the report on which will place the works in New Orleans in favorable contrast with those of larger cities in the United States, and furnish not only an abundant and adequate supply of water but with a guaranteed head of seventy five feet at all points in the city, and thereby increasing very materially the revenues of the company.

Applications will be received at the office of the company until the 10th of February, 1879.

No application will be entertained at less than par and accrued interest. The bonds will be issued as the contemplated improvements progress as follows:

$ [illegible] within 6 months.
to [illegible] within 12 months.
[illegible] within 18 months.

The remainder of the bonds will only be issued in the event of the Board of Directors deeming it necessary to deliver more water. If the specifications offered should exceed the amount so named, the bonds will be issued pro rata.

Those persons proposing to bid for bonds will find a detailed statement of the affairs of the company open to their inspection at the office of the company.

By authority of the Board.

EDWARD FOLEY, President.

F. S. FOUR PER CENT. BONDS.

WE continue to sell these bonds, coupon and registered, at par and accrued interest. All the profits inure here free of expense to purchasers.

TO RENOVATE BLACK DRESSES. Buy 10 cents' worth of soap bark from the soap trees. Soak the bark in a quart of water, strain into a bottle and it is ready for use. It will take the grease spots out of any woolen goods without injuring the most delicate color. Wash the dress as usual, and while it is wet sponge the spots with the soap bark mixture. Iron on the wrong side. This will work like a charm. Ribbons may be renovated in the same manner.

WOOL AS A MANURE.—Wool waste, such as is left in the process of manufacturing, is a valuable manure. Its slow decomposition in the soil makes it a lasting fertilizer, and its effects are very beneficial to the crops. Wool contains about 3 per cent. of ammonia, and 1 per cent. of potash, besides other valuable ingredients. Wool waste is also valuable for composting with other manures, as it prevents fermentation from being too violent, and the escape of ammonia.

CURE FOR CHOLERA IN HOGS.—Take one pint of strong vinegar, one pint of molasses, one pint of lard, one pint of sweet milk, one pint of sweet oil, one pint of spirits turpentine, one pint of spirits camphor, one pint of spirits nitre, one pint of spirits ether, one pint of laudanum, one pint of tar, one pint of ashes, one pint of salt, one pint of sulphur, one pint of red pepper, one pint of black pepper, one pint of ginger, one pint of alum, one pint of copperas, one pint of saltpetre, one pint of gunpowder, one pint of rosin, one pint of resin, one pint of asafœtida, one pint of assafras, one pint of sassafras, one pint of sassafras, one pint of sass

SCIENTIFIC.

—The question has been raised of late whether the position of any portion of the surface of the earth is not continually changing in relation to the vertical and the axis of the earth. Theoretically, of course, every change in the distribution of the matter of which the globe is composed must necessarily alter the direction of gravity and of the axis of rotation to some extent, whether it be brought about by geological causes, such as the upheaval of continents and transportation of matter by rivers, or by artificial operations. The only question is whether the changes are perceptible with our means of observation. They would show themselves, if they existed, by their effects upon the latitudes of places, and the director of the Paris Observatory has just had a most careful investigation made, by Gaillot and Wolf, to ascertain whether any effect of the sort could be detected in the determinations of the latitude of this observatory from year to year. The result is entirely negative. There is nothing to confirm the idea that any sensible change has occurred for the last twenty years, and a change of twenty feet in the position of the pole could not have escaped detection.

ASTRONOMICAL.—Prof. James C. Watson and Prof. Lewis Swift have agreed in the conclusion that the planets discovered by them during the July eclipse are identical. These planets were discovered within 2m. 52 seconds after the commencement of the search for them. Exclusive of comets, there are now 224 members of the solar system known. There are now 190 asteroids known, unless others have been discovered since October 1. In 1875 there were 17 discovered, the greatest number in one year. Prof. C. H. F. Peters, of the Litchfield Observatory, Hamilton College, has discovered the greatest number—31. Prof. Watson follows him in the list, having discovered 23. A meteor of unusual brilliance was observed on Christmas at about 7.45 P. M. To observers in the New England States it seemed to appear in the Southeast, throwing off streamers as it passed out of sight.

—Tincture of iodine has been fully tried as an acute Indian agencies in the West as a substitute for quinine in the treatment of malarial diseases, and with entire success. Dr. Fordyce Grimmel writes, "I have been astonished and delighted with the results."

—Schiff, of Turin, states that sea water or salt water, containing about one part in one thousand of sulphide of carbon, makes a very good preserving liquid for animal specimens, in which they can be kept for a considerable time preliminary to their treatment with alcohol, and the more final substances.

Celebrated American

WORM SPECIFIC

OR

VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot of one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull, the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a gnawing sensation of the stomach, at others entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach, occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

DR. C. McLANE'S

LIVER PILLS

are now recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," but in affections of the liver, and in all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated. Each box has a red wax seal on the lid with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS. Each wrapper bears the signature of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Just purchasing the genuine DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

From The Jackson (Miss.) Clarion. JACKSON, Mississippi, 1878.

Mr. C. H. Mansfield of Jackson, one of the best painters in the State, and a gentleman of great intelligence and worth, says in reference to these Paints:

"I have tested them fully, and am prepared to say that the Paints which are of all colors and shades, are not only the cheapest, but the best I have ever used in my experience as painter by the last mile yards, and the certificates in my possession to the superiority of the roofing material itself all dismiss on the subject. FITS OR EPILEPSY.

To the Editor of the Advocate:

DEAR SIR: Will you please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that for its use in my practice I have cured hundreds of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS

for a case it will not cure. Be exactly honest. Unless so stated in my ad. I will send together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please show this letter, to any one you may know who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige. Respectfully yours,

ONE BOTTLE FREE,

DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl Stree, N. Y.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE most preparation known for all disordered conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHE caused by acidity of the stomach. The delicate taste and milk-like smoothness of the preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents Rod vomiting on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The combinations of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a tract and part of a single drop magnified 25 times diameter. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates of Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitation, in fact perfectly dissolved.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS

THEY ARE WORTH THEIR

WEIGHT IN GOLD

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT: Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, "feel like going" and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

Rev. R. I. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and with certainty will relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh, while under the influence of these Pills of itself indicate their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice. But if it has become habitual, one Pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is established, which will soon follow.

THE BEST TRUSS IN THE WORLD!

Those who have suffered untold agony for years, by wearing the Metallic Spring Trusses will find in the SURE CURE Truss all that the name implies—a sure cure for all the attendant ills upon rupture. It is a RUBBER Truss—no springs, strong elastic in back, vulcanite rubber pads that never blister, never slip. Can be worn at night.

Testimonials of cures can be seen at the office, No. 4 Elastic Trusses, the best manufactured, warranted, all (1) for single, (1) for double. Examination free.

Trusses sent free by mail on receipt of order and money. Send stamp for circular.

DISCOVERY by which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most comprehensible, because she proceeds on the well known supposition that the hair grows over the white life culls in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a healthy growth. Three bottles for $5, or for one dollar. The order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

"AUS ALTEN MAECHEN WINET ES."

From the realm of old world story
There beckons a lily hand,
That calls up the sweetness, the glory,
The sounds of a magic land.

Where huge flowers droop in the splendor
Of closing day's golden red,
And gaze on each other with tender
Looks as of lovers new wed.

Where all the trees too have voices,
And all like a chorus sing,
And a sound as of music rejoices
In the babble of every spring.

Or the air sorgs of time-love are swelling,
Such as never elsewhere (too list heard,
Till by yearnings divine, beyond telling,
They to a divinely stirred.

Oh me, if I might go thither,
And gladden my care worn breast,
Shake off all the sorrows that wither,
Be happy and truly at rest!

Ah, many a time in my dreaming,
Through all of these regions I roam,
Then I'm sunk upon knees with a trembling,
And clutch at it all like a home.

—Heine.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SALT LAKE U. T., Feb. 8.—At a meeting of the Anti-Polygamy Society to-day, the following memorial to Congress was adopted:

"While Delegate Cannon and the representatives of the Mormon Church are pettifogging for amnesty, and promising obedience for their people to the anti-polygamy law, the expressions and the actions of the Mormons in Utah give no evidence that the promise will be fulfilled. Apostle John Taylor President of the Mormon Church, declares that the revelations enjoining polygamy come direct from God, that it is his religion, and neither Congress nor the Supreme Court had any right to interfere; that the Supreme Court decision would have effect, to unite, confirm, and strengthen Mormons in their faith. This same Taylor, when in France in 1853, he having then five wives, denied the existence of polygamy among the Mormons, and had a denial published in pamphlet form in French and circulated. It is a matter of common notoriety that the Mormons are contracting unlawful marriages the same as ever; that John W. Young has married his fifth wife, James Welch his second wife, and John White his third wife since the decision was made. The Desert News, the Mormon Church organ, declares the decision of the Supreme Court was rendered under popular pressure by feeble-witted and cloudy minded judges, and in meeting-houses violent diatribes are uttered against the judges and judgment of the court. Therefore we respectfully ask Congress, during the present session, to amend the act of 1862, that it may become operative by making the general reputation of the conjugal relation proof of marriage, and living together in polygamy to constitute the offense. Unless the prosecuting officer of the government is enabled by some such legislation to prosecute and punish offenders, no regard will be paid to the statute."

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Feb. 10.—The Senate passed the House bills making the law less severe in regard to card playing in public places; requiring ballots to be written or printed on white paper five by seven inches without design or motto, and makes it applicable to all elections; to enlarge and extend the remedy by certiorari; to fix the punishment for robbery at fines; to prevent dismissal of suits in equity for multifariousness. The Senate sustained the Governor's veto of the bill requiring the auditor to return to counties their share of the money for tax lands transferred by him. The Governor approved the bill allowing a County Solicitor for Mobile.—Mobile Register.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Feb. 11—The Senate passed unanimously the House bills creating the port of Mobile and abolishing the charter, and to establish in Mobile an Inferior Court with criminal jurisdiction. The Governor has approved the bills and many applications are on file to fill the places thus created.

The Senate also passed the House bill on swamp and overflowed lands, confirming the existing patents and titles and authorizing the appointment of a commissioner to look after the State's interest in locating lands which Congress has donated or may hereafter donate.—Mobile Register.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The House committee, charged with investigating the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, have prepared a bill similar to that reported by the special committee of the Senate. One of the principal differences is the omission of provision for the Bureau of Health, but it adopts the Senate's feature for the Board of Health, to consist of seven members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than one member is to be appointed from any one State. The compensation of each, during the time when actually engaged in the performance of his duties, is to be worth ten dollars a day, and reasonable expenses. The Surgeon General of the army and Surgeon General of the navy are to be members of the board, without additional pay.

The duties of the board are such as are defined in the Senate bill, and precautions for preventing the introduction of infectious diseases into this country generally the same. The House bill contains a proviso, that it shall be unlawful for any vessel engaged in the transportation of goods or persons from any foreign port where any infectious or contagious disease exists to land in the United States, except in accordance with the provisions of this act.

MERIDIAN, MISS., Feb. 15—A fire last night at Enterprise, Miss. Loss $60,000 Insurance $40,000.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Feb. 12.—La Patria publishes a letter from Tangier, Morocco, dated February 4 saying: The Governor of Fez has taken refuge in a sanctuary to escape the populace, who have risen against him. The Sultan of Morocco had a stroke of paralysis. Anarchy reigns throughout the Empire.

ROME, Feb. 12.—The President of the Board of Health, speaking in the Chamber of Deputies, predicted that if the plague penetrated Europe, it would destroy a third of the population.

The Italian Government has ordered a twenty days' quarantine against arrivals from Egypt.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 12.—The Golos publishes the following telegram from the principal members of the Bouise at Antrachan: According to official and private reports the epidemic has entirely disappeared. There have been no cases in this Government for several days.

SALONICA, Feb. 12.—There is no sickness here or at Kavala. The number of deaths from typhus at Xanthi reached two hundred and fifty. The mortality there is decreasing.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 13.—The Golos publishes a telegram from Tzaritzin, 12th inst., stating that since the thaw set in the number of plague-stricken has increased. Prof. Jacobi, of Charakoff, head of the medical commission sent into the infected district, has been attacked with the disease, and was worse at last accounts.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 13.—Dock laborers, numbering over 40,000, held a meeting to-day, at which it was decided that unless the masters agreed to the old rates by three o'clock this afternoon, they would demand an advance of the day rate, and of a penny per hour for overtime.

BOMBAY, Feb. 13.—Gen. Grant and party arrived here and landed to-day.

It appears from published statistics that since the Sunday closing act came into force in Ireland the number of arrests on Sunday in towns containing 5000 inhabitants has been reduced 61 per cent. The towns are 29 in number, excluding Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Limerick and Waterford. Apropos of Sunday closing, the town of Kuton-on-Lindsey has been canvassed on the subject, with the following result: In favor of closing, 344; against 5; neutral 23.

LONDON, Feb. 14.—In his speech in the House of Lords, last night, Beaconsfield particularly defended the Sultan against the charges of unwillingness to reform the administration of his government, and announced that the commission appointed by the Sultan to examine the needs of the various provinces has just presented their report.

"The object of the government's interference in Afghanistan," he said, "has been completely accomplished. We now hold the three great highways connecting Afghanistan and India, and I hope we shall always retain them. We have secured a frontier which I hope and believe will render India invulnerable, in a way which will trench as little as possible on the independence of Afghanistan."

PARIS, Feb. 14.—The official journal says: The latest reports of the plague are reassuring. It has not increased, and energetic measures have been adopted for its suppression. The French Government have dispatched a physician to investigate the disease.

Reports that the plague has appeared in Turkey are unfounded.

LONDON, Feb. 14.—The standard's correspondent at Rome says: The decision has just been reached at the Vatican to create certain new dioceses in the United States, in consequence of the growth of the church in that country.

LONDON, Feb. 15.—The Pall Mall Gazette's correspondent at Rome says: Cordial letters have been exchanged between the Pope and the German Emperor, and concessions made on both sides.

The Cardinals oppose the Pope's acceptance of the civil list. His Holiness decides, nevertheless, that the ecclesiastics must obey the laws.

LONDON, Feb. 17.—A dispatch from Liverpool to the Echo says: The strike has practically collapsed. Only about 3000 men attended to-day's meeting, which resolved to continue the strike. In the meantime work is being resumed along the whole line of docks, and men are going back in large numbers. The sailors continue to hold out.

ROME, Feb. 17.—The Pope has proclaimed a universal jubilee and indulgence on the anniversary of his election.

One of the few good laws enacted by the late session of the Louisiana Legislature was the following:

Act to amend and re-enact section 816 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Louisiana.

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That section 816 of the Revised Statutes of the State shall be amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

SEC. 816. Whoever shall wantonly or maliciously cruelly beat, maim disable, starve, or otherwise ill treat any domesticated animal, including those specified in the foregoing section, shall, upon conviction, be fined not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding three months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

This law, if enforced, will close up the abominable cockpits which have heretofore been a disgrace to our city, and it will also put a stop to dog fights. We believe bull fights have not yet been attempted here.

Gov. Hampton's Recovery.

The editor of the Columbia, S. C. Register, in the course of a most interesting account of a visit to Gov. Hampton, whom he found greatly improved in strength, and steadily recovering from the severe trials through which he has recently passed, tells a striking story of a dream which the Governor had at the crisis of his case, and tells it in the Governor's own words. The visitor, about to take his leave, said to the Governor: "At least in all your serious illness you had the devoted love of your own people."

"Ah, yes sir," was the hearty, deep-toned reply, "never man more. I believe, as confidently as I do that I live, that the prayers of the people saved my life. I will tell you why I feel and believe it so firmly. While I was lying here at the point of death, and had become utterly indifferent whether I lived or died, I got a letter from an old Methodist preacher, one of my old friends. He wrote me word informing me of the deep and devout petitions put up in behalf of my restoration by the Methodist Conference then in session at Newberry. He then urged upon me to exercise my will to live, in response to the supplications of the people of the whole State, who were praying for me night and day in every household in the State. My sister, who had tremblingly brought the letter to my bedside and read it to me, then urged me to listen to the kind, loving words of the man of God and to rouse my will to live, and I promised her to do so. I fell into a deep sleep that night, and the most vivid dream I ever experienced in my life crossed my slumbers. I dreamt I was in a spacious room, and that in it I was moved to all parts of the State, so that I met my assembled friends everywhere. I remember most distinctly of all old Beaufort, where I had last been. It seemed there were immense assemblages, and, as I looked down upon them, a grave personage approached me and touched me on the shoulder and said to me: 'Those people are all praying for you. Live, live, live!' I never realized anything like it before. It seemed a vision. I woke the next morning feeling the life-blood creeping through my veins, and I told my family the crisis was passed and I would get better."

At the close of the touching and thrilling relation, we bade him good-by, heartily wishing him a speedy recovery and many, many long years of health and usefulness.

DEATH OF MRS. BORING.—The Augusta papers bring us, says the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, the sad intelligence that Mrs. Boring, wife of Rev. Dr. Jesse Boring of the North Georgia Conference, and pastor of St. John's Church, Augusta, died Monday, January 20. We have not the particulars of the sad event. Mrs. Boring we have known, honored and loved for twenty-five years. She was truly one of the "elect ladies" of the church—a woman of extraordinary character and worth in every relation of life. She had been forty-five years an itinerant's wife, in Georgia, Alabama, California, Texas. She began married life in St. John's parsonage; there she "fell on sleep" and entered into rest. We shall have, in due time, a fitting tribute to the character of this excellent and beloved Christian woman, whose death is a personal bereavement to multitudes of loving friends.

Brookhaven, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: After some delay, on account of bad roads, bad weather and sickness, I am in my new charge (Brookhaven,) and at work. The good ladies gave us a pleasant reception, and we feel encouraged by the prospects before us.

Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D., president of Whitworth College, has been quite sick since returning home from the Louisiana Conference. He is better now, and we hope will soon be up again. His school is filling up. Yours truly,

W. B. LEWIS.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The ladies of our church present at the recent session of Conference conferred upon me the honor of a secretaryship in the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, with the duty of conducting its correspondence; but finding private letters to be uncertain, slow and tedious, I crave the better facility the ADVOCATE affords for making known the objects of the society. I have forwarded to personal acquaintances in the ministry a card of the following tenor:

"Reverend and Respected Sir—Your aid is charitably invoked for the organization of an auxiliary to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in your charge. Accompanying this card is a pamphlet containing directions and explanations.

"In one so inferior in wisdom and influence to yourself as I am, it would be presuming to submit any better motive than the cause of religion to be subserved in this movement, trusting rather that your friendship for the cause will secure your service."

But this reaches only a few of whose postoffice address I am certain.

It would be highly gratifying if the other ministers should be gracious to our humble cause, and send me a card of recognition, so that I may have the postoffice address of each one. It is not often in the august presence of our ministers that the children of the household venture to speak above our breath. Yet such is the peremptoriness of duty as we learn it from our Fathers, that when the time comes, and the task devolves, we trust for sympathy and respect in the high sense of duty common to the ministry and members of our church. The rule so sacred in the disciplinary economy exacting obedience of sons in the gospel is, perhaps, as we have so often heard from parental lips, balanced by shamefacedness in the daughters of the house. Protect me, dear Mr. Editor, from any suspicion of boldness in this appeal in behalf of our missionary enterprise.

I am, respectfully,

ANNIE E. LINFIELD,
Cor. Sec. of Conference Society.

The Epidemic Still Raging—The Quarantine.

What epidemic? That of yellow fever? No. But that of the drinker's disease, which is far more widespread and deadly. An uncontrollable appetite for ardent spirits is as really a disease as yellow fever. When the intoxicating fluid pervades the human body the brain becomes stupefied, and the muscles paralyzed; the tongue talks wildly, or refuses to talk at all, and the feet walk awkwardly, and finally fail to perform their office. The oftener this appetite is indulged the more insatiable it becomes, until he who should be its master finds himself its helpless slave. The state of drunkenness is a state of disease, and the frequent repetition of it brings on a permanently deranged state of the system, in which the morbid desire for drink is no more under the control of its victim than an ague or a congestive chill would be. But if the love of strong drink is a disease, are its victims responsible? Undoubtedly they are, because they know the cause, and voluntarily subject themselves to its influence. All diseases are more or less subject to the power of the will, both as to their external causes and as to their internal struggle with the vital powers. All diseases may be resisted, and some may be avoided altogether. In these respects the drinker's disease is no exception. A man need never have the disease, or, having it, he may resist and conquer it.

But the lamentable fact is that this disease is now epidemic in every city and town and village and neighborhood in this and many other lands. And, what is worse, it is both infectious and contagious. No disease is physically more communicable from person to person than this is morally. No man more certainly imperils his health or his life by going into the midst of an epidemic of yellow fever than does he who habitually associates with dram-drinkers, or frequents the haunts of whisky-sellers. A man might contract this disease alone, but ninety-nine out of a hundred take it by associating with those who have it. A remarkable peculiarity of it is, that having had it affords no protection against a second or any other attack. The oftener one has it the more liable he is to it.

But, the worst of all is, this malady is deadly—it kills sometimes slowly, but always surely, its wretched victims, unless timely remedies be applied.

It makes up in the protracted sufferings of its crazed victims, and of their helpless families and afflicted friends, what it may lack in comparison with the rapidly devastating horrors of yellow fever or cholera. Other epidemics are usually limited in area and transient in duration; this is universal and perpetual, forever breaking the hearts and ruining the fortunes of tender wives and innocent children, and leaving them at last in widowhood and orphanage. A drunken father falls in the snow and is frozen to death; a promising son, the hope of his mother's heart, commits suicide in consequence of drinking; while robberies, murders and untimely deaths all over the land are justly attributed to this fearful epidemic. A catalogue of the deaths and crimes caused by drink in a single year would fill a volume. Constant familiarity with its effects seems to have disqualified many for appreciating the horrible character of this epidemic. It is killing, killing, killing, every day and every hour—spreading death and ruin over all the land. Yet nobody seems alarmed about it, and few seem to think of making any effort to resist its ravages. But the remedy is simple and easy of application. It may not only be prevented from spreading, but may be effectually stopped where it prevails, by a properly enforced quarantine. Whatever may be thought of quarantining against yellow fever, it is certain that no man can become a drunkard without intoxicating drinks, and that intoxicating drinks never go except where they are carried. Our laws permit each community to decide whether ardent spirits shall be sold within it or not. It is for the voters to say whether they will have drunkards or not. If the majority vote no, there can be none. Drunkenness will never cease while drams can be bought at every corner. Not one in a thousand would make his own liquor, even if the law allowed. Quarantine against the drinks and drunkards will disappear. Can a Christian, or any true lover of the peace and welfare of his country, sign a petition for "license to retail," or refuse to sign a counter petition? Would that the signers of petitions for "license to retail" could see what they do. While drinks can be had, drinkers will drink; banish the drinks, and drinking will cease. We challenge the world to show any other plan whereby the evil can be cured.

W. L. C. HESKETT.

Ministerial and Pulpit Improprieties.

Don't say "Three hundred twenty-first hymn." It has strong appearance of affectation. Say three hundred and twenty, as you would out of the pulpit.

The word lady or ladies is very seldom admissable in the pulpit. Never, except in incidental allusion to a particular person or persons.

It is in bad taste to say the least, in newspaper correspondence, to say we when I is meant. The plural may be legally used only when the writer can be supposed to be associated or classed with others. This is the ground, or supposed ground, of the regal or editorial we. There is distinguished license there, however, which we common people do not possess.

What rule requires or justifies the extending of the hands upward as high or above the head in dismissing a congregation?

Don't say individual when you mean person. Very few individuals are persons.

Write for a newspaper not when you have to say something, but when you have something to say.

If in dismissing the congregation you use the apostolic benediction in Second Corinthians xiii, 14 do so, but do not try to improve it by interweaving expletives. The rhetoric is already very sublime and perfect.

Compliments to editors by their correspondents are printed by the former because, as we may presume, they are gems both rare and precious.

Don't follow the practice of lawyers and loose-writing editors, and say is when be is meant.

When you call the congregation to prayer do so, and in a tone and manner sufficiently audible to be heard distinctly over the church. A mere flirt of the hands is neither eloquent, expressive, genteel, nor in good taste.

Don't speak of the ostentation and formalism of the Pharisees as though these errors were chargeable against the church at and before the Saviour's time. The Pharisees did not constitute one five hundredth part of the church, if, indeed, one in a thousand.

Don't say fact when you mean truth. Truths are not generally, or certainly not always, facts.

In preaching from, or alluding to Matthew xxviii, 19, don't call this instruction "the commission" unless you are a Roman Catholic, a Ritualist or high Baptist. All that authority to preach the gospel of salvation through Christ was possessed and exercised hundreds and thousands of years before by hundreds of thousands of ministers.

In reading the Scripture lessons before preaching read as though the congregation had never heard it before, and never expected to hear it again. Above all things, don't mumble.

Don't speak about "the calling of the Gentiles" as though it was something that occurred in the divine administration at some particular time subsequent to the days of Abel.

What is an "invisible church?" A church is made of men. Are any men invisible? In speaking of "the visible church," what does the adjective qualify?

Don't say that Cornelius was the first Gentile convert, because the Bible teaches that hundreds of thousands of Gentiles were converted long before his day.

Don't say the apostles were ignorant and uneducated men, because we know very well that some of them were well educated, and we have not a word of reliable testimony tending to show that they were not all such.

When the elder is administering the Lord's Supper, and asks the ministers present to come into the altar, go. Do not lay back until the hymn is half or nearly all sung. It looks awkward.

I do not invite anybody to come and partake of the Lord's Supper, because I have no proprietorship in the matter. I explain, or at least declare, it to be the duty—the absolute duty—of all present. The neglect of one duty does not justify the neglect of another.

Homiletical expositions or exhortations may be convenient, and even rhetorical in prayer, but petition is better. Let your requests be made known.

Generally you cannot, with propriety, speak of "the Jewish temple" without noting or leaving the inference clear which temple you mean. There were three you know—one in Jerusalem, one on Mount Gerizim, and one in Heliopolis.

How do you know that the eunuch, the Candacean treasurer, spoken of in the eighth chapter of Acts, was a heathen? Who said so? He seems to have been a Christian man before he met with Philip.

The practice very prevalent among us, of teaching that outside the church is a better place to become religious than inside, ought to be discontinued.

THE ONLY.

Only a hand to lead him
Away from the paths of sin,
Toward the beautiful pearly portal,
Where the pure shall enter in;
Away from the haunts of the wretched,
Away from the dreary night,
Away from the gloomy darkness,
To the ims of eternal light.

Only, but then the only
Make up the mighty all.
The only till a life time,
Until the Master's call.
Then we pass through the shiny portals,
To kneel at the dear Lord's feet
Where the only kind rejoicing
And rest and peace complete.

—Truth.

The Soul's Preciousness.

Two things constitute the preciousness of the soul. One is its immortality. Immortality! What is it? How describe it! Think of your out watching the lights of Heaven! Think of your seeing worlds crumbling and wearing away, and yet, after this, feeling the freshness of eternal life bounding within you!

You have seen men watch through a night, and, when day came, how haggard they looked in its light; but the soul will watch through a night of ages, and yet remain the same as when it entered into the shadows of the centuries. Blazing suns will go out, but in the light of new ones, which God will hang up as mighty chandeliers in the firmament, the bloom of immortality will still be seen. You have seen men outlive their generation—how white, and bent, and old! Yet in eternity race after race may be created, and pass away, but the soul will stand forth with the powers of an endless life.

The dust of ages may settle upon and put out the light of suns. It can never darken or extinguish the soul. The flight of cycles, that will wear away worlds, will fall like thistledown upon it. And out of it all, and brushing the cycles aside, as though they were thistledown, the soul will come forth with the unfailing freshness and undying vigor of eternity.

With face turned to the everlasting future, with step ever advancing, the soul will rouse up the ages, that like a flock of birds will fly up, and with whirring, but harmless wing, pass over; but the soul will press on forever and ever, to see other ages rise up, fly over, and disappear in the great eternity that is gone.

Another thing that constitutes the preciousness of the soul is its capacity, whether for good or evil, joy or suffering; to these should also be added knowledge. From its various capacities we single out one, that of suffering.

Perhaps the reader has long ago found out the soul's power to suffer, to agonize. It may seem to you, on recalling the past, that you have touched every chord in the great harp of Sorrow—touched it so as to bring out its deepest notes. The bare mention of suffering is to bring up recollections of sleepless nights, and a feeling of heart-soreness, and groans that you have groaned in anguish of spirit. You may think from this you know the soul's capacity. Yet we know from scriptural teaching this is only the "beginning of sorrows."

It may be you only know of its capacity by marking the suffering of others. There are cries that you have heard which ring in your ears to-day. There is a scene in my own life that will always remain with me. I was called to talk with an unconverted woman, who sat, a picture of despair, by the dead body of her child. In the extremity of her distress she grovelled before me, clutched my hand, and screamed out: "If I could only lay hold of Christ, as I now hold you!"

These lines will never meet her eyes, otherwise I would not have written them. My only reason for doing so now is to declare that, if I never knew before, her look, and grasp, and cry taught me then how much the soul can suffer.

The soul's capacity in this respect makes a greater impression on me than its capacity for joy; because, perhaps, I have seen more instances of remarkable suffering than joy. Let this be, however, as it may. When I remember this capacity of the soul, and then think of that soul in eternity, I am filled with horror.

This is the scene that rushes before me: An eternity that has no streams of alleviation, that does not blossom a single hope, but stretches away into the unmeasurable, itself an unmeasurable waste, the inhabitant of this eternity, a soul that is immortal, and that has an endless capacity for suffering, that can suffer on and on, and on and on, and yet live through all unwastingly.

They tell of the Jew that for a certain sin against Christ, upon the day of the crucifixion, was condemned to wander over the world for centuries. According to the legend, he wore sandals, in the bottom of which were nails, arranged in the form of a cross. By this peculiar mark his movements were known, and he could be traced everywhere—north or south in this country and that—on the mountain, in the desert, the mark of the cross was seen.

The last time noticed, the footprint appeared on the northern edge of Siberia—he had traveled, it seemed, as far as land went—and here stood looking out over stretches of sea and ice, as if he yearned to get away from the world and himself—out-travel the agony that drove him restlessly on.

But what is this picture compared to the state of the soul in eternity, that in sleepless consciousness, deathless regret, is doomed to wander on forever? Is it here, or there, or yonder? Wherever it goes it leaves its track—not a cross, but suffering.

It may stand on the jutting point of one age, and with burning look gaze toward another age coming in. And where it stands it leaves its track—eternal suffering. It may cross great deserts of time, upon which the winds of eternity are busy blowing about the dust of ages; in that very dust the soul leaves its track—eternal suffering.

Thus we leave the soul—a hopeless wanderer in the wilds of eternity—crossing deserts of infinitude that have no horizon and no rest; and, wherever standing or wandering, leaving its footprint—that footprint being always the same—eternal suffering.

Progress.

A rising from lower to higher principles marks development in the spiritual as well as in the natural world. It was the law of creation; it has been the watchword of spiritual progress. The mind of man has asserted its right and power of progress by development in every department of learning and science. From the lowest geological strata of the ancient world, through its buried flora and fauna, to the emerald plains and sweeping forests, upward to the empyrean dome and the gem-set stars in the ebon crown of night, mind has, moved on in its steady march, with a yearning after the invisible, and a propensity to discover new wonders. By a wonderful application of mechanical forces to machinery it has outstripped the wings of the wind. By charging thought with the electric fires of heaven it has annihilated space, and brought into intimate communication the most distant nations of the earth.

It has pleased God that all this human progress should contribute to the advancement of His great design. He has not wrought His plans wholly independent of man, but all has been made subservient to His will. "Even the wrath of man has been made to praise Him." So perfectly has this been done that many things, which could have come only as the result of an independent moral action on the part of man, seem to have been called forth by the royal edict: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord."

This is the best day the world ever saw. Every successive day we attain a point of intellectual and moral elevation above that of the day previous. Each day some new ray bursts from the great sun of truth, and eliminates the darkness from dubious and unsettled questions. Each day a stride is made toward better things and better times. Christianity grows with the light of each returning sun. It is fast demolishing the strongholds of superstition, and soon will have encircled in the arms of its love every sunny isle of the ocean. Besides, in Christian lands its influence grows in symmetry and healthfulness each day.

One of the most conclusive arguments for this theory is the respect paid to the representatives of Christianity, not alone by those who are themselves nominally religious, but also by the most abandoned and hardened. We will not pretend to deny, however, an indifference on the part of a large proportion of this element, but when they are brought fairly before its issues an acknowledgment of its utility, yea, in many instances, I might say, an unexpressed wish of "God speed," is the result.

We might introduce our own church by way of strengthening this position. It is presumed it will not be doubted that there is as much, if not more, substantial piety among Methodists to-day than ever before. Certain it is, be this as it may, we were never in a position to do so much good as now. There never has been a time when the influence of Methodism was so potent as now. Never have her representative men stood upon so high a plane as they now occupy. Certainly this must spring from advancement, both from within and without. The law of assimilation, that powerful auxiliary of Christianity, is preparing the way for wondrous results.

Methodism in Louisville.

MR. EDITOR: When penning my letters in Kentucky last autumn to your paper I had no thought of what "a tempest in a tea-pot" was thereby to be raised. However, I still live, and have seen no reason for taking back one word that was then written in all seriousness and kindness. My letters were based on personal observation, as well as information from attentive and reliable persons, some of whom were Methodists, and some of whom were not, and representing nearly all classes of people as well as callings. While the Southern Methodist, published in Louisville, and Bro. Lawson, and probably others, have differed in expressed opinions with me, yet the Central Methodist, edited by the Rev. Z Meek and the Rev. Dr. C. W. Miller, and others, have agreed with me. Bro. Lawson seems to labor under the impression that I had charged that "Methodism in Louisville was a failure," without any qualifications whatever. Such was not my charge, nor yet my meaning, as a reference to my letters will show. What I did mean was that our Southern Methodist Church had not grown in Louisville as it ought to have grown, nor had it increased as it should have increased in the State of Kentucky; and this comparative failure I attributed to "sky-scraping preaching," and to preachers and presiding elders living far away from their charges, instead of being right in the midst of their work. I admitted that our church was "holding its own," but asserted that it was not increasing as it ought to increase, and as it would increase if the gospel was preached as it ought to be preached, and if pastors and presiding elders lived in the midst of the people over whom they have charge, and the Discipline were properly enforced.

And, Mr. Editor, I assert the same thing concerning the church in New Orleans and in the State of Louisiana. I make no exception of the State of Mississippi. In neither State has our church grown as it would have grown had the preachers contented themselves with preaching "Christ Jesus and Him crucified," instead of trying to pluck the stars from the sky, or inveighing against the follies and vagaries of modern scientists, so called.

And, Mr. Editor, I might add (if not deemed personal or impertinent), that if the rules of itinerancy were more rigidly enforced in your Conference, so far as the city of New Orleans is concerned, the result might be a decided increase in membership as well as spiritual blessings. I should like to see the plan tried for a few years; not that your city preachers are not good men and able, but that I believe firmly in old-fashioned itinerancy and old-fashioned Methodism. Respectfully,

TOM L. MELLEN.

NATCHEZ, February 5, 1879.

What is Gambling?

In a sermon preached at Pine Bluff, Ark., by Rev. C. F. Evans, we find the following exposition of gambling:

Two definitions are given. "The risking of property upon a chance," and "the playing for money or other articles of value at games of hazard or skill." You will observe two things are requisite to constitute gambling—hazard and the absence of any equivalent. You will readily perceive, however, that gambling exists where neither cards, dice nor billiards are used, and that games of chance may be played without hazarding property.

Gambling occurs in commercial life. It is said one fourth of the business done in London is done dishonestly. Any one who has lived in Washington, or the capital of any State, knows that gambling on legislation of the country is carried on systematically. The English had their South Sea bubble, that finally bursted in the hearing of all the nations. Our coal oil well speculations have exhibited, in at least half their number, fraud on one side and gambling on the other. "Owners and operators" have issued gilt-edged circulars, signed by prominent men, whose co-operation a few "shares" secured; bought over some influential paper by a column of advertising; rented an office; hung up in their windows samples of "crude" and "clarified" products, and displayed a map of the wonderful sites with water privileges limited only by the cash of the "owners" and caprice of the artist. The result every one knows; a horde of people, impatient of the slow growth of fortune, have rushed with their honest savings into this game of "freeze out" in hopes of sudden affluence, and were fleeced, insulted and laughed at for their rapacity.

What but gambling is the genteel speculation in "futures"—gold, cotton and corn. A respectable merchant deposites $500 with some Christian broker, against losses on 100 bales of cotton, deliverable in sixty days, at a given price. Like the game of poker, he is likely to be called upon either to raise his deposite or pay his venture at the option of the broker. What is this but an out and out bet that he can furnish the cotton at a given price, unless there be an honest intention either to furnish the article if unsuccessful or accept it if successful? The courts of France, and many in the United States, have decided without this purpose the whole transaction is gambling. And yet, Christian men, who would resent an imputation of gambling, are beguiled into such speculations. In the hope of getting some valuable prize for nothing many people have cumbered themselves with useless articles bought of "Gift Stores;" and even children are stuffed with cheap paint and Plaster of Paris candy, and their fingers and ears are covered with pinchbeck jewelry won in "prize packages." It is astonishing how much of the field of morality can be hidden by a gold dollar held promisingly near to the eye; and how many men are doing a business beyond either their ability or their means.

Gambling is characteristic of the financial methods of many benevolent and religious enterprises. In 1567 England, for the improvement of her harbors, instituted a lottery with 400,000 tickets, at ten shillings each, to be drawn at the front door of St. Paul's Cathedral. The British Museum and Westminster Bridge were built by the same means. I know of a graveyard consecrated to the interment of the "elect," which was paid for by a raffle of two ponies. What is this but a man sitting on his own coffin and throwing dice with the devil for possession of his own body? In Louisville, Ky., is a famous lottery for the benefit of a public library; an adulterous union between knowledge and fraud, refinement and corruption. A pure people ought to forbid the banns. There are some churches who hold "fairs"—allowable enough if right-fully conducted—to build or repair churches and parsonages, but who trespass in the accursed thing "of raffles." Some generous soul has given, or some greedy one has bought with church funds, a gold-headed cane or "silver service." There is no harm here. It is church property. The chances are sold by a guileless maiden, and beautiful as religious. The chances are taken by church people; the dice are thrown in the most religious style by church members. "Won't the preacher get the gold-headed cane finally," "and will not the Holy Sacrament be served from the silver;" "and will not the proceeds strengthen or decorate the house of God," "or put gold lace on the pulpit?" An angel of light whispers: "No harm here." But afterward the same angel, with a mantle of night over his shoulders, stalks into the place with the air of and lawful claim of an owner, and says: "I'll preach here to-day, and to-night reserve the right of amending the discourse of the saintly stick who is employed here to say smooth things."

Another species of gambling occurs in claiming accuracy of judgment or in proof of strong personal convictions. It has not been a great while since, in England, Parliament adjourned on Derby day to witness a bet on the races. The Ascot race is an institution which commands universal attention. It would never do for the "grandest people under the sun" to be wanting in polished and fleet horses, or the courage to assert their superiority with an emphasis of a few thousand pounds. Occasionally, therefore, rich and poor, take holiday to watch these "beauties," with ribboned ears and gilded hoofs, like the winds, go coursing over the "turf," and you know it helps one's sight and sharpens his enjoyment if any amount, say five or say five hundred dollars, throw their light on the scene. Of course this is not gambling, though pools are opened from New York to San Francisco, and women are impoverished and merchants and their clerks are ruined, and thousands of men made poor to make other thousands rich—it improves stock. It is all right enough to destroy a man to make a horse; particularly if the horse has more sense and better virtue than the man.

Gambling is practiced in the pursuit of pleasure. Here is a cosy party at your house; all special friends. Supper over, fire chunked, table drawn, lamp trimmed, new, clean cards opened. Euchre is the game; just ten cents ante to make the game interesting. Next morning one says: "I won enough to do marketing for a week." Yes, that is the word—won. Yes, sir, you won it. In flaming stores, a back room, down stairs, or an unoccupied one on the second floor. Men take a drink, light a cigar and set down to poker, twenty five cents a game, just to count it. You call it pastime; the devil calls it gambling, and some day he will call it so loud you will hear it as you go thundering against the ragged rocks which line the bottomless pit.

The last kind I shall notice is gambling for money—a marked halt—an undisguised profession of money as the end. Such is the lottery. Even in the Louisville drawing the object of every ticket holder is to get much for little. This is an enterprise that appeals to the poor, by hope of a splendid prize and sudden affluence for small outlay. Immense profits impoverish those least able to suffer it. No man can afford to benefit others by sacrifice of his moral nature, nor can any man safely risk himself with sudden wealth that has cost him little. Honest thought and patient toil sober the man who is rewarded munificently, but rapid wealth without these, as many and varied instances prove, bewilder and poison the mind. Then there is the gambling hell, conducted at a given place by sporting men, who sometimes have no stand, managed for money solely. Men whose occupation is to gamble lose the desire to benefit others. They never profess themselves benefactors. It is not to instruct the ignorant, relieve the needy, comfort the sorrowful, unburden the oppressed, but to make money.

A thankful spirit has always fresh matter for thankfulness. To praise God for the past is the sure way to secure mercies for the future. Prayer and praise live or die together.—Romaine.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

REV. JOHN B. HIGGINBOTHAM, late of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Elbert county, Ga., August 27, 1802, and came with his parents to Louisiana in 1810. Being brought up from infancy to believe in and feel the importance of a change of heart, he was led, in early boyhood, to seek the forgiveness of his sins, and was hopefully born of the Spirit. For awhile he walked in the light of God's countenance, and rejoiced in a present salvation from sin. But, under the persistent derision, and even persecution of some of his boyish associates, he yielded to discouragement, and gave up the service of God. At the age of eighteen he was reawakened, and, after a season of deep penitence, was fully restored to the favor of God, and soon began to manifest that activity in the social meetings of the church, which was his most striking characteristic in all after life. He was married in 1826, and became the father of thirteen children, eight of whom are yet living, and all members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Of the five dead, four died in adult age, leaving the assurance that they were at peace with God. Those who were acquainted with Bro. Higginbotham's family government were not surprised at the early piety of his numerous family of children. He literally "brought them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and he kept the holy fire so constantly glowing on the home altar that it was to be expected they would catch the holy flame. He had a severe trial when he felt inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to preach the gospel. He was brought up at a time and in a country where educational facilities were very scarce, and the great trouble with him was his want of literary qualifications for the ministry. But, feeling the duty of preaching imperious, he dared not disobey the voice of the Spirit, and offered himself for such service as God would enable him to perform. At a Conference held in Tuscaloosa, Ala., late in November, 1830, he was admitted on trial in the traveling connection, and of the forty-eight years of his ministry he was on circuits seven years, colored missions, twelve; local, eleven; and superannuated, eighteen. Bro. Higginbotham was one of the most diligent laborers in the ministry, both in public and private, I ever knew. He was a thorough Wesleyan in doctrine, experience and practice. He read little outside of his Bible, the old leather bound standards of Methodism, and the church periodicals, in all the earlier years of his ministry. He excelled in pastoral visiting, always concluding his visit with "a word of prayer." It seemed easy for him to talk to everybody that had intercourse with him on the subject of religion. It was of him that Thomas Griffin said in a Conference held in Vicksburg, in December, 1832, that "he almost literally swept the earth in quest of souls," referring to his pastoral visiting. What he seemed to lack in the quality of his labors was more than compensated by the quantity. For several years he has been patiently waiting for his change to come. His life had been a scene of trials as well as triumphs, and he was willing to have it closed on earth that he might enjoy the better life above. On the eleventh of January, 1879, in the seventy-seventh year of his age, his release came. His mind was calm and his faith strong and triumphant. He said several times that day: "I am almost home," and adopted as his last utterance the language of the dying Wesley: "The best of all is God is with us."

MRS. SARAH ELIZABETH BROWN, wife of Dr. C. W. Brown, born in Virginia, June 10, 1832, educated in Barlywood Seminary, Maryland; married September, 1852; died near Vermillionville, La., December 27, 1878. She was cultivated above the standard of ordinary culture among cultivated ladies. She often spoke of herself as a child of prayer, and often spoke of the peace and joy she felt in her secret devotions when but a little girl. About twelve months after her marriage she experienced salvation through faith in Christ, and attached herself to the church, and from that day till her departure from earth, she was a living, active, joyous Christian. Every period of her life, after the deep experience referred to, was full of labors and yielded much fruit. After earnest conflict with her doubts, fears and guilt, her religious attainments became very remarkable. She gained in daily life a fullness of peace, a height of joy, a clearness of the witness of the Holy Spirit, that made her appear, when in comparative health, dwelling in a region of light and love. The scriptures were to her God's own words. She read them, she studied them, she applied them, and her comments in the light of God's spirit and God's love in her heart, were like revelations from above, so full of life, beauty and love. These gifts and graces were manifest to all who entered her charmed circle of spiritual life. When she had health to go in and out among us, or receive friends, she was seen as the gentle, loving mother, the kind, considerate friend, intent on urging all to the fullness of spiritual life. Young and old loved to hear her speak of the deep things of God, in which she seemed to surpass all around her, and have a fullness of joy and buoyancy of hope that made her, to the gifted and the humblest, the most pleasant of companions.

One could think such gentleness, purity and grace might be spared the shock of pain and the prolonged agonies of a virulent cancer, tearing away one by one the cords that hold up the beautiful tabernacle. Inward pains develop the tumor; medical skill is consulted; the truth, appalling to others, is made plain; her sufferings are to end in dissolution of the body. Instead of repining sadness or sorrow she finds a joyful acceptance of the appointment, an entrance upon a new train of thoughts, a mounting to a higher plain of spiritual life. Resignation, patience, fortitude, cheerfulness, in their richest sense, are lost in the fervor of her spiritual life, and joy of soul in conscious fellowship of suffering with her adorable Redeemer. Then begins the wonderful enlargement of capacity to love the members of Christ's body. The clear insight into the spiritual wants of near friends and members of the church. The loving messages to young friends; the short, beautiful, pointed prayers for blessings to suit their peculiar states; she realizing in her own heart God's word of promise. In her heart and mouth the word of God was "spirit and life."

Her apprehension of the scenes in the spirit world, as revealed by St. Paul and St. John, was so vivid and real as to make us feel when she spoke of the veritable presence of the blessed Saviour, of the assembly of the redeemed multitudes, ascribing thanksgivings and praise unto Him that had washed them in His own blood, as though the veil between heaven and earth was rent, and she living among the happy throng in spirit, love and joy.

When friends would express sympathy for her sufferings, she, with a loving smile, would reply: "It is best as it is, while my blessed Saviour is so near, and gives me so much peace and joy, and uses these pains to reveal to me so much of his love. I am in His hands, He knows best. He cheers this poor heart, and makes me happy in His love. I would be afraid to take the responsibility of having these pains taken away, and be be returned to perfect health. I am in His hands; His will is best." Her spiritual apprehension seemed to be clearer and stronger the nearer she approached dissolution.

At the last moments of earthly existence she seemed to enter into the rejoicing of the redeemed in heaven.

She called her husband's attention to the twelfth verse of the seventh chapter of Revelations and requested him to name this verse to her pastor, and added: "I can join the vast multitude in saying, 'Amen, blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power'"—at this word her voice failed, and I thought her dead; she rallied after a few moments and finished the verse—"and might, be unto our God for ever and ever, amen." Amen, the last utterance on earth. Amen! to the grand refrain of the redeemed in heaven.

MARY SALINA, wife of Rev. Jas. A. Biggs, and daughter of John B. and Brambly Yeager, was born March 24, 1856, and departed this life at the residence of her father, in Caldwell parish, Louisiana, January 29, 1879.

Sister Biggs was converted when quite a little girl under the ministry of Rev. Robt. A. Davis. In the fall of 1875 she, with seven others, obtained the blessings of entire sanctification at a little prayer-meeting held by Bro. Byars and myself one rainy Saturday, when the weather was too unfavorable for the congregation to assemble at the church. And ever after this she adorned her profession, as becometh a faithful follower of the meek and lowly Saviour.

About one week before her death she thought the messenger would very soon come. She exhorted her unconverted friends to seek the favor of God, and those church members who were indifferent on the subject of holiness she entreated to seek this precious experience or they would never see her again, encouraging those who were enjoying this blessing to faithfulness, told the preacher to preach holiness; said if she had not obtained this blessing before that it would be too late now; she said she knew that her heart was clean, and had been for some time, and now she had nothing to do but to wait for Jesus to come or send for her. She sang and talked till her voice entirely failed, then motioned to her husband to give her the parting kiss, then began spelling on her fingers, A-n-g (Angels I suppose), then threw up her hands and motioned that a great many had come, and with the sweetest smile upon her sainted face, the spirit soared away with the angels.

The writer preached her funeral to a large congregation and never witnessed a sweeter refreshing while trying to preach the gospel. Father, mother and many loved friends shouted aloud the praises of God around her precious remains.

MARY JANE MCCORD, wife of J. W. McCord, died at Oak Ridge, Morehouse parish, La., November 23, 1878. She was permitted to sojourn here fifty years, one month and twenty-three days, and was the mother of twelve children, five of whom preceded her to the spirit world. Her maiden name was Harris, and she was born in Dallas county, Ala. In November 1841, she left her Alabama home, and was married to J. W. McCord, October 16, 1861. In 1869, her home being in Bethel Co., she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, under the pastorate of R. S. Trippett. During the eight years of her residence at Oak Ridge she endeared herself to a large circle of friends who feel that earth is poorer and heaven more attractive. Her religious life, though unobtrusive, was deep and clear, and her influence for good was felt by those who came in contact with her. Not here can the value of her life be rightly estimated. Her husband and children mourn their irreparable loss, and the seat in the sanctuary is vacant. But our loss is her eternal gain. Her pure spirit has gone to the bright regions beyond, to the God who gave it, and the Saviour who redeemed it, and all the company of the blood washed.

HANNAH, THE MOTHER.

"The Master has come over Jordan,"
Said Hannah, the mother, one day;
"Is healing the people who throng Him,
With a touch of His finger, they say,
And now I shall carry the children,
Little Rachael and Samuel and John;
I shall carry the baby Esther,
For the Lord to look upon."

The Father looked at her kindly,
But he shook his head, and smiled—
"Now, who but a doting mother
Would think of a thing so wild?
If the children were tortured by demons,
Or dying of fever, 'twere well:
Or had they the taint of the leper,
Like many in Israel."

"Nay, do not hinder me, Nathan;
I feel such a burden of care,
If I carry it to the Master,
Perhaps I shall leave it there.
If He lay His hand on the children,
My heart will be lighter, I know;
For a blessing forever and ever,
Will follow them as they go."

So over the hills of Judah,
Along by the vine-rows green,
With Esther asleep on her bosom,
And Rachel her brothers between;
'Mong the people who hung on His teaching,
Or waited His touch and His word,
Through the row of proud Pharisees listening,
She pressed to the feet of the Lord.

"Now, why should'st thou hinder the Master,"
Said Peter, "with children like these?
Seest not how, from morning till evening,
He teacheth and healeth disease?"
Then Christ said: "Forbid not the children,
Permit them to come unto Me;"
And He took in His arms little Esther,
And reached He all on His knee.

And the heavy heart of the mother
Was lifted all earth-care above,
As He laid His hands on the brothers,
And blessed them with tenderest love;
As He said of the babes in His bosom,
"Of such is the kingdom of heaven."
And strength for all duty and trial,
That hour to her spirit was given.

A Letter from Madagascar.

ANTSIRABE, Madagascar, Aug. 8, 1878.

While Africa is absorbing the attention of the religious world, it appears strange that this island of Madagascar, one of the largest on the globe, and almost an integral part of that continent, should be so neglected by our Board of Missions. Its government has recently been converted to Christianity—that of the English Episcopal creed—having abjured heathenism about fifteen years ago; and as many of its subjects have followed its example, it happens that they are now greatly in want of teachers.

Some of the missionaries laboring among them come from Norway, and the others from England; and these unfortunately have a strong tendency toward ritualism. They all teach the young natives, and in a few towns have schools for the children of foreigners also; but the field is very extensive, and there is room for many more workers, especially for the class that could teach trades. These islanders are entirely ignorant of many arts that would add not only to their material welfare, but also to the improvement of their mind.

Regarding the climate, although much has been said against it, it is not worse than that of some of our Southern States. The fever prevailing here is not as bad as reported by the early settlers, who suffered from their own excesses, and then shielded their reputation, saying that they were the victims of a deadly climate. Those reports have come down to us unquestioned, but they cannot stand a cross-examination.

During the three years that I have been in this place, I have not heard of one single death from fever, even in localities where medicines could not be found. Nearly all the casualties occurring can be traced to the use of brandy or to improper conduct; and the rest to natural causes. I have heard of only two or three strangers who, unable to withstand the malarial of certain places, were obliged to leave. But it is fair to say that the frequent attacks of malarial to some temperaments is a source of great annoyance.

The capital of Madagascar, Antananarivo, is very healthy. Fever is unknown there.

The language is very easy to learn, and contains no word which an English-speaking person could not pronounce. It is very simple in its construction. The verb has only three tenses—the past, present and future. These are expressed by prefixes, so that there is no other modification to it in its conjugation. The Hova dialect is the only written one, and is understood by nearly all the inhabitants. It is the language used by the Queen and the government officials. The other dialects do not differ from it in a grammatical sense.

The Malagasys belong to the Ethiopian race, although not as dark as the Livingstonians. They are a peaceful, kind-hearted people, with many good and bad qualities. Quarrels are of rare occurrence among them. They are hospitable toward strangers, and respectful toward foreigners, whose mental superiority they have been long accustomed to acknowledge.

Life is much more safe among these people than in most highly civilized countries. Among their defects the principal one is laziness. It is carried so far that they cultivate rice only through dire necessity, and then depend entirely upon Providence for the rest of their food. They are the greatest liars in creation, and will tell a lie for the very love of so doing. Their mendacity is surpassed only by that of the Arabs and the Hindoos; but I believe their case is not without remedy. They are also addicted to petty thieving. They will, for instance, steal rice, salt, or anything which may be used and is of little value, such as a knife, an axe or food; but they will never commit burglary in an inhabited dwelling.

Drunkenness has been introduced among them by foreigners, and is becoming the curse of the country. This evil is constantly kept up by the regular shipments of rum made in the islands of Mauritius and Reunion. Another evil, not less to be regretted, is the influx of criminal classes from these islands. Thus far, however, this bad influence has been exerted only on the sea coast. The burglaries committed in the sea port of Tamatave, on the east coast, are exclusively the work of that class, and the natives have no hand in them except as the receivers of the stolen property.

Living expenses are forcibly low in consequence of the reluctance of the natives to cultivate the land. Rice being the only article of food and cheap enough, it necessarily becomes the main support of life. Beef can be had every day at the capital, and also in two or three other villages on the coast, but nowhere else. The settler must raise his own vegetables and chickens; he could not find any in the country unless occasionally, and to secure a supply of milk he must own a cow. Were it not for the few Hindoos and foreigners, who cultivate vegetables, none could be found in the market of Tamatave, one of the most important cities of the island, on the east coast.

Servants can be had at one or two dollars per month according to circumstances; but not according to their efficiency, for they are unacquainted with our customs and must be taught. Personal expenses are moderate, much more so than in the United States. House rents vary according to accommodation and location from two to thirty dollars per month at Tananarive. This last price includes large frame houses, separate kitchen houses and vast yards.

This brief sketch is sufficient to give a general idea of a country where missionary labor is so much needed; and where the path has already been rendered smooth by the conversion of the government and all its various officials.

Romanism has been losing ground, especially since the downfall of the French empire; and may be more easily checked by an addition of helpers from America. The number of foreign Protestants in the island is altogether too small to be able to support a missionary. The natives are and will be for a long time dependent on foreign missions for their instruction.

The United States is doing so much for other countries, why should it not do something for this, which is waiting for and willing to receive some of that generosity which shall give light to their souls, and enable them to take a position among the civilized countries of the world?—Christian Intelligencer.

A New Discovery.

Dr. Hopewell, in his lecture on "The Bible and Science," relates this amusing but most instructive anecdote. In various parts of the county of Durham, and indeed at many points all round the coasts of England, there are submarine forests; trees which once grew on the dry land on the borders of the sea, now sunk beneath its surface, covered at high water, but exposed in part or altogether at low water. Some twenty years ago the great dock on the Tyne was made, and many trees and horns of ancient animals were found embedded in the silt of Jarrow Slake. One of these was standing upright, but was without its head. Its top had evidently been cut off; there could not be any mistake about the fact. Sir William Armstrong, the late Robert Stephenson, and Mr. Harrison, the Northeastern Company's engineer, were greatly interested. It was concluded that some woodman of very ancient times had cut the tree, and that it was a most striking evidence of the extreme antiquity of the human race. In haste Prof. Owen, the renowned palæontologist of the British Museum, was sent from London. One Sunday morning was spent by all these gentlemen wading in the slush and mud inspecting this wondrous relic. Their conclusion was unanimous. The next morning a friend of mine, to whom Prof. Owen had sent his card with the expression of a wish to see some horns he had from the same site, was present also. He asked Prof. Owen to what conclusion they had come. The professor replied that they were all unanimous, and that the evidence was most satisfactory. My friend said: "You have not been inspecting an old cut at any rate, for I had some pieces cut off that tree a few days ago, and have them now at home." The assembled company declared it was impossible. My friend assured them of the fact, and said: "Have you seen the man who first uncovered this tree?" They said they had not, and Prof. Owen was at once struck with the importance of having that man's evidence. The man was sent for. My friend told him what the man would tell him, for my friend knew all about it, and besides that would never have been so deceived, for reasons I could give, even if he had not known the true history, but I will let Prof. Owen tell the rest in his own words. He told the story himself at Leeds some years afterward, and this is what he said. After giving his account of the portion of the story I have already related, and saying that he had been told that the navvy who first uncovered the tree had himself cut the head of it off to lay down a sleeper for the tramway, he says: "The man was sent for, and on his arrival he declared that the tree pointed out was the one he had cut." Prof. Owen goes on to say—and we should mark this—"It was endeavored to be explained that that was impossible, as the place had not been excavated before" (it had got covered up again since his first excavation,) "but looking," says Prof. Owen, "with supreme contempt upon the assembly of geologists and engineers, the man persisted in the identification of his own work, and exclaimed 'the top of the tree must be somewhere,' upon which," says Prof. Owen, "I offered half a crown to the first navvy who would produce it. Away ran half a dozen of them, and in a few minutes they returned with the top. Never," says Prof. Owen, "had I so narrow an escape from introducing 'a new discovery' into science, and never had I a more fortunate escape."

A HIDDEN DANGER.—The following passage is from a discourse by Buckminster, in the year 1811, at the burial of a clergyman. The important thought here so strikingly expressed must some time have occurred, we may presume, to most clergymen who have been long in the ministry. The danger is the more to be feared, because it is insidious. Its approaches are so guarded and imperceptible that we may fall under its withering power ere we are aware of it:

"The succession and variety of joys and sorrows, at which we are called to be present in our profession, tend to make our hearts rather a highway of sentiment than a fruitful soil of good affections, and leave us talking much of the last things, and yet thinking little of them. It is one of the infelicities, or at least one of the dangers of our employment, that we, who are constantly engaged in impressing sentiments on others, come at last to imagine that we feel their power, and believe those to be the practical principles of our conduct which are the most familiar topics of our discourse. The rapid contrasts, also, of life and death, funerals and births, sick chambers and joyful occasions, which are continually calling our attention, and this, too, in public, if they do not harden our hearts, often leave them strangely unaffected, and we become as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals, which sound, as they are struck, the tones of joy or the knell of mourning."

The London Record, in announcing the death of the Princess Alice, says: "We are enabled to state, on the authority of those who had the opportunity of conversing with the Princess very recently, that whatever temptation might in former years have beguiled her royal highness to admire the writings of Strauss, the author of the infidel 'Life of Christ,' a complete change had passed over her mind. At first that terrible calamity which deprived her of her little son seemed to have produced only 'the sorrow of the world that worketh death,' but gradually it became, by God's mercy, the means of leading her to think, so that she finally came to seek and find peace in a true faith in Jesus Christ, revealed in the Scriptures of truth as the only Saviour for sinners."

Religious Intelligence.

—The receipts of the British Baptist Missionary Society during the last year were $250,000, being $35,000 more than the previous year.

—The second General Conference of the Australasian Wesleyan Methodist Church has been held at Sydney. Four annual Conferences were represented by 91 delegates.

—The Baptist missions in Burmah were to celebrate May 15 and 16, as the fiftieth anniversary of the baptism of Kothahbyu, the first Karen convert, and afterward styled the Karen Apostle.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church has now an excellent chance in Ireland with those of the Disestablished Church who have been unsuccessful in having the word "regeneration" deleted from the baptismal offices.

—The Baptist Basseiu Sgan Karen Association, Burmah, will celebrate on the 15th and 16th of this month the fiftieth anniversary of the baptism of the Karen convert, Kothahbyu. A memorial hall bearing his name will be dedicated on the occasion.

—John G. Whittier, in reply to a gentleman of Cincinnati, who wrote asking about his views on future punishment, says: "I am not a Universalist, for I believe in the possibility of the perpetual loss of the soul that persistently turns from God in the next life as in this."

—The remarkable revival influences which continues to sweep over the Scandinavian Churches in Europe can be compared to nothing but the revival of the times of the Reformation. It seems like the breaking of that tidal wave over the dead orthodoxy of the whole Scandinavian Church.

—The first Baptist in Berlin was baptized in 1837 by the Rev. J. G. Oncken, of Hamburg. The Rev. Mr. Lehman was chosen pastor of a church of seven members, which he has lived to see grow up to one of 800, of whom between 300 and 400 live in the city. The pastor has been assisted since 1863 by his son.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church has become so important in England as to be made the subject of discussion in the Convocation of the Established Church. The Bishop of Lincoln said that, "the heresy," as he was pleased to call it, "is assuming large proportions," there being already six churches in England.

—There are now nearly a million of Roman Catholics in England and Wales, and these are divided according to their nationality, thus: English Roman Catholics, 179,000; foreigners, 52,000; Irish, 742,560. In 1801 twenty-seven per cent of the population were Romanists, now only eighteen per cent of the people belong to that communion.

—The Rev. C. H. A. Dall, writing from India to the Christian Register of the schism in the Brahmo Somaj, which we announced some time ago, says:

"I think full half of the churches—one hundred and twenty or one hundred and forty—that for years have looked to him as their leader have left or are leaving him. Meantime, there is little fear that the church as a whole will be harmed by the shock."

—Universalism during the past year made an increase of fifty-two parishes, 500 families, 46 churches, 2,570 church-members and twenty church edifices in the United States and Canada. The value of its church property increased $70,000, and there was a gain of 45 in the number of Sunday-schools. At the same time the statistics have fallen off in some other respects. There are 912 fewer Sunday-school scholars and eleven fewer preachers. Colleges and academies have diminished in number by one; students in them by 148, and their assets $100,000. In the United States the denomination has 737 churches and 711 ministers.

—A missionary, who recently distributed the Bible among Russian soldiers and Turkish prisoners, says: "I have visited the two Pashas who are Russian prisoners, and have been sent as exiles to Mitau. Shefket Pasha, Ogner Pasha and Zadyk Bey live in the same street, near our house. I was very kindly and politely received. I presented Shefket Pasha with an Arabian Bible which I had received from St. Petersburg. Ogner Pasha with a Turkish Bible, and Zadyk Bey with a Turkish New Testament. The last named pressed the book to his forehead, to his mouth and his heart, and then put it by. I asked him to read something out of it, upon which he replied: 'This is a holy book, therefore I dare not read it in my uniform. But I will read it every morning and evening, when I have washed my hands and put off my military uniform.'" —Liquor-drinking appears, according to a missionary of the London Society, to be the great national evil of Madagascar. In obedience to the Queen's proclamation of 1876 for bidding traffic in ardent spirits, no liquor is sold openly in Imerina; but in other parts of the island there appears to be no restriction on its sale and use. The liquor most used is the Toaka, a strong native decoction. So far as churchmembers are concerned there is little trouble. It is but seldom that there is a case of discipline for drunkenness. The Antananarivo Annual mentions a singular custom of the Salakalva, who inhabit the entire west coast and, of whom comparatively little is known: Whenever a death occurs in a village, all the inhabitants desert it and move to a distance from it. In consequence, their houses are of the frailest description and the people lead a very unsettled life.

LUTHERAN HOME MISSIONARY CONVENTION.—The churches connected with the Lutheran General Synod held their first missionary convention in Omaha, beginning May 14th, its purpose being to awaken a deeper interest in the evangelization of the West. A paper presented by Prof. Samuel Aughey, Ph. D., of Lincoln Neb. claimed that of the population of Nebraska, estimated at 400,000, 52,000 are of Lutheran origin, and ought to be in Lutheran churches. The same proportion he asserted would hold good of Kansas and Iowa, making the aggregate Lutheran population of these states nearly 300,000. Resolutions were adopted touching upon the "Peculiarities and Difficulties of the Work;" affirming "The Claims of Home Missions;" urging a larger Sunday-school work among German and Scandinavian children; and recommending a Western theological seminary, and the appointment of traveling missionaries for Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas.

SECTS IN ENGLAND.—In Whitaker's Almanack for 1878 there is a list of the religious sects which have certified places of worship in England and Wales. Why Scotland and Ireland are not included, does not appear, for Whitaker tells almost everything about the United Kingdom that any man can want to know; but for some reason this list is limited. But even within England and Wales it is large enough. It contains 154 titles; though among these there are, perhaps, half a dozen duplicates. It is interesting partly because it shows how far the impulse of separation can go. Of course one-fourth of the titles in the list would cover three-fourths of the places of worship, and the greater part of the sects are insignificant in numbers. That is the same as to say that the peculiar notions of a few people have thrust themselves forward as the material for a new creed, and the reason for a separate organization. The manifold divisions of the Presbyterian body do not appear in this list, for Scotland is omitted. But there are divisions enough among the Baptists, for the name appears eleven times. There are seventeen Wesleyan or Methodist sects, besides "chapels of other Wesleyans than those enumerated." There are titles that were suggested by religious zeal, such as "Revivalists," "Revival Band," "Hallelujah Band," "Glory Band," "Free Gospellers," and "Free Grace Christians." There is a considerable class of aggressively non committal names, like "Apostolics," "Spiritual Church," "Universal Christians," "Unsectarian," "Free Christians," "Followers of the Lord Jesus Christ," "Christians owning no name but the Lord Jesus," and "Christians who object to be otherwise designated." And there is a class of odd titles, some of which give evidence of the wide range that is allowed to the name "religious worship." In this list we find the "Church of Progress," "Church of People," "Eclectics," the "Halifax Psychological Society," "Humanitarians," "Independent Religious Reformers," "Peculiar People," "Progressionists," "Secularists," "Rational Christians," and "Recreative Religionists." In addition to "Episcopalian Dissenters," we have "Protestant Members of the Church of England," and (what a title for a sect!) "Protestants adhering to Articles 1 to 18, but rejecting Ritual." The number of separate bodies is not diminishing, for eleven titles appear this year for the first time, among which are the "Primitive Congregation," and the "Believers in the Divine Visitation of Joanna Prophetess of Exeter."—Brethren, let us follow the things that make for peace, and keep our individual notions from claiming too large a place.—Watchman.

Our Young People.

MAMMA'S RETURN.

Three little waiting children
Eagerly watching the door;
Harry and Charlie and baby,
Hazel eyes two, blue eyes four.

Three little noisy children,
Romish and full of play;
At every sound—"Hush! listen!
Isn't somebody coming this way?"

"I do believe that is mamma!"
"No, it's only the umbrella man!"
"I don't b'leeve she's ever coming;
She'll stay just as long's she can!"

A sound of steps on the pathway,
And eagerly rush all three.
"It's mamma! It's mamma! Come Charlie,
Come baby, come Harry, let's see!

"Oh, mamma, we're so glad to see you!
We're tired, so we can be!
We love you a thousand millions!
Anything in that bundle for me?"

—Wide Awake.

From Our Little Friends.

Here is a good letter from one of our little friends. Where Miss Pearl lives we do not know, as her post-office is not given:

FEBRUARY 7, 1879.

Please find enclosed $1 for Mr. Lamhuth in China—missionary money, first installment, for the month of January. I hope to be able to send him as much every month during this year. How I wish I could give more! I am eleven years old, and am named

PEARL ANNIE PARSONS.

MADISON STATION, Miss., Jan. 1, 1879.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years old, and thought I would write you another letter for your good paper. I love to read the letters in the children's column, and the verses too. We have got a good Baptist preacher. He preaches so that children can understand. His name is Mr. Gray. When I wrote my first letter I had a missionary hen. I sold her chicks, and sent the money to the missionary cause in China and Jamaica.

We have had a terrible dull, cold Christmas, the ground frozen the most of the time, and it is now snowing a big snow, the ground is frozen hard, and the snow five inches deep. Grandpa takes the ADVOCATE. I would like to have your picture. Please don't put my letter in the waste basket.

Your little friend,

JENNIE E. COLEMAN.

Note by the Editor.—We are compelled to omit questions hereafter. Short letters from our little friends are always welcome, though we cannot always publish them. The editor may have his picture taken some time, and then he will be able to gratify some of his little friends.

PENSACOLA, FLA., Sept. 30, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy ten years old. We have a Sunday-school. Mr. W. W. Richards is our superintendent. I have read the New Testament through this year. I am now reading the Discipline of our church. Papa takes the ADVOCATE. I like to read the children's column. Hoping to see this in print, I remain your friend,

CHARLIE R. JOHNSON.

The Origin of the Jumping-Jack.

Come with me to the park this fair day, for I wish to show you a certain carriage and its occupants, and tell you a story.

In pleasant weather, the scene is gay and grand with multitudes bleing thither for recreation and country sights, odors and surroundings. The rich and the poor of all ages and classes, afoot, on horseback and in carriages, make a living panorama of the shaded walks and graded drives.

But here comes the "turn-out" for which we have been waiting; a magnificent span of dapple-grays, by far the most powerful team we have seen; a carriage to match, roomy and costly, but not gaudy; a driver not in livery, as many are, but looking just the man for his work; and such a load as are making merry within—every one of them a hunchback! Yes, from the crooked gentleman on the back seat to the little fellows up by the driver, are all hunchbacks; well dressed, happy-seeming, but with a wistful look—and, as they roll by, you see in them the introduction of my little story.

Something like twenty years ago, a miserable brick house in a back alley was the home of Archibald Ramsay, a Scotch carpenter. He worked down-town in a shop, making cornices, molding, mantels, and a variety of the more elaborate parts employed in finishing houses. Every evening he took home pocketfuls, and often handfuls also, of bits and ends from the shop.

These oddly shaped fragments of soft, sweet-smelling pine furnished amusement for poor little Alec, Mr. Ramsey's hunchback boy; and when they had served this purpose, they were used as kindling in the kitchen stove.

There was a household of little Ramseys, of whom Alec was the oldest, and when he was amused, so were the others, thus giving the overworked mother time for other duties.

Alec was sixteen years old, and not taller than an average boy of ten. He was very much deformed, and had he lived in an age and country of kings seeking dwarfs and human oddities for "court fools" or "jesters," he would have been a prize to some iron-handed tyrant. His shoulders were almost as high as his head, his arms hung out loose and dangling, and the rest of his body was shrunken and slender to a most pitiable degree. But whoever, with a tender heart, looked into his great, questioning eyes and noted his broad, fair forehead and his clean, delicate hands, would soon forget the sad shape in the nobility of the face.

I need not linger to speak of his studies, which, all unaided, he pushed along with success; nor of his constancy in the Sunday-school, where he was a universal favorite. It is about his play with the bits of pine from the shop I wish to tell you.

Many a droll pile he built on the kitchen-floor, many a funny thing he whittled out to amuse the little ones; many a comical toy he made and gave away to neighboring children. Often he said, and oftener he thought, "What can I whittle that will sell?" For only money seemed likely to bring him the changed life for which he longed. Once, when he sold for a few pennies a queer little pine trinket, his father stroked his silken hair and said:

"Ah, mé puir bairnie, I dinna ken but ye may mak' your fortune wi' your knife."

How that little piece of encouragement rang in his ears and stimulated him to think and whittle, whittle and think!

One genial afternoon in May, Alec crept out to enjoy the balmy air, and, by the noise of a crowd of urchins on a vacant lot at a little distance, was drawn in that direction. There he saw a colored boy, named Jack, attempting, for the amusement of party, all sorts of pranks in imitation of circus performers. Bare-headed and clothed in striped red and yellow garments of coarse quality, the negro almost seemed made of India-rubber.

Alec watched his capers in amazement. Never before had he seen such antics, or even thought them possible. It was no wonder that the frail, stiff-jointed little hunchback dreamed it all over again, as he did that night.

The next morning his whittling genius took shape from this event, and before noon he had produced a rude pine image of the negro—head, arms and legs loosely hung with bits of broom-wire, and the whole curiously arranged, so that by working a string, it would jump, nod, and turn somersaults, and go through quite a series of contortions. With colored pencils, of which he had some cheap specimens, he blackened its head, neck, hands and feet, reddened its lips, whitened its eyes and rudely striped in yellow and red the body, all in imitation of the little negro gymnast. Before it was completed, his younger brother, who had been with him the day before, named it "Jumping Jack." And in the afternoon, when he went to the vacant lot and exhibited it to the youngsters there, it was not only universally but boisterously hailed by the same name. When he returned home, he brought, instead of the Jumping-Jack, a silver half-dollar, for which he had sold the toy to an eager, well dressed lad of his own age. And not only this, but he had orders from the boys for a half-dozen more, to be made as soon as possible.

Oh, what a proud, glad heart beat within that deformed little body of Alec's! How his temples throbbed! How elastic his step! What flashing eyes! What a sketch of wild and hopeful talk he unwound to his mother! So much money for his whittling, and a chance for more and more! Castles, sky-high and star-bright.

But I have not told you all.

That evening he whittled, and the next day he whittled, and before night had added to his capital three more shining half-dollars. The next day he doubled his money. The demand for Jumping Jack increased. Boys came to the door, silver in hand, to get what he had not time to make.

His grave Scotch parents began to hold serious counsel over the matter. If Alec could find such sale for these pine images in that neighborhood, why, the whole city would require thousands; and what would sell to delighted children in one city, would sell elsewhere also. If they could supply the market, a fortune might readily be made.

Scotch blood, once aroused and challenged, is sanguine and venturesome.

But it would be uninteresting to repeat all the details; so the rest of my story shall be brief.

Alec's Sunday-school teacher who was a lawyer, procured for him a patent on Jumping Jacks of every description; a rich old uncle of Alec's mother built him a factory and started him in business; and, within a year from the afternoon when the poor lad wondered at the pranks of the colored boy, Jumping-Jacks from the Ramsey factory were selling in great numbers all over America.

Truly Alec did mak' a fortune wi' his knife."

To school he went; into a better house, all their own, the family moved; easier circumstances, better health, less weariness, and ample means for doing good, came to the Ramseys.

But the best point in my story is that a fine asylum and school for hunchbacks, free to the poor, is one of the noble enterprises to which Alec has been chief contributor.

Those deformed lads in the carriage yonder are from the "Ramsey Asylum for hunchbacks."

That was Alec's carriage, and that "crooked gentleman on the back seat" was Alec himself. Every fair afternoon he is out in this way, taking a load of "his boys," as he calls them, and thus, as often as once a fortnight he gives every inmate a turn in the park.—I. E. Beman, in St Nicholas.

A bright little girl of five Summers was heard to remark to her brother, who is only seventeen months younger than herself: "Hermann, you may live to see the next Centennial, but I shan't."

Aiming at the Conscience.

"From the heart and to the heart" is the well-worn expression, but this may mean pathetic and glowing utterance that scarcely touches the moral sensibilities. Abundance of tears are shed at the theater, and over the pages of an exciting, and possibly an immoral novel. A congregation may be in a sympathetic frenzy, and everybody deeply moved, and there may be no contrition for sin, and no coming to Christ. The tear of penitence is something different from all other tears. It is not quite the same as the tear of other sorrow. To be more definite we should prefer "from the conscience and to the conscience." This was Paul's way of putting it: "But by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

There are lovers of science to whom a discourse on science would be highly acceptable, men of learning who would be delighted with classical lore, and others whose taste and imagination would be gratified by careful and exquisite embellishment. Tastes differ, no doubt, but there is a wide range, in the line of pleasing and entertaining, in which the conscience may be almost wholly neglected. What ought to be the main thing? Nothing has been done toward the salvation of the soul until the conscience has been reached. People may respect intellect, admire genius, and be profoundly impressed by the skilled and acute logician. Wit, humor, sarcasm, pathos and imagination will draw attention and secure applause. But what of all this if none are convicted of sin, and if none are brought to repentance, or led to saving faith?

The highest commendation of the Christian man or minister is that he commends himself to every man's conscience. In this he goes beyond all other praise, and leaves all other applause at an almost infinite distance behind him. While it is the right aim it is the only one that can touch every man. The learned are few, the men of science are very scarce, the deep reasoners, and those of a philosophical cast, are a small minority. Those of æsthetical pretensions and refined culture represent no considerable class. Every man, however, has a conscience, and the manifestation of religious truth is exactly fitted to reach it. True enough men may be fleshly minded, their foolish hearts may be darkened, and the conscience may be ignorant and perverted, but there is something left in nearly all, to which the truth appeals, and with which the Holy Spirit strives. It is that in men to which every good and holy man can commend himself. The character and life of a good man will commend him to the conscience of the ungodly. He may be talented, energetic, successful, distinguished in many ways, and yet, if he walks with God, and puts on Christ, he will be manifested first of all to the conscience of every man. He may not be loved by wicked men, he may be anything but popular with those whose vices he condemns, but the conscience in the sinner that disturbs his repose, and lashes him for his vices, will secretly approve the righteous character.

But even in this wicked world the consistent religious life inspires more respect than persecution. The sermon that deals faithfully with the conscience will be longest remembered, and he that preaches it will, in the end, secure the sincerest and most enduring regard of the most depraved. It is so in Christian example. That which manifests the truth without compromise, that never shrinks from the path of duty, and that is always firmly in the right, will command homage from all consciences not altogether seared. There are lives, formally identified with the Christian profession that make no distinctly religious impression upon the world in which they move. There are women professing godliness who move in their own circles of society, who impress others as accomplished, beautiful, gifted, but there is nothing in their conversation that savors of Christ. There are men, Christian after a certain type, who are known as sagacious in business, genial and agreeable in their social relations, but the world knows nothing of them as the salt of the earth.

The Christian's reputation may be dear to him. It cannot be a matter of indifference. But what is the reputation that he values? The minister may not be careless in this matter, but much depends on the kind of reputation he covets. His work is with the consciences of men. What is his reward but this: That he commends himself to every man's conscience in the sight of God. To be solicitous about anything else, or to labor for other fame than this, is a weakness, if not a sin. Whatever commendation, or for whatever praised, he has failed in all that is highest and best if this be not the chief result. Whether in preaching or in living, this is the commendation to be sought.

What to do With Chinese.

The Chinese resisted the intrusion of foreigners into their country for many centuries. Like their Japanese neighbors, they believed that non-intercourse with Western Christians was best for their own interests as a people. They wished to preserve their institutions and customs, their laws and religion, and to shut out the contaminating influences of foreign vices. But the Christian powers—notably England and the United States—regarded this attitude as unreasonable and intolerable, an outshoot of ignorance and bigotry, and in a manner compelled the celestials to open communications, and to make commercial treaties with them. Protection to trade and religious missionaries was insisted on and secured. Then came the very natural turn of the Chinese tide toward the lands with whom these relations had been established. The gold of Australia drew them thither by the thousands, and the gold of California attracted them there. Those that came to our shores sent back a good report. There were mines to be worked, railroads to be built, unlimited domestic service, broad fields to be cultivated, and a vast continent, but partially populated, open to them. The steamship lines afforded all desirable facilities for the living Chinese to come, and for the dead to return. At home they were as thick as sardines in a box, every rood was crowded, every city and village overflowed.

Why should they not come? Had not the Christian nations declared that non-intercourse was barbarous, and savored of weakness and imbecility? Had not these same nations compelled them to receive their missionaries, merchants, and adventurers? Now, however, a note of alarm is sounded. These yellow men are coming in swarms and in avalanches, and an inundation of heathenism threatens to swallow up our Christian civilization. Turning China on to America is like turning Lake Superior into a mill-pond. It is four hundred millions to forty millions. Fifty millions could come over, and China would scarcely miss them. They were opposed to this open and free intercourse, but, since the Christians would have it so, we go to them, and they come to us, only their coming in such overwhelming numbers is more than we dreamed of or bargained for. Shall we confess at last that there might have been wisdom and justice in the Chinese policy of non-intercourse, and now adopt it for ourselves? But rights and policies must be reciprocal. If we exclude the Chinese from America, must we not concede their right to exclude us from China? Their national experience runs through thousands of years, and they have learned to be suspicious of foreign manners and customs. We, as a nation, are a hundred years old, and are beginning to feel the same way.

It will, however, be difficult to close the door that has been thrown open. There is a valuable commerce at stake, and the great empire is dotted with our trading and missionary stations. All the Chinese ask is that the Christian nations take their own medicine—that they submit to a policy which they had dictated to them at the mouth of the cannon and at the point of the bayonet. What are Christians to do? They are anxious to give the gospel to China, but the heathen, with their idols and abominations, are equally anxious to come to America. Are we afraid that the joss houses will supplant the churches, and that the followers of Confucius and the Buddhists will overpower the disciples of Christ? And then the politicians are in a strait. It is an old doctrine that our shores are the asylum of the oppressed from all lands. All men are free and equal. Manhood suffrage is a powerful text. To exclude men "on account of race, color or previous condition," has been regarded by a certain school as abhorrent to enlightened views of human rights. But the laboring classes are clamoring for the limitation of Chinese immigration. The chief opposition probably comes from this source. Where the Chinese are the thickest, and where their presence is felt in the labor market seriously, and where they are most intimately known, there the aversion to them is most pronounced.

The politicians will watch the drift of public opinion, and will follow the tide of voters. The Chinese question bids fair to overshadow those of the negro and the Indian. The black man and the red man are long and unsolved problems. They have been thorns in our sides from the beginning of our national life. And now the almond-eyed yellow man comes to trouble and perplex us, and threatens to be the most formidable of all. It is useless to chaffer about abstract principles, or to assert that there is nothing in race or color or previous condition that should be permitted to affect the questions of suffrage and citizenship. Our Christian civilization must first of all take care of itself. Our political institutions are the work of white people, and in their custody. This trust has been committed to them, and it is their high and bounden duty to keep it inviolate. The supremacy of the white man, locally and nationally, is an essential condition of our safety and prosperity. Whatever measures are necessary to maintain this supremacy are justifiable objects of legislation.

It seems to us that the perils from Chinese immigration are exaggerated. While we doubt the necessity of excluding the Chinese at the present time, and believe that their welfare, materially and religiously, will be subserved by unrestricted intercourse, self protection may demand, at no distant day, such legislation as is now being discussed in Congress. In a religious point of view, and with reference to Christian missions, it is of the greatest moment that the intercourse with China should be unrestrained, and that the relations of Christian nations with that country should be cordial and friendly. With the conviction that our own country and its institutions are not seriously threatened, the Christian sentiment cannot but be opposed to any legislation calculated to affect unfavorably the spread of the gospel in China.

An Error that Cuts the Sinews.

Rev. Dr. T. O. Summers, writing in "the Advocate of Missions," says:

Premillenarianism is another error, adapted to cut the sinews of missionary effort. This rabbinical figment early obtained in the church, being promoted by Papias, and by other fathers who attached undue importance to his opinions, because, though a man of slender abilities, he lived so near the apostolic age. But it was opposed by the learned Origen and others, and rejected as a delusion. From time to time it has been revived in various sections of the church; and recently a convention was held in Holy Trinity Church, New York, to promote a belief in that doctrine. It is due to say that some who hold it are as yet zealous advocates of missions. I say "as yet," for men will not long continue to act contrary to their principles; their principles will modify their actions, or their actions will modify their principles.

Now the plain, common sense, inference from the dogma in question, is this: It is useless to attempt the conversion of the world, if it is to get worse and worse till Christ shall make a corporeal descent to the earth to mend it.

Some years ago one of my friends—then, but not now, a Methodist—told me he was going to publish a book in advocacy of this dogma. I tried to keep him from so doing, assuring him that if he did publish it, as far as it might be read and endorsed, it would have a prejudicial effect on the cause of missions. He said he thought not, and published the book. Some time afterward a venerable patriarch of the Baptist Church told me he had read that book, and it convinced him that all our missionary efforts were futile. Here and there, perhaps, a few heathens might be converted—and so a few sinners at home—but nothing of consequence could be done, and need not be attempted, till Christ took the matter in hand Himself. He will soon come down from heaven to earth, and then the millennium shall dawn and nations shall be born in a day! "There, sir," I replied, "that is just what I told the author before he published his book." It would have done the mischief on a larger scale if it had been more generally read and believed. But the dogma is so absurd, and so unscriptural, and fraught with so pernicious consequences, that it is not likely to gain much favor among Christian people. It is denounced as a heresy in some Confessions of Faith—and a heresy it certainly is. It is opposed by "The Three Creeds"—by many passages in the English Liturgy, notably in the Collects for the First and Third Sundays in Advent—by all those passages of Scripture which set forth the expediency of Christ's corporeal absence from the church, to be substituted by that "other Paraclete," who is to remain in the church to the end of time; it is opposed to the assurance that Christ will sit on the Mediatorial throne, at the right hand of the Majesty on high, till he shall have put all enemies under his feet, and till he "shall come the second time—not to reign a thousand years corporeally at Jerusalem or anywhere else on this globe—but to raise the dead, both small and great, just and unjust," at the last day"—to burn up this earth, and to judge the world—His last grand Mediatorial act.

I cannot here stop to explain the only passage in which the millennium is spoken of in the Bible (Rev. xx,) but will only say that it is to be interpreted, like all other symbolical passages in the Apralypse, in conformity with the plain teachings of Scripture in regard to the conversion of the world and the latter day glory of the church.

The world is not getting worse—it is getting better—and that by God's own appointed means; it will never improve by any day-dreams about the premillennial advent of Christ, which will never take place. "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save" men; and that by a rational process, under the administration of the Holy Spirit; that in articulate thunder tells us what is our duty:

> Go, preach my gospel, saith the Lord,
> Bid the whole earth my grace receive;
> He shall be saved who trusts my word—
> He shall be damned who wont believe.

Sports of the Day.

That Gulf States Agricultural and Mechanical Exposition turns out, as usual, to be more devoted to horse-racing than to anything else. That is about all there is of it. People who have any regard for the good morals and general well being of the State of Louisiana will keep away from the Fair Grounds. If an agricultural exposition is an impracticable and impossible thing, and if the object is to inveigle the public into the support and patronage of horse-racing and gambling, it is well for the people to be advised. The children of the public schools were at the stand on Monday. Of course they sang well, and enjoyed the racing. Having excluded the Bible from our schools, the children are now treated to the noble sports of the turf.

We had supposed that the law recently enacted by the Legislature, to prevent cruelty to animals, was applicable to cock fights as well as dog fights. A Monday morning paper of this city, however, devotes half a column to the Spanish cock-pit, and its Sunday entertainment.

Here is a paragraph from this edifying description:

Suddenly the black caught the gray in the neck, and stuck his spurs into the middle of his back. In one second the whole scene was changed. There lay the gray completely paralyzed, while the black cock was lifted in triumph from the ground. The greatest excitement prevailed, and there were people jumping about and yelling with all the force of their lungs. The betting at once changed sides, and stood now twenty to one on the black.

The rest of the battle was all in favor of the blind bird. The gray revived sufficiently to stand once upon his legs and peck with his bill, but, after a dozen or so trials, the birds were taken from the pit, and the black was declared the winner of the fight.

Such scenes as this are enacted here on the Sabbath, and we are informed that some prominent and respectable citizens are habitual frequenters of this resort, and countenance the cruel and degrading business. The State law, if enforced, would break up the cock-pit in New Orleans. But will it be enforced?

Notes to Contributors.

The following from the Watchman are good as far as they go:

All contributions for the press should be folded. The editor isn't born who doesn't feel a twinge of neuralgia at sight of a rolled manuscript. Reason, he is not enough of a clairvoyant to read easily the inside of a stove-funnel. Suppose he reads and sanctions, there are others to suffer. Have you ever seen the process of type setting? The compositor stands, or sits on a high stool, before his "form," slanting like a writing-desk and having a surface of little compartments in which are the types, alphabetically arranged; the "copy"—say, your article—is spread out near the upper edge of the form, opposite the compositor's left shoulder. Now this compositor, like an ordinary individual, has but two hands; these are of necessity busy with types, and if your sheets, instead of lying flat, are all curls and kinks, the compositor is worse plagued than the editor.

Write on one side of the sheet, only. Reason, it is often convenient, and in hours of hurry absolutely necessary, to give out a page in portions to different compositors. There are two reasons, such as that the writing is liable to show through, making your pot-hooks and trammels on page one with the same on page two; to the reckless wear and tear of the editorial spectacles, and the further anguish of that long-suffering public benefactor, the compositor. This rule of writing only on one side of the sheet is now so well understood, that comparatively few persons take it upon them to send that species of kindling material at letter rate.

If you cannot provide yourself with white paper and black ink, you have some reason to doubt your call to be an author, and may certainly excuse yourself to your conscience and the world if you wait for a louder call and decent stationery. Having these, write legibly—in pity to the sanctum and the printing-office, write legibly. In pity to yourself, if you know how sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have "afterwards" printed "alligator," and to come before the public as giving the advice to "bite your grandmother," when you innocently wrote, or supposed you wrote, "last year, a geraniums," write legibly. Happening to be in The Watchman printing-office the other day, I remarked to a compositor. "That is good copy you are setting up." He replied, "It is Dr. Hovey's." So, then, if you fancy all that is needed to make a Greeley or a Choate of you is an abominable hand-writing, remember that the President of Newton Theological Institution did not acquire greatness in that way. It is my conviction that three-fourths of the unreadable penmanship comes from affectation and the vanity of appearing to be doing a rushing business.

Rev. John L. Nevius, writing to the New York Observer, from Chefoo, China, December 20, 1878, says:

The moral effect on the Chinese of the practical exhibition of human brotherhood, in sending relief to the sufferers by famine, is already apparent. Even in regions but recently visited, the missionaries are treated, both by the people and their officers, with a respect and confidence almost unknown before. This confidence and respect is not only extended to them as individuals, but also to the religion which they represent and of which these acts of disinterested benevolence are regarded as the fruits. In some districts whole villages and communities are ready to profess themselves Christians; hundreds have been baptized, and thousands are on the roll of applicants for baptism. When the immediate effects of the famine are still felt, and relief expected, it is too soon to judge of the permanent effect of this movement.

In this province (Shantung,) however, in what was the famine region two years ago, plenty and prosperity have returned again. No help is needed or anticipated. Here the effect of the famine is apparent in its having given the missionaries a favorable introduction, and emboldened those who have religious proclivities to open communication with them. In this region a class of earnest men and women, a considerable portion of them in comfortable or independent circumstances, are seeking admission into the Christian Church. In connection with the English Baptist and American Presbyterian Churches, little companies composed of Christians and inquirers assemble every Sunday for Christian worship in more than twenty villages. They provide and fit up their own house of worship, and are making earnest efforts to advance in Christian knowledge. More than a hundred have been baptized in this one section during the present year.

Another fact of much interest is the existence of certain secret religious sects, which have, to a considerable degree, prepared the way for Christianity. These sects evidence a real religious tendency in the race, and a longing and striving for happiness in the future state. During a recent tour in the interior it was my privilege to baptize twenty-nine adults, a large proportion of them being adherents of one or the other of these well-known religions. There is reason to hope that the work thus in God's good providence begun, will with His blessing, and in answer to the prayers of His people, increase and extend.

The secret sects above referred to are regarded with great jealousy and apprehension by the government, which discourages any departure from Confucian orthodoxy, and regards them as inimical to the State, and tending to sedition and conspiracy. The prevalence of these societies, of which there is a great number, shows a general dissatisfaction with the recognized religions of China, and a desire for something better, which desire the fear of persecution and banishment cannot wholly repress.

Building Churches.

It is not very often that a single wealthy man builds a church, but it is done now and then. The Baltimore Episcopal Methodist tells of an instance. It is indeed a case of commendable liberality, and one that ought to become more common. We have a site in view where, if we had the money, we would build a twenty thousand dollar church at once. What a luxury and privilege is here open to some rich and enterprising Christian! The Baltimore says:

Rev. David Carroll, father of our courteous and clever neighbor, D. H. Carroll, of the Book Depository, has erected a very elegant gothic stone church at Mount Vernon Mills at a cost of $14 000, and presented it, wholly unincumbered, to the Baltimore Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The dedicatory exercises were held on January 19, and conducted by Bishop Ames. Discourses were delivered by Revs. Messrs. W. S. Edwards D. D., presiding elder, Joseph B. Seidl and D. S. Monroe, D. D. The former pastors, including the Rev. Messrs. E. E. Shipley, James R. Cadder, Arthur Foster and P. Vondersmith, participated in the services.

A week or two ago we chronicled a similar act of liberality upon the part of one of our Virginia laymen. Would that such examples of generous devotion and zeal were of more frequent occurrence.

Marriage of Missionaries.

The following marriage notice is published in the St. Louis Christian Advocate:

PARKER—COOLEY.—At the Presbyterian Mission Press, Shanghai, China, on December 4, 1878, by the Rev. George F. Fitch, assisted by the Rev. W. S. Holt, Rev. A. P. Parker, of the China Mission, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Soochow, China, to Miss Alice S. Cooley, of the Presbyterian Mission, Soochow, China, formerly from near Trenton, N. J.

Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D., president of Whitworth Female College, has been quite sick for several weeks past. We are glad to learn, however, that he is again up, and able to give attention to the affairs of his large and prosperous school.

Richmond Christian Advocate.

—In these days, when so much is said respecting topical, exegetical, and all other sermonic forms, it may be well not to forget that old-fashioned preaching used to be attended with power. But what may old-fashioned preaching be? One characteristic was that it specified and rebuked sins.

Some years ago a sermon of this kind was preached in our good State. At the conclusion of the services a number of godless young men were heard commenting upon the sermon. Said one: "The preacher got me today." "How?" said one of his companions. "For Sabbath-breaking," he replied. "Well," said another, "he got me too." "How did he get you?" they asked. "For drunkenness." So they went on making their confessions till only one remained to be heard from. At last he spoke, and the returns were all in. "And he got me too." "How?" they all inquired. "For stealing!" was the candid answer.

Doubtless the pulpit sometimes fears to specify sins lest it should seem to be contending against a man of straw. "But there's no knowing" where a sermon may hit, as none can know just who are vulnerable. The extreme case given may serve as well as another to convey the "moral" of the present lesson—Is. lviii, 1. Suppose the preachers put a sermon of the old-fashioned kind in now and then. It will "vary the exercises," to say the least.

Pacific Methodist.

—The highest proof and best illustration of the truth and power of religion is found in the life and character of true Christians. Such a life, firm in integrity, rising above selfishness, strong in the right, patient to bear rough usage, should it come, and full of useful activities—an argument, the like of that, can be felt and appreciated by the world. Creeds and modes of worship may be little understood by the great Jury which weighs all pretentions. It may know and care as little about the niceties of theological speculation as about the scientific method of constructing a syllogism in logic. But it is keen-sighted enough in all that concerns consistency of character; and is apt to bring the test of common sense to the judgment of religious pretensions. Sensible men of the world do not often take paste for the diamond, or dollar stone trinketry for a queen's jewels. They know very well that battles are not fought and won by holiday heroes, but by real soldiers. They pay their notes in bank, not in words or compliments, but in actual values. And so they can be favorably impressed when religion does not merely put on its robes and sing its Te Deums—but manifests its efficiency by a loving temper, a steady devotion to duty and usefulness, and a life in which there is ever seen consistency between profession and practice.

Methodist Recorder.

—We know an Iowa pastor whose rule it is to go in debt for nothing. Himself and wife have a covenant that, under no circumstances (sickness possibly excepted,) will they ever ask trust of any party whatsoever. This brother has prospered on every field where he has labored. At the beginning of the Conference year he states his policy, and the people appreciate it and work up to it promptly. There is no curse of debt hanging over the pastor's home. He faces every man free as the morning sun. He owes no man anything but love. And someway the people all love that man who knows how to keep clear of debt, duns and the humiliation of confused finances. This brother, out of limited salary, and with a group of healthful children, has even laid aside something every year. He keeps a cow, works a garden, knows how to utilize pigs and chickens, as a wholesome pastime, and enjoys making all ends meet and overlap. He says: "Sometimes I have had but two dollars of ready money in the world," but rather that and health and liberty than a hundred in scattered and clamorous debts.

Nashville Christian Advocate.

—The question of transfers is becoming one of great delicacy and no little difficulty. The episcopal prerogative is not exercised now as in earlier days. The people like to be consulted, especially in the stronger stations. In some of the Conferences the preachers are sensitive. And so friction ensues here and there. The outcome of the matter may be the revivifying of the episcopal prerogative in the matter of appointments in the interest of a more thorough connectionalism; or, it may be that Conference lines may become more like Chinese walls. We shall see. Perhaps all our machinery wants is oil.

Christian Neighbor.

—JUDGING.—It is often said that "We are commanded not to judge." The command is not against judging, but against judging unjustly or uncharitably. It is not possible to keep from judging—people will judge, sometimes must judge. By the fruit the tree is judged. By a man's life others judge of the man; from overt acts judgment is made up as to the heart from which those acts proceed. People should judge others only when so constrained; they should express their judgment only when necessary or proper. Judgment should not be hasty nor affected by prejudice, nor based on a partial or one sided view of a man or a matter. "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment." The conservative element in judging is found in that charity which "thinketh no evil," and "rejoiceth in the truth."

Bishop Keener writes to the editor of the Texas Christian Advocate as follows:

"I am glad to hear of improvement in the material well being of our church in Texas. All we need the e is plenty of good churches and parsonages to put our Methodism in full working condition. Without prompt and well-sustained effort we shall not be able to hold the enviable place we now have in your State against that strong tide which is setting in and pouring its thousands from Ohio, Indiana and the whole Northwest. The people of those States have at last woke up to the fact that the Southwest is the best end of the Union. Its climate, its money-yielding products, and rich and cheap lands are enough to draw settlers from even far better regions, as they have from Georgia, the Carolinas, Alabama and Louisiana. Our preachers are fully equal to the great field we occupy, but they must put forth their full strength. Now is the time. I am glad to hear encouraging accounts.

Death of Rev. William Finn.

Rev. J. S. Parker, writing from Greensburg, La., February 15, 1879 says:

"We have just received a telegram announcing the death of the Rev William Finn, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference. He was for nearly fifty years a Methodist traveling preacher. He was a member of the Illinois Conference before the separation between the Church North and South, and after this he came South, as his sympathies were with the South. He was altogether prepared for the change from a world of trouble to the bright mansions above."

The trustees of Seashore Camp Ground met in New Orleans on Wednesday, February 12. Bros. Otts and Hopper were in attendance from Mobile. The time for the opening service of the next meeting was fixed for Wednesday, July 16. The announcement is made early so that all can make their arrangements.

The Georgia Methodist, formerly published at Cumming, Ga., has changed its local habitation and name. It is now the Georgia Advocate, and is published at Canton, Ga. It has a strong corps of editors, to wit: Revs. W. A. Parks, W. T. Laine, and P. H. Brewster.

The anniversary of the Southwestern Bible Society will be held at the First Presbyterian Church, New Orleans, at half past seven P. M., Sunday next, February 23. Dr. Hugh Miller Thompson delivers the address.

Periodicals.

—The New Quarterly Review is out. Our copy comes too late for extended notice this week. This first number contains 192 pages, and eleven articles. The topics are varied, and calculated to interest. The writers are all known as men of ability. We shall read when we can, and have something more to say. The Review is cheap at $3 a year, and should be taken by everybody. The articles are: 1. The Tongue and Pen, by the editor. 2. The Atonement, by C. W. Miller, D. D. 3. The Atomic Theory, by Prof. J. W. Glenn, A. M. 4. The Æsthetics of Literature, by M. Callaway, D. D. 5. The Ultimate and Universal in Philosophy, by the editor. 6. Through the Dark Continent, by T. O. Summers, D. D. 7. The Bible in English Literature, by A. B. Stark, LL. D. 8. The Poetry of Tennyson, by J. B. Wardlow, Jr. 9. The Christian Lawyer and Client, by W. B. Hill, Esq. 10. The German Baccalaureate, by J. C. Hinton, A. M. 11. Marvin at Home, by T. M. Finney, D. D. The library table embraces ten pages of critical notices.

—We have received a copy of the published minutes of the sixty fifth session of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held at Hazlehurst, Miss., December 18-23, 1878. They are printed in good style, and edited with taste and care.

—The Magazine of Art for February is an interesting number of this popular periodical. Published by Cassell, Petter & Galpin, London, Paris and New York.

Publisher's Department.

While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the real value of the goods advertised. In ordering persons will please say the ADVOCATE.

WE REFER parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dorsey Coleman & Bro., No. 12 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers, and dealers of well-established reputation.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-known hotel establishment. To those desirous to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so their eighty a first class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3.50 per day.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—Lamps with Bronze feet, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50. Student lamps, Latterns, 75 cents, $1.00 to $5.00. One of the most reliable crockery stores in the South.

LIFE AND LABORS OF BISHOP MARVIN.—See J. H. Chambers' advertisement, wanting all the preachers to help in the sale of the Life and Labors of Bishop Marvin. It is selling very fast.

DECEASED FRIENDS.—Read the advertisement of Portraits of Deceased Friends, and see what it says.

TUTT'S PILLS.—These pills are very popular with the people. Sold everywhere at twenty-five cents.

SUGAR PLANTERS.—Planters are referred to Wm. Roy's card on the sixth page. Their perfect reliability.

PATENT SELF ACTING COW MILKER.—Every cow owning a cow should have one of these. Send to my address. The eighth page will explain further.

DRY GOODS.—Drop in to E. H. Adams & Bro., 594 Magazine street. This store is very popular with the ladies. Country orders promptly attended to.

DRY GOODS.—J. A. Braselman, 586 Magazine street, has just received from auction new spring dress goods, which he is selling at reduced rates. Give him a call.

PHOTOGRAPH AND ART GALLERY.—W. W. Washburn has no superior in this or any other country, and very few equals. Our friends and readers will find his pictures perfect. See advertisement.

NEW ORLEANS CORK MANUFACTORY.—The New Orleans Cork Manufactory has an advertisement on this page. Parties wanting to do business with one of the first class concerns should patronize the above. It is perfectly honorable.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.—Strangers coming to town and wanting pure medicines are referred to the advertisement of Frederickson & Harte, headed "Strangers' Guide." This is one of the best stores in the South to do business with.

BUENA SALUD COCA BITTERS.—Ask your druggist, or the above if you are troubled with dyspepsia, chills and fever, this remedy is highly spoken of. If your druggist does not keep it, address 72 William street, New York.

INDIAN TURNIP PECTORAL BALM.—This celebrated medicine is very efficacious for coughs, colds, asthma, and all diseases of the throat and lungs. It is highly spoken of by those who have used it. For sale by all druggists.

IRON ROOFING.—Caldwell & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, has the best, elastic paint iron roofing now extant, fire, water and wind proof. This popular roofing has been in use over fifteen years. Read his compliment to any part of the country. See advertisement.

THE WATCH.—By referring to the sixth page, all readers who may want a good watch, that will last for years will consult their own interest by writing to Wm. Hedrick & Son, 10 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky. These watches cannot be bought for less than $15 elsewhere. They are perfectly reliable.

RESTORE YOUR SIGHT.—Dr. F. Lewis & Co., of 9 Liberty street, New York, says in his advertisement, do not disfigure your face by wearing spectacles when you can buy a pair of the celebrated Lewis eyeglasses for $1. Attention is called to his advertisement.

BUGGIES, PHAETONS AND CARRIAGES.—Anderson, Harris & Co., corner Bayou Rd. and Liberty streets, Cincinnati, Ohio, have one of the largest establishments in the West. Their work is shipped to all parts of the country. They are clever gentlemen, and it is a pleasure to do business with them.

CARPETS AND HOUSE FURNISHING GOODS.—The advertisement of the enterprising house of Elkin & Co. ought to command the attention of those who desire to buy elegant and handsomely selected goods. We cheerfully recommend this house as being reliable and prompt, assuring our readers that their orders will be faithfully complied with.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.—Gov. McEnery & Voorhies.—To all those whose fortune or misfortune compels them to go to law, we most earnestly suggest the above firm as being among the best legal advisers in the city. With deep knowledge of the intricacies of law, they also possess high integrity and will work hard and wisely for their clients' interests.

COTTON FACTORS.—Attention is called to the advertisement of the popular house of Levi & Newman, 62 Carondelet street, successors of A. Levi. Their reputation for strict business integrity, personal attention to orders, and a desire to serve their customers on the most liberal terms, needs but to be mentioned to secure the attention of those interested.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.—A. McDermott has been known to us for a great many years as a manufacturer of artificial limbs. His practical experience in the making of these limbs enables him to offer his services, feeling confident of his ability to give entire satisfaction to all who may require either of the imitations of nature's most valuable adjuncts to the human frame—the leg and arm.

MARBLE AND GRANITE.—The convenient location of the extensive works of George Stroud, 64 St. Charles street, cannot fail to attract the attention of the passer by. His stock cannot be excelled in quantity or quality in the South. He is the most extensive manufacturer of tombs, monuments, and every kind of marble work, and we commend his services, without hesitation, as a first artist, having the best materials and skilled labor for the prompt and careful execution of all work intrusted to him.

SEWING MACHINE.—M. A. Peck, 153 Canal street, is one of the most popular sewing machine gentlemen in the South, having been engaged in this branch of business over twenty-five years. The ladies like doing business with him, as they always find him pleasant and obliging; and everybody who deals at his store are sure to recommend their friends and acquaintances. He keeps all kinds of sewing machines, the New Wheeler & Wilson, the Improved Singer, as manufactured by the Stewart Manufacturing Company. He is also sole agent for the Grover & Baker and Domestic Machines. Give him a call.

DIEBOLD SAFE AND LOCK COMPANY.—S. D. Currie & Co., at Edwards' Depot, write to A. Roy, Esq., the agent of Diebold safe and Lock Company, respecting a fire which one of Diebold's safes went through. Our readers ought to read this letter carefully, and those who may want a first class safe should call on this popular gentleman. The reputation of these safes for security are well worthy the attention of those who desire positive security. Country orders will receive prompt attention and dispatch. We recommend Mr. Roy as a reliable and courteous gentleman. Write for estimates.

FERTILIZERS.—No crops in the South can thrive without a fertilizer. It is almost as great a necessity to the plow or the harrow and more especially is this the case with our two great staples, cotton and sugar. The best fertilizers are the cheapest, and of Hugh W. Montgomery, of 100 Common street, has the very best in the market. He would keep no other, and in his advertisement, which appears elsewhere in our columns, he tells our readers what they are and what they are for. He also has the early Amber sugar cane seed from the excellent crop of 1878. Our planter friends should read his advertisement, and then order direct from him.

THE Rev. Dr. McAnnally, of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, in his editorial in that widely circulated paper, refers in a flattering manner to "M. Gilroe's Quadrunguo" in the following article. The doctor is not in the habit of recommending patent medicines, but, having tried this celebrated compound, our readers can see what he says about it:

"We have no partiality for patent medicines, never use it or recommend them, unless we know of what they are composed, and then, as best we can, judge of their general effects by the nature and character of the component parts. Whether the medicine gained always be realized or not, We cannot tell—never tested. But know what are the component parts, and give as our candid and decided opinion, an opinion we fully believe, that to produce a healthy and safe action on the liver kidneys, and secretions generally, there is not a better medicine known. Learning of what ingredients it is composed, and knowing something of the disease it was tried for, we tried the mixture on ourself and others, and found it to be just effective and salutary, and we cordially recommend it to all persons who feel in need of such medicine. Our own health without the suggestion of knowledge of any person whomever. And it is written for our readers generally, in the hope of benefiting them.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

The Consumptive's Only Hope.

Very few people whose systems are falling gradually out of order, object to cod liver oil as a medicine, as the most disgusting and offensive part is taken away. Few stomachs do not revolt at the mere thought of Castor or Cod Liver Oil, yet, when those appalling symptoms of decay appear, which physicians and parents alike know are unerring signs of greater waste to be feared and dreaded than the nutritive powers are supplying, Cod Liver Oil is the most speedy and effective remedy in the world. But repugnance to its taste and odor reduces the nervous patient to despair. It is then that friends and doctor can do him the most inestimable kindness, he has ever known, by telling him of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda; by cautiously assuring him of its entire freedom from unpleasant smell or odor; of its marvelous qualities as a nutriment, and the miracles it works in giving tone and energy to stomach, nerve and brain.

Amongst those who have endorsed Magnire's Bonne Plant, the great specific for Chilblains, Glaces, Dysentery, Flux, etc., will be found the names of Ex-Governor B. Gratz Brown, Ex-senator Frank P. Blair, Ex-Senator Bogy, Hon. Erastus Wells, Hon. Henry T. Blow, Ex-mayor Joseph Brown, of St. Louis, and many others.

The American Jewelry Company have every reason to be proud of the great success and large sale of the Wonderful Lefevre Diamonds which they sell in rings for Ladies, Stud, etc., for One Dollar, and from the many flattering testimonials attesting the meritorious quality of their goods, we predict a large increase in their business.

For Bronchial, Asthmatic and Pulmonary complaints, Brown's Bronchial Troches enjoy remarkable curative properties. Like all other meritorious articles they are frequently imitated, and those needing the article should be sure to obtain the genuine "BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES."

NIGHT SIDE
—OF—
CITY LIFE!

Contains the Discourses delivered at the Brooklyn Tabernacle by Dr. Talmage, giving his personal experience as recently seen by him in company with three high officials and two orders of his church during their midnight explorations in the haunts of vice of New York City. They have been revised for this work, and are written in Dr. Talmage's strongest descriptive powers, terrible in his earnestness and unpromising in his denunciation of sin and wickedness, sparing neither friend nor foe, rich or poor. Every page of intense, soul-absorbing interest.

EDWARDS' DEPOT, Oct. 18, 1878.

DEAR SIR: The No. 7 Diebold Safe just used some time since went through the large conflagration and remained forty-eight hours in the burning ruins. The iron on the sides and front was very much bulged out. Considering the extreme heat to which it had been subjected, we feared greatly for the contents. Our judge of old Jo. Sturtevant, when opening it, we found all our books and papers in a good condition.

Benzine and calcined magnesia mixed so as to form a thin paste, will remove grease spots from the most delicate materials.

To make German toast, to one egg beaten well, add one cup of sweet milk or cream; season with a little salt and pepper. Cut in slices, and fry in butter on a griddle. This is a nice dish for breakfast.

EGG KISSES.—Take one-half pound of granulated sugar and the whites of four eggs beaten very stiff. Put writing paper in a pan, then drop in spots, with a teaspoon. Bake in a slow oven three quarters of an hour.

CEYLON TEA.—Our contemporary, The Colonies and India, in drawing attention to this new consignment, points out that the quality of the tea will depend on the latitude at which it is grown, and the nature of the soil, as well as upon the proper manipulation or preparation of the leaves. As a rule, the higher the elevation at which the plants are grown, the finer or more delicate is the flavor of the tea, though the quantity produced is generally less in bulk.

On two adjoining fields weeds grew luxuriantly last season. In the Falls they were higher than a man's head and cut with the mower. On one field the weeds were allowed to dry and were then burned as they lay. The ground was then plowed and seeded to wheat. In the other field the weeds were plowed under and the ground seeded to wheat. The wheat on the field burned over now makes the finest showing of any in the section. The other is very indifferent.—Odessa Tribune.

HINTS TO BEE KEEPERS.—Work quietly; avoid jarring; never fight your bees, and always keep cool.

If you get stung, remove the sting; squeeze out all the poison you can, and apply hartshorn.

Use plenty of smoke, a roll of dry rags or decayed wood makes the best; blow it in the entrance and at top of frames.

If you are timid, use rubber gloves on your hands, and a veil over the face and head; the veil must be long enough to allow the vest and coat to be put on over it.

When symptoms of robbing occur, use the utmost caution. Contract the entrance of weak hives, and allow no comb, honey, sugar or syrup to be around. Avoid opening hives as much as possible.—Exchange.

POISON IN PRESERVED PEAS.—The subject of the use of salt of copper as coloring matter for articles of food has been before the Faculte Academy. In the course of the discussion, M. Pasteur stated that having bought fourteen cases of preserved peas at random from several shops in the principal quarters of Paris, he found ten of them containing copper sometimes as much as 1 70 much of the whole weight of the article, exclusive of the liquid—the latter always containing some copper when the peas contain it, but in less quantity; in the peas the copper is generally to be found mixed under the exterior cortical envelope. It was also stated that preserved peas may always be considered as being tainted with copper when they have, even in the least degree, the fresh green color of natural peas. In the interests, therefore, of public sanitary safety, M. Pasteur urged the absolute prescription of such treatment of alimentary substances—toleration of the articles in question to be permitted only on condition that the seller label the packages. "Preserved peas colored with salts of coppers."

DEEP PLOWING.—Some twenty years ago there was a mania among the agricultural theorists for deep plowing. Every farmer, it was said, had a farm under his hands of great value, where the plow had not yet reached. No matter what the character of the surface and the subsoils were, the plow should go into its beam. But these men are beginning to get their eyes open. Mr. Geo. E. Waring, Jr., in speaking of the results of ten years' management of "Ogden Farm," in the Agriculturist, says: "About six acres were, some seven or eight years ago, plowed about twelve inches deep. The subsoil of blue clay which was brought to the surface was a lasting injury to the land. It still shows the ill effects of the treatment, despite of time and manure. There are some soils that would be benefited by plowing twelve inches deep, but they are scarce." The rule may be said to be: "Never turn up over one of two inches of unfertile subsoil in one season; and when so turned up the land should receive a dressing of manure."

THE ANGORA GOAT.—The Angora goat, according to Mr. Hayes, secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, is the most valuable wool-bearing animal, not even excepting the Cashmere goat, which produces only two or three ounces of the pashm used for making Indian shawls. Mohair, the fleece of the Angora, is worth, on an average, seventy-five cents a pound—more than double the price of the best Lincoln wool. It is used for making Utrecht velvets, or "furniture plush," the piles of imitation seal-skin, the best carriage coal aprons, braids for binding black dress goods, linings, and for many other purposes, the number of which is only limited by the limited supply—the entire production of the world being only about 4 750 000 pounds. The English have obtained the biggest success in spinning mohair, and, owing to the stiffness of the fiber, it is rarely woven alone, either the warp or woof being usually of cotton, silk, or wool. A pure mohair fabric is considered nearly indestructible.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE NORDENSKJOLD EXPEDITION.

The account which we last week published of this polar expedition is this week supplemented by a dispatch from San Francisco, which indicates that the "Vega" is probably frozen in to the northward of the East Cape. The report comes through American whalers, who heard the story from natives of the region believed to be trustworthy. It is understood that the Swedish government will take measures to send out a relief expedition, as the "Vega" is not properly equipped for an Arctic winter. Such an expedition would naturally follow up the Japanese or Kuro Siwo current to a point on the Asiatic coast, whence the East Cape can be reached.

—The hypothesis of climatic variation through change in the obliquity of the ecliptic, or through changes in the position of the earth's axis, has been exhaustively treated in a recent memoir presented to the Royal Society by Mr. George Darwin. The dynamic requirements for an alteration in the place of the poles of even 1° 46′—much less than claimed by the advocates of the supposition—would necessitate the elevation of one-twentieth of the earth's surface to a height of 10,000 feet, an upheaval which probably never occurred. Certainly since the glacial period, there have been no changes in the earth's physiography which could deflect her poles six miles, much less six degrees. There is no indication that the poles have been at any time differently placed, and the assumption of such fact throws no light upon the problems of temperature. The amelioration of the climate in the Arctic Archipelago of the Western Hemisphere would have been at the expense of Nova Zembla.

—It is a familiar fact to inhabitants in Alpine districts that avalanches rarely fall while the sky remains covered, whereas they fall rapidly and in great number, especially in the morning when the heavens are clear. On this account the monks of the Great St. Bernard do not leave the convent in the latter case. M. Dufour attributes the more frequent fall of avalanches to the lowering of temperature when the sky is clear, especially before sunrise. The small filaments of ice which retain the snow on the sides of the mountain then contract and break, and the snow begins to slide, carrying down other portions below. It is known that very slight disturbances—the flight of a bird, a few words in a deep voice, etc.—suffice to bring down avalanches.

45 Years Before the Public.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

LIVER PILLS,

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite, and sometimes the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with laxity; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility, he is easily startled, his feet are cold or dry, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low, and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression Dr. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARTEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE. Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relicts of the late R. H. Kuhl, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme. Loquet LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the Institution and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge. C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET-LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach, valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop magnified 220 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking for whereas the undissolved precipitates Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates; in fact perfectly diaphanous.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing Value the ends of life more than its means, watch ever for the soul of good in things evil, and the seed of truth in things false, and beside the richer in degree that will flow out from your life on all to whom you minister, you will do something to help the solution of that unsolved problem of the human mind and heart, the reconciliation of hearty tolerance with strong positive belief.—Phillips Brooks.

"Where will you put me when I come to see you at your castle in the air?" asked a gentleman of a witty girl. "In a brown study," she replied.

CELEBRATED the WORLD OVER

The manufacturers are awarded the highest and only medal given to plasters at the Centennial and Paris Exposition.

For Superior to ointments, porous plasters, liniments, the so called electric appliances, etc. It is the best known remedy for Lame and Weak Back, Rheumatism, Female Weakness, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Diseased Kidneys, Spinal complaints and all ills for which porous plasters are used. Ask your Druggist for Benson's Capcine Plaster, and see that you get nothing else. Sold by all Druggists, price 25 cents.

Mailed on receipt of price by SEABURY & JOHNSON, 21 PLATT STREET, NEW YORK.

A correspondent of the London Times recently called attention to the morbid tastes of artists, or rather of the people, whose tastes artists have to study. "After a careful study," he says, "of modern English art, as represented by the exhibitions, I notice one very strange and lamentable fact—I allude to the ever-increasing love of our artists for gloom, misery and squalor. Nature had been caught in all her vexed and tortured moods. There was every variety of atmospheric discomfort, ranging from the stormful purples of a thundercloud down to the softest film of morning mist; it was perpetual rain, fog and cloud. Matters were worse when I came to figure painting. Here was death, squalor, misery and tears, old women dying, dogs dying, horses in their last throes, felons in prisons and paupers in work houses—one long apotheosis of pain, sin and suffering. In real life there is always enough of tears and agony, and shall art also become enamored of suffering and death? My thoughts go back to the stately calm of Reynolds, the gracious bonhommie of Wilkie, and the pomp and happy splendor of Turner, and I ask myself whether these things are to be the traditions of an irreclaimable past." Is there not too much of the same tendency in literature?

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—Farmers, Families and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. TOBIAS' VENETIAN LINIMENT, for the cure of Cholera Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Croup, Colic and Sea-Sickness, taken internally (it is perfectly harmless; see Cath accompanying each bottle) and externally for Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cuts, Burns, Swellings, Bruises, Mosquito Bites, Old Sores, Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest. The VENETIAN LINIMENT was introduced in 1847, and no one who has used it but continues to do so, many stating if it was to obtain a bottle they would not be without it. Thousands of certificates can be seen at the depot, speaking of its wonderful curative properties. Sold by the druggists at 50 cents. Depot, 42 Murray street, New York. 8p

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies, while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5; $1 to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered

The body of our prayers is the sum of our duty; and as we must ask of God whatsoever we need, so we must labor for all that we ask.—Jeremy Taylor.

A noticeable fact, says the New York Methodist, is the revival of Methodistic usages in many of our churches. It is said to be an astonishment almost electrifying to see the leading members of such churches as St. John's and St. Paul's in the altar, speaking and praying for the conversion of sinners. Less known churches have had the same kind of a revival, and everywhere the old ways are found to be effective.

Pope Leo has issued, says the Interior, a long encyclical, the purport of which is to condemn Socialism, and at the same time to magnify his office at the expense of Protestantism. He says, as will be observed in the telegraphic summary, elsewhere in this paper printed, that all these sinister agencies sprung from the Protestant Reformation, and that the only security for kings or people is in the bosom of Catholicism. The orders of nobility are secured by the church in their exclusive privileges and monopiles, which teaches that there are orders of superiority and authority among the angels, much more should there be among men—men born to rule, and men born to be slaves. The church also provides for the socialists by requiring the rich to give alms to the poor. "Therefore," says Leo, "let the principalities and powers accept the church as the safeguard of earthly, and the security of heavenly things." The Pope's intentions are undoubtedly good. The only objection to his panaceas and prescriptions is that they do not operate as he intends that they shall. All the principalities and powers which accept the church as the safeguard of earthly interests have a much more precarious and perilous existence than those which reject its good offices. Compare Spain with Great Britain, for instance; or Mexico with the United States; or the South American republics with Switzerland; or Austria with Sweden. Leo means well, but he will not be able to persuade the ages to reverse their driving wheels, and carry us back into the night of superstition, ignorance and priestly rule.

Among the ancient Roman roses were used with a profuseness that is now unheard of. When Cleopatra went to Cilicia to meet Mark Anthony, she caused the floor of the hall to be covered with roses to the depth of eighteen inches. At a fete given by Nero the expense incurred for roses alone was four million sesterces, or about $100,000. Roses were used in wreaths and chaplets to adorn the brows of poets and orators. The Greeks and Romans used them as garlands to ornament the statues of Venus, of Hebe, and of Flora. At their marriage ceremonies they played an important part, and were often strewn in the aisles of the churches. Tombs were covered with them; and many of the wealthy Greeks and Romans left large legacies for the special purpose of ornamenting their burial places with roses,—both with plants and the cut flowers.—Vick's Magazine.

TUTT'S PILLS!

A NOTED DIVINE SAYS

THEY ARE WORTH THEIR

WEIGHT IN GOLD

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

DR. TUTT:—Dear Sir: For ten years I have been a martyr to Dyspepsia, Constipation and Piles. Last Spring your Pills were recommended to me; I used them (but with little faith). I am now a well man, have good appetite, digestion perfect, regular stools, piles gone, and I have gained forty pounds solid flesh. They are worth their weight in gold.

Rev. R. L. SIMPSON, Louisville, Ky.

A TORPID LIVER

is the fruitful source of many diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Bilious Fever, Ague and Fever, Jaundice, Piles, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaint, Colic, etc.

Tutt's Pills exert a powerful influence on the Liver, and with certainty will relieve that important organ from disease, and restore its normal functions.

The rapidity with which persons take on flesh while under the influence of these Pills, of itself indicate their adaptability to nourish the body hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system.

CONSTIPATION.

Only with regularity of the bowels can perfect health be enjoyed. When the constipation is of recent date, a single dose of TUTT'S PILLS will suffice, but if it has become habitual, one Pill should be taken every night, gradually lessening the frequency of the dose until a regular daily movement is obtained, which will soon follow.

GRANDMOTHER GRAY.

Faded and fair in her old arm chair,
Sunset gilding her thin white hair,
Silently knitting, sits Grandmother Gray;
While on my elbows beside her I lean,
And tell what wonderful things I mean
To have, and to do, if I can some day;
You can talk so to Grandmother Gray—
She doesn't laugh nor send you away.

I see, as I look from the window seat,
A house over yonder, across the street;
With a nice French roof and a frescoed hall;
The deep bay-windows are full of flowers;
They've a clock of bronze that chimes the hours,
And a fountain—hear it tinkle and fall.
When the doors are open "I mean," I say,
"To live in a house like that some day."
"Money will buy it," says Grandmother Gray.

There's a low barouche, all green and gold,
And a pair of horses as black as jet,
I've seen drive by—and, before I'm old,
A turnout like that I hope to get.
How they prance and shine in their harness gay;
What fun 'twould be if they ran away!
"Money will buy them," says Grandmother Gray.

"To-morrow I know a great ship sails
Out of port, and across the seas;
O, to feel in my face the ocean gales,
And the salt waves dancing under me!
To the cold, far land of legend and lay
I long to roam—and I shall some day."
"Money will do it," says Grandmother Gray.

"And when, like me, you are old," says she,
"And getting and going are done with, dear,
What, then, do you think will the one thing be
You wish and need to cheer you here?"
"O, when to my chair I have to stay,
Love, you see, will comfort me," I say.
"That money won't buy," says Grandmother Gray.

"And, sure enough, if there's nothing worth
All your care when the years are past
But love in heaven and love on earth,
Why not begin where you'll end at last?
Begin to lay up a treasure to-day,
That you find nothing can take away,
Unless the Lord," says Grandmother Gray.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Feb. 13.—A bill passed fixing the rate of taxation for 1879 at seven mills, and for 1880 at six and a half. The governor has approved the bill.

A vast amount of business has been transacted during the day, and the General Assembly adjourned sine die at twelve o'clock to-night.—Mobile Register.

DETROIT, Feb. 18.—The election for United States Senator to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Christiancy took place at Lansing to-day, the two houses of Legislature voting separately, resulting in the election of Hon. Zachariah Chandler. The vote was as follows: Z Chandler, Republican, 88; O. M. Barnes, Democrat, 22; Henry Chamberlin, Greenbacker, 18.

COLUMBUS, Feb. 18.—R H Chilton, Adjutant General of Gen. R. E Lee, and since the war president of Columbus Manufacturing Company, fell dead of apoplexy while sitting alone at his desk this afternoon; aged over 60 years. He graduated at West Point from Virginia; was promoted Major in the Mexican war and paymaster in Texas prior to 1860.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb. 20.—A special from Pittsburg says: Great excitement prevails at Brownsville, Fayette county, Pa. Sheriff Work, of Washington county, with 230 armed and mounted deputies, has gone into Fayette county to arrest miners, charged with participating in the riot at California, Pa., a few days ago. He has arrested thirty-three. His authority to make arrests outside of his own county, especially without a warrant, is disputed. Many of the miners are armed and a conflict is feared.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—Rev. Dr. Reuben Nelson, senior publisher and agent of the Methodist Book Concern, of this city, is dead.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—The following is the full text of the Brazilian mail steamship subsidy amendment: For ocean steamship service between the United States and Brazil, $200 000, and the postmaster general is authorized and directed, after due public advertisement, to contract, for a time not exceeding ten years, for carrying the mails once each month, commencing not later than July, 1879, from New York by way of Norfolk, Va., to Rio de Janeiro, and once each month, commencing not later than March, 1880, from New Orleans by the way of Galveston to Rio de Janeiro, and return including the appropriate intermediate ports, with the lowest bidders being responsible, the owners giving ample security, of first class American built and owned iron screw steamships, of not less than three thousand tons, after the modern models, capable of making thirteen nautical miles an hour. Such mail carriage to be paid for at not exceeding thirty dollars per nautical mile per annum, one way for the distance actually traveled between the termini of each said routes, provided, however the annual compensation for such postal service shall not exceed the sum of $150 000 for each of said lines, the two lines, to be contracted for simultaneously, and neither contract to go into effect unless both shall be contracted for and established according to the provisions of this act, neither contract to be considered in force if the service on either line should be abandoned or discontinued, and the contracts, therefore, to contain all provisions for securing efficient service, which may be customary or required by law in such cases.

The amount appropriated by the amendment, it will be noticed, is $200 000, though each line is to receive $150 000 per annum. As the New Orleans line is not to be established until March 1880, no greater appropriation was required at this session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The 45th anniversary of the Congressional Temperance Society was held this evening. Senator Ferry, the retiring president, introduced his successor, Hon. G. W. McCray, secretary of war, whose predecessor in both offices forty-five years ago was Lewis Cass, first president of the society.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 23.—The financial troubles of Archbishop Purcell appear to increase by later developments. The trustees appointed some time ago to receive and audit the claims against him decline to make a public statement of the amount already filed, but at a recent meeting of the clergy, at which the archbishop presided, he stated that claims had already been filed amounting to $3 600 000. All schemes for his relief have apparently failed. An effort will now be made by a committee of Roman Catholic clergymen to have the laws modified, so that a lottery scheme may be inaugurated for his benefit. Their success, however, is considered extremely doubtful in Ohio. The Irish Catholics also complain that no help has been rendered the archbishop from the German Churches, while the latter ask that a full statement of his wants be made public first.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—The long contest over the proposition of Senator Jones to allow the railroad companies to construct and operate telegraph lines, terminated to-day by the Senate agreeing to the clause of the army bill, known as the Butler amendment, which provides for this privilege.

The text of the law says that "Telegrams are authorized to be transmitted by railroad companies which may have telegraph lines for the government, and the general public, at rates to be fixed by the government according to provisions of title 65 of the Revised Statute." This title gives only the power to the government to fix the rate for its own messages. The question has arisen whether the railroad companies have the power under this new law to construct new lines so as to connect and complete the present lines, and the words "may have" were used so as to give them this power.

The Senate passed the army appropriation bill, retaining the clause allowing railroad companies to use their telegraph lines for commercial purposes. The sections forbidding the use of troops at the polls were stricken out.

The bill to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a bureau of public health, was then taken up. Several amendments were agreed to. The bill is still being discussed.

VICKSBURG, Feb. 24.—Dr. Balfour, the health officer, and resident physicians, deny the truth of the reports circulated that there is yellow fever here. There have been no cases here since December 1.

FOREIGN.

SELMA, Feb. 18.—The northbound passenger train on the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad went through a rotten bridge, thirteen miles from Selma, at six o'clock this morning. The entire train except the engine was wrecked. One white man and two negroes were killed and two whites fatally wounded. Mr. Stanton, General Superintendent of the road, was on the train and it is believed fatally hurt. Ten or twelve persons were slightly or severely hurt.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—The third battalion of the 60th Rifles left Colchester this morning for the Cape of Good Hope. The streets were decorated with flags, evergreens and mottoes. The corporation presented an address to the troops, wherein the hope was expressed that they would recover the colors of the 24th Regiment. Col. Pemberton replied. The troops marched to the railway station accompanied by four regimental bands.

The communication for which the Grand Duke Nicholas, of Russia, son of the Grand Duke Constantine, has been exiled to Orenburg was a pamphlet in favor of the speedy construction of the Orenburg and Tashkend Railway by way of Kara, Turgai and Sir-Darya River, in order to force England to abandon her resistance to Russia's Eastern policy.

CALCUTTA, Feb. 20.—A report from Mandoloy asserts that the King of Burmah has murdered all the royal princes and their families and removed the new Ministers and replaced them by Ministers who were formerly in office, thus restoring the former despotic government.

LONDON, Feb. 20.—London papers, commenting on the Egyptian crisis, consider that the Khedive, even if he did not contrive the demonstration, will take advantage of it for attempting to restore his personal power.

The Times, in an editorial article, says: Neither England nor France would be disposed to witness with indifference the success of a coup d'etat which would place Egypt under the personal rule of the Khedive.

LONDON, Feb 21.—The British steamer Zanzibar, Captain Pake which sailed from New York, January 11, for Glasgow, and has not since been heard from, is now regarded as lost. Claims for insurance upon her will shortly be settled at Lloyd's.

CALCUTTA, Feb. 21.—Further intelligence from Mandalay states that great consternation prevails there in consequence of the royal murders. The victims numbered 86. The details of the affair are terrible. British interference is hoped for by the people to prevent further bloodshed.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Feb 22.—Yellow fever increasing. Deaths five to ten daily.

GENEVA, Feb. 21.—A number of young citizens, of Zurich, have started for Georgia, where it is proposed to establish a Swiss colony, under the auspices of the Workmen's Society. Others will follow.

BERLIN, Feb. 21.—At the sitting of the medical society, Dr. Nitzhon delivered a lecture on the plague, declaring the epidemic prevailing in Astrachan is the eastern plague. He said the measures adopted by the German government were of no general character. Attention should be principally directed to the necessity of placing the Russian army returning from Turkey under medical inspection.

LONDON, Feb 22.—The British Medical Journal prints the following letter with which we are favored by Dr. Zlekauer, Court physician to the Czar, states that the plague is now nearly extinct. On the 11th inst., there remained only one case at Saletrinio. Although the epidemic was purely local and did not go beyond the villages of Wetlianka, Saletrinio, and Michalawka, yet the mortality was over 80 per cent. The government feels, therefore, called upon to enforce strict quarantine and other sanitary measures.

ST PETERSBURG Feb 23.—Gen. Todleben telegraphs that he commenced the evacuation of Adrianople on the 18th, and the Turks are occupying each position evacuated.

ROME, Feb. 23.—The Pope to-day received representatives of thirteen hundred and two Catholic publications issued in Europe and America, and addressed them on the influence and mission of the press. He incidentally stated that temporal power was indispensable to the Holy See.

The Talmage Trial.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE BROOKLYN PRESBYTERY.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 17.—The Brooklyn Presbytery met this afternoon to hear the report of the special committee on Talmage's "common fame." After the transaction of routine business the committee on Talmage read a report in substance, as follows: In the minds of some members there were doubts as to the extent of the powers of the committee. They would, therefore, ask the Presbytery to instruct them as to their powers, and whether they were to conduct a judicial trial. They also asked for an adjournment until next Monday afternoon, when they would be able to report in full. Discussion followed, also a number of motions, etc. Mr. Talmage said next Monday he would leave for the West. The engagement was with the public, and he could not be excused from it. It was very important that he should be present when the committee makes its report, for if they were going to have a coroner's jury they wanted the corpse present. He continued: "It appeared to him that the matter might be postponed to Wednesday morning, and in the meantime they could rake over his entire life and see if there is anything in it." A resolution was then offered that the committee be instructed that if they find that common fame against Dr. Talmage fulfils all the conditions of the requirements of the book of Discipline, chapter 3, section 5, they shall formulate such common fame into the charge, with specifications and names of the witnesses who report it, and submit the same to the Presbytery. After debate the resolution was adopted by a vote of 19 to 15. Talmage refusing to vote. After a lively debate among the members, Talmage said he should be away one Sabbath, and he should like to have Dr. Crosby fill his pulpit part of the day, and have Dr. Van Dyke the other part, so as to show his people how to preach. Dr. Crosby declined the honor. After further debate the committee adjourned until March next.—Washington Post.

The Mobile Register says:

The act which repeals the present charter took effect from and after the day of its approval, (February 11, 1879.) In this act it is provided that the three Commissioners appointed by the governor have the right to enter, at once, into the possession of all the property and assets of the defunct corporation. But this act provides that the present incumbents of the city offices shall remain in office and exercise police powers until the 15th of March prox., at noon. But the existing government is prohibited from levying any taxes and licenses for the year 1879. So we advise all persons against the payment of such taxes or licenses. Until the beginning of the new regime, the present officials are to be paid by the Commissioners at the present rates of compensation. The act incorporating the Port of Mobile took effect from and after its passage. (February 11, 1879.)

The Mobile Commissioners, appointed by the governor, have already entered upon the duties of office. The new government of the Port of Mobile will be elected, as directed by the act, and will enter upon the duties of office on the 15th of March prox., at noon.

Meteoric Stones Catalogued.

Mr. Charles U. Shepard, of New Haven, Ct., has been for forty years a diligent student of meterology, and has accumulated the largest collection of meteoric stones in the United States, if not in the world. He forwards a catalogue of his collection showing the number of stones and the date and locality of their fall. The collection embraces over five hundred meteoric stones and meteoric irons. The total weight of the collection is about 1,200 pounds. The largest iron procured from Colorado, weighs 438 pounds, and the smallest, from Otsego County, N. Y., weighs half an ounce. The largest entire stone, procured from Muskingum county, Ohio, weighs 53 pounds, and the smallest one, from Sweden, weighs less than fifty grains. The specimens have been gathered from all parts of the world. The catalogue which begins with one which fell November 7, 1492 in Alsace, and ends with one which fell February 12, 1875, in Iowa county, Iowa. Ten are those between 1732 and 1753 but most of the years since the latter date are represented, and some years by several specimens. Nearly every country in the known world is represented in the list. The entire collection is in one of the buildings of Amherst College. Mr. Shepard makes one statement which will surprise most persons. He says: "There have been several instances of deaths occasioned by meteoric stones. Two monks, in different places, were thus killed in Italy, and two sailors on shipboard in Sweden."

MR EDITOR: During the months of September and October there was a foregone conclusion generated abroad, over this country, that our institutions of learning would be so fatally crippled by the epidemic that they could not possibly be resuscitated during the present year. I think many patrons have really delayed to send more on account of this conclusion than for any other reason. Many patrons were financially prostrated by the plague, and for this reason cannot send. We had the fever at Meridian, and this, in addition to other drawbacks, made our prospects very gloomy at the reopening this year. We tried three times before we succeeded in making a successful opening. We advertised first to open on the ninth of September. At that time pupils from abroad could not get here. Trains were not accommodating the public. We then advertised to open on the first of October. This proved to be the very day of the yellow fever panic at Meridian. Our citizens of the city and surrounding country were all alarmed and excited. Our next notice for beginning was made for November 11, 18, 25, or December 2—just anywhere along there. We opened some time; I hardly know when. Confusion and hopelessness were seen and felt in all departments of business, and the dolorous predictions respecting our college were simply heart-rending. It seemed like a time of peril to the enterprise. But our faculty went to work with as much care and promptness as though our halls were full of pupils. Day by day we had additions. We soon had fifteen pupils. Shortly we had twenty-five. Soon, in less than a month, we had fifty. Now we have enrolled one hundred and thirty-five—fifteen more than we enrolled all last year. Our school is popular at home and abroad, and we are now assured that the epidemic of last fall has spent its full force of deleterious effects.

I send you these statements for publication, in order to encourage our friends, and to confirm their faith in the growing condition and successful operations of the college. Pray for us that the chief results of our college work may be the conversion and salvation of the pupils.

I have something else to say, but several short letters are better than one long one.

Lessons from the Life and Death of Sisera.

A battle rages on the slopes and in the valley of Tabor, where, fourteen hundred years afterward, the Peace-Maker was transfigured. Captain Sisera and nine hundred charioteers in chariots of iron, besides a vast number of footmen, wage war against the Lord's host, led on to battle by Deborah and Barak. All night long the air is filled with the sound of prancing horses, the rumble of chariots, the sharp clashing of death cutlery and dying groans as Sisera's hosts are smitten in the valley, or whelmed beneath the God-lifted waves of "that ancient river—the river Kishon." There is one intent listener to the revelry of death. It is the mother of Sisera. During the night, in an agony of suspense, surrounded by her wise ladies, she paces before her window, anon looks through the parted lattice to the blood-stained slope and corpse-strewn valley, which darkness covers as a shroud. Then, as the morning nears its breaking, she wrings her hands and cries: "Why is his chariot so long in coming?" and added to the echo of her frantic voice is the astoundedly wise and comforting expression of her wise ladies: "Yea!" It is morning! The destruction of the Lord's enemies is almost complete. One only survivor, and he only for more ignominious defeat. Hotly pursued, Sisera alights from his chariot to find refuge and death in the tent of Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite. Then sang Deborah her triumphant song: "So let all Thine enemies perish, O Lord!" It needs no very keen insight to see beneath the surface of this thrilling recital many lessons that we may well learn to-day. Let us say then: The mother of Sisera was a mistaken mother! She was not unmotherly. Far from that. Her intense anxiety and watchfulness, her faith in the courage and final conquest of her son, show her true motherliness. But she was a mistaken mother. Ashtaroth or Baal-zebub had been their God, and he had early learned to rebel against Jehovah. Had Jehovah been the mother's God, Jehovah had been Sisera's God. Has not this mother her counterpart among modern mothers, even Christian mothers? The question may be startling, but the fact is evident. Life is a battle. Hosts of darkness contending with hosts of light. There is no neutral spot on earth; no, nor between the gate of heaven and the door of hell. The mistaken mother adjourns the spiritual welfare of the child's soul until he is able to choose for himself what God he shall serve. As though patriots were made at West Point, or Christians by profession theologies! Mother's heart is the child's Calvary, where infant hands first grasp the roots of the cross; or else it is a grove of idols, wherein shameless audacity the young immortal is taught to prostrate before the shrine of pleasure, self-indulgence or pride. When the child forgets the pleasure-parties, the fine dresses, the splendid dinners, has it anything else to think about? It is a wonder, Christian mothers, that you have not seen upon your children's blood-spots crushed fresh from the heart of Christ? Let us say: She was a disappointed mother.

None but a mother can fathom the bitterness of her cries as she waits and watches for Sisera. She felt confident that he would conquer. The spoil would be divided, and Sisera would have trophies of slaves and divers colors of needle-work, and such things as fell to the lot of the spoilers. No, he will not come! Already the eagles scent his carcass from afar, for Sisera is dead. Whether she saw the body or heard the news I know not. This I know, she was a disappointed mother. O, disappointed mother, reading these lines, did you not feel a secret misgiving as your Sisera left home to fight life's battle in the store or in the law office, or in the city mercantile establishment? He was armed with education and ambition, but did not the thought as fire burn itself into your brain that though he could master a day book and a ledger, yet the world, the flesh and the devil might prove too much for him? Did you whisper a word of admonition or warning? No. You felt your life would contradict it. He went. He saw. He was conquered. Now he is morally and spiritually dead, and like a stone he lies across the mouth of the sepulcher of your dead hopes and anticipations. I learn, further, that he who fights against God will find it Jael somewhere in his pathway. Sisera thought he was safe. The battle was over. He had found a retreat. But death met him while sleeping off the effects of the battle. Trace the history of all God's antagonists. Chased of evil conscience, or of remorse, they have sought refuge in drinking or gambling hells, or in some one of the thousand retreats that lead directly to perdition. Listening to the click of the suicide's pistol, or seeing him leap into the river, or standing beside a corpse and an empty poison bottle in a garret, I find confirmation to the assertion that Jael will meet them somewhere. I learn again that the devil starts a man well, but in the end betrays or ruins him. For Sisera, a chariot and prancing horses, and well armed men and promise of spoil; in the end set afoot and murdered by a woman. For Belshazzar, a throne, dominion, wealth, lordly banquets; at last the handwriting of doom, the clutch of the assassin—death. For Herod, castles of marble, power, fame, the deifying buzzas of a flattering populace; then his body a banquet for worms. For the Prodigal his portion, liberty, roystering companions; at last rags, destitution, husks. For Tweed, fine horses, fine houses and millions; in the end months of imprisonment and a broken heart. Why name more? The annals are full of such cases. O, if men could only see from the start the death-head—sin—they would stand back. They see only roses and eglantine and mirthfulness. Unconsciously they go on from step to step like the dogs along the Nile banks, lapping and running, dreading the crocodiles that bask in the sunshine. And while God waits to be gracious the devil waits to secure. The Indian horse-hunter on the Western prairies never weaved more ingenuity into his tactics than the devil weaves to ensnare the sinner. At the hunter's approach the wild horse tosses his mane and gallops off, leaving nothing but a dust cloud behind. The hunter watches the deflection of the sand cloud from the straight line, and crosses the arc of flight, knowing full well that, tired and breathless at nightfall, his victim's neck will be in the lasso, caught. And so the devil, having lifted Sisera in the chariot and given him the reins, can afford to let him drive. Once more, and briefly, I learn the utter incompetency of the world to comfort. The wise ladies who answered the wails of this mother with "yea" have their counterpart to-day among the worldly wise. With their telescopes and leyden jars and scalpels, the worldly-wise stand confounded before God's providence. When our coffined dead lie before us, or when by some crushing calamity we stagger through life in frenzied amazement, or when our willing faculties are by sickness rendered useless, or when coming up through the darkness of sin, our hungry souls cry for God, and we grasp for the door of mercy, what then can comfort or relieve us? The yea! yea! of the scientist and philosopher? No. In that hour give us some old Christian—though he be ignorant in the world's wisdom—who in life has wrestled with the angel at Jabbock, gazed in awe too great for words upon the shining face of Jesus, and groaned in agony upon the slopes of life's Gethsemane, until devils fear him as they do his God. Let him grasp our hands and speak the word "Christ," and it shall be as though a strong angel grasped us, nor let us go until our feet were on the rock. Miserable comforters are all they whose stock of consolation consists of one monosylable, and that "Yea."

A RETROSPECT.

Dear News! do you ever think of days gone by
How we pass'd with school-mates our childish glee,
We sought a spot where Life's pleasant streams
No thought of ills which were, or are to be
But in the happy spring time of our life,
We passed the days unconscious of the toil
That was to be, by nature so ordained,
Before we should shake off this "mortal coil."

Sometimes I sit me pensively and dwell
Upon the rambles of our early days;
How we the hills and through the pleasant dells
We strolled in search of flowers the wildest rare,
How we would cull and store it well away
With treasured care, to scent the cheerless day.
And thus I'd store in memory's cell, for wintry day.
But we are wrong in this, there were some
Who were called home through life's checkered way.

And, sadly weary that the summons come
Not to shroud off the shadows of day
And soon will be, there are who never thank
Of the creator wrapt in sordid care
And though given the precious drink,
Deep, deep, drink, and them unaware.

But some have laid them down in their last sleep
And in the quiet church-yard now repose.
Unconscious of the cares which harrow us,
Knowing he strikes the unwilling as the close
And these are blest, still as the shades of night
Their wake the wishes of each silent tomb
The bright of the future sunlight clear and bright
The not of these things they have long been numb.

Much have I mused upon that quiet sleep
Which sure does scatter balm o'er the grave,
And wished to lay me down in that long sleep
And bathe my weary self in Lethe's wave.
How sweet 'tis not to help that endless rest
To mingle with their elemental clay,
While mortals are by care and grief oppressed
Secretly to fill the scythe's pass away

That this quiet resting place that we
Our friends and kindred fell we're, one
As sated herds into the silent folds
Gather themselves toward the evening's close
And when night spreads over all her sable wings
The whippoorwill perched on the silent stone
Views the new bed and haply there she sings
Her song of love 'neath the stars are gone.

And thus dear News, if it were ours to sleep
With us, 'tis such a flowry bed,
Would you regret the silence that there reigns
And sheds its sacred influence o'er the dead
For, 'tis that beauty, and that wealth ever gave
Oh, let me be assured of these sure rest
And for grave hath no victory, death no sting—
Assured to live with Jesus and the blest.

From the Work.

MY OLD AND MY NEW FIELD.

MR. EDITOR: Just four years ago I was placed in charge of the Chinn Grove circuit, Mississippi Conference—a new circuit, composed of four small and feeble churches. The people much disheartened, being greatly in debt, and many of them destitute of the comforts and conveniences, if not the necessities, of life. Really it was a sad picture. The people hesitated whether or not they should receive their preacher.

But we moved among them. They divided with us, and we felt no lack, and they no damage. Finding this such an easy task, and feeling it a privilege to work for Christ, a few good men readily responded to a proposition to build a parsonage, and went to work according to law and gospel, and soon the work was begun, with fair prospects of success. But, as my successor had a home of his own, the building was delayed for one year.

On my being returned the next year the necessity for the house was renewed, and soon the building was completed; and by a liberal compromise on the part of the builder, and a strong and liberal effort on the part of the same faithful few, the lien was raised, and the property turned over in due form to the church as a preacher's home. In this very neat and comfortable residence the writer has been domiciled for the last two years, where, I may say, it was no little pleasure to me to welcome my successor into the prophet's home erected under my own ministry and supervision. And while I feel that I have failed in a measure to build up the church spiritually, it is gratifying to hope that another thus entering into my labor may be the better able to build up the spiritual interest of our Zion.

The parsonage being thus all of hand, and knowing that work is good for the health and growth of the church, we began last year to build a camp ground, and but for the yellow fever would have succeeded. Indeed, we did so far succeed, and pursue the work as to secure a good hope that it may be completed this year, and become a permanent institution. Again, the improved state of the church is evidenced by the establishment of prayer meetings and family altars in neighborhoods and families where they had never before existed.

If space would allow, I could point out many other signs of thrift and general improvement, such as the growing interest in educational enterprise.

The large increase in all kinds of home productions, together with the gradual reduction of the old debts, either by payment, exchange of paper, or by mutual compromise, generally satisfactory to all, as each seemed to have been in debt to all the rest. Thus I find quite a change for the better in my old field.

Now let me take a peep into my new field, the Beauregard, formerly known as the Providence circuit. The first thing of special note is the new parsonage and our arrival here on the fifth instant. The parsonage is located at Bahala chapel, about the center of the circuit, being twelve and one-half miles from the two extremes, one of which is Beauregard, on the N. O. J. and C. Railroad. It is also a most neat and comfortable house, with yard, garden, crib, stable and buggy-house, all inclosed and ready for use.

On arriving here, one week ago today, after a long, damp drive of about fifty miles, across a rough country, we were made to feel almost ashamed to find quite a number of ladies and gentlemen present with one of those reception dinners that we sometimes read of, but seldom see, awaiting us. After this most welcome introduction we were left alone to meditate upon the promise of the Master. Well may we

"Rush in all things to abound,
The servant is as is his Lord."

I can tell but little of the state of the church, but, so far as my short acquaintance extends, the outlook is somewhat cheering. One thing I observe to my encouragement is that they all speak well of all the preachers they have ever had, especially of their last, Bro. T. C. Bradford. I note this for the comfort of my old friends at Rolling fork.

May I only prove myself worthy of their love, and faithful in my duty to them.

P. HOWARD, P. C.

BAHALA CHAPEL, Feb. 12, 1879.

A WORD FROM OKTUPPA.

MR. EDITOR: Leaving our family in the midst of kind friends, and having "a pass" over the Montgomery and Mobile Railway placed in our hands by brethren beloved, we left the "capitol city" on the twenty-fifth day of January for our work. Arriving at Mobile too late for the United States Mail Steamer Tally, we had a kind invitation and warm welcome to the pleasant home of that prince of Mobile Methodists, W. L. Baker, whose generous hospitality we enjoyed until the following Tuesday.

Sabbath morning we preached at St. Paul's for Bro. James O. Andrew, to a very interesting congregation, many of whom seemed to be "in the spirit on the Lord's day." In mingling with this people we were gratified to learn of the progress the pastor was making, and to find him so fastly and fondly enthroned about their hearts. James has much of that sweet and gentle spirit which so beautifully characterized his sainted father, Bishop Andrew—a spirit which always wins its conquering pathway to the heart, transforming even enemies into friends. May the Lord bless his labors more abundantly! His father was a man whom I loved to know, and whose name I shall ever reverently hold in the most affectionate remembrance, because of his supreme goodness, the surpassing loveliness of his character. On one occasion we accidentally found out the great secret of Bishop Andrew's power—the great secret of that wondrous magnetism which none ever failed to feel who sat beneath his pulpit ministrations, or associated with him in the endearing intimacy of private friendship. He usually paid an annual visit to his old friend, the great and good Daniel Pratt, who since has joined him on the "shining shore." During our pastorate of four years at Prattville he never failed in those annual visits to call on the preacher. We loved to sit at his feet and learn of him, and nothing gave us more pleasure than to perform some office of kindness for him.

At this time he was threatened with paralysis in his lower limbs; he carried with him a hair glove, with which to rub them, to excite a more rapid and vigorous circulation. We asked the privilege, one night, of remaining in his room, and performing this office for him, and, while thus engaged, we discovered, on the point of his knee, a hard substance of considerable development, as unfeeling as callous as the hoof of a horse. We asked: "Bishop, what is this?" He modestly replied: "Jackson, that is the knee upon which I kneel." We shall never forget how diminutive we felt when standing alone that night in the majestic presence of this great man of God. But the secret of his power!—he had it—he was a praying man, living on his knees, and constantly talking to his God. O Lord, upon us, his poor, weak, trembling sons in the gospel,

"The praying spirit breathe,
The watching power impart."

On Sabbath night we preached for Bro. Hill at St. Francis Street, to a large congregation of the refined and intelligent of the city. In this city we spent much of our boyhood's early time, and on this occasion met many of the friends and acquaintances of youth; and from both classes, saints and sinners, it is really marvelous to hear the uniform testimony touching the status of Felix R. Hill. The poor, wayward, blinded men whom he has snatched from the perilous edge of the whirlpool's wave, the broken hearts he has bound up with a blessed and eternal healing, his praise is on every tongue, the people call him blessed.

We did not see Bro. Moore, of Franklin Street, but learned that he was abundant in labors. The Lord give him success.

On Tuesday night the whistle of the United States Mail Steamer Mary Boyd summoned us aboard for the Bigbee river. We found Captain Woodie Stone upon the roof, R. C. Randolph, an old Greensboro friend, in the office, and good Bro. Bob Mathews, with his smiling face, to cheer us on the way. This generous crew not only "chalked our butt" for the season, but Captain Stone very kindly proposed to act as steward for our mission, and began his labors, and gave promise of a rounded year of success, by making an heavy "assessment" against himself. God bless the big-hearted steamboat men of Mobile, and bring them all to everlasting life!

Wednesday night we went ashore at "Wright's Landing," one hundred and forty-nine miles above Mobile, "a stranger in a strange land," without horse, scrip or purse. We introduced ourself to Mr. Wright, the proprietor, who cordially welcomed and invited us to the house. We were not long in ascertaining Mr. Wright to be Bro. Wright, upon whose head the hands of Bishop Paine had been placed, setting him apart as "a deacon in the church of God." We breathed easier—we felt at home.

After a comfortable night's rest we felt refreshed and invigorated for the untrodden journey before us. "But how were we to travel?" This was a question that forced itself upon our consciousness in the stillness of the early dawn. Must we take it a foot, pioneer-like, nothing daunted? No, we are not reduced to that extremity. The genuine Methodist heart has not ceased to pulse in this far corner of the vineyard. Bro. Wright's mule, saddled and bridled, stood at the gate awaiting us. Jehovah Jireh! Hiring a negro man to pilot us through the back water, and place us safely on the further side of "Oktuppa rolling rapidly," we set out for "Kizer Hill," our first appointment. Thursday night we were in the vicinity of the church, and commenced our work at once. We found no "Register," no "class-book," but patient search finally brought to light a dingy sheet containing thirty names. On inquiry, we learned "some were perhaps members, some perhaps not." Some had "moved away," some had "danced out," some had "joined," but had "never been baptized and received in," and had "quit." We went from house to house, collecting our little flock, and laboring to add to the membership. After five day's work, preaching, exhorting, praying, we were made to rejoice by the addition of twenty-two to the membership, and the baptism of nineteen. We appointed our "official board, and placed in their hands a roll of fifty members, and were off for another point. Surely "the Lord is with us, who can be against us?"

The waters are high and the roads are rough, which will necessarily retard our progress.

A. J. BRIGGS.

NICHOLSON'S STORE, ALA., Feb. 9, 1879.

ELBA, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: I suppose you are aware that our low country has, among preachers, a very bad reputation, and they, like all people, carry things too far sometimes. When I received my appointment at the last session of the Conference they began to run me about it, saying that I would get small gophers for change, also that they hardly knew how I would find my way down, that it was not on the map, and if I ever arrived there they would feed me on milk and sweet potatoes. While on my way down I stopped all night with a brother preacher. He gave me a history of the place. Among other things, he said: That on my work I would cross a good many branches, some would seem to be six inches deep, but upon riding in I would swim my horse, which, of course, frightened me, being naturally timid. At the table next morning he gave a conclusion of the whole matter. He had some cake for breakfast. I, of course, enjoyed it. Upon refusing the third or fourth piece, he said, "You will not get any more until you get back here." I am proud to inform you, with all the preachers, after having visited my work, that they are laboring under a wrong impression, and that they may reverse their opinions, for I am persuaded that it is a very acceptable appointment, and am fully satisfied that I can subscribe for your paper, and pay you the greenback for it, instead of gophers. I would say just here, for the benefit of preachers who are apprehensive of falling behind with their assessments if they will let it be known through your columns I will get my people to gather all the small gophers and terapins that they can, and send on for their relief, as we will have money to meet ours. At the last Conference there were several applicants for admission, frightened partly out of their wits, from the fact that it was said the ranks were so full there was no room for more. Now, Mr. Editor, if they will send two more preachers here, we will insure them work enough. There are people in portions of this country who never heard the gospel of Christ; and, if I had the right of suggestion, instead of making a mission out of this Geneva work, I would make a charge of Elba and one other church, a circuit of the rest of the work, and then send a missionary to that portion where Christ has never been preached. Why, sir, I have talked with people who knew nothing of the new birth, of a change of heart, of the witness of the Spirit, or anything connected with regeneration, and yet they go to preaching, such as it is. There are men who call themselves preachers that pretend to "minister to them in holy things," who declare from the pulpit that they would as soon see their children associate with dogs as go to these Methodist Sunday-schools. Sir, "these things ought not so to be," and the only way to remedy this is to send them the gospel. If the preacher does not get three or four hundred dollars he will get a living, and money enough to do him. Why what use have we for young men in the itinerant ranks unless it be to send them to the frontier and the backwoods, to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to men and women who have immortal souls to save, that are passing away from time to eternity, "without God and without hope in the world."

GENEVA.

The Habit of Reverence.

A Christian gentleman said the other day: "I was brought up to reverence the Sabbath, the ministry and the sanctuary, and that has been the habit of my life." And that was a notable passage in the address of the Rev. Dr. Dix, rector of Trinity Church, at the quarter millennial celebration of the Collegiate Reformed Dutch Church of New York, in which he said: "We think that we find among the children many of those qualities and traits which pleased us in the fathers. You have little or nothing to do with sensational religion; you seem a sober-minded, steady-going folk; you do not shock us by exhibitions of unwholesome excitement, nor do you, by your manners or words, rob religion of her dignity, nor weaken the habit of reverence in the hearts of the young."

It was a just description and a proper declaration of the traditional character of the Reformed Church in America, as well as of that venerable old church, which is the mother of the denomination in this country.

"Ye shall keep my Sabbaths and reverence my sanctuary" is the divine command. A Sabbath-breaking people may soon become a Sabbath-less people, and that means a people without God and without self-control. The feelings of reverence for God and for religion, and for the sanctuary and its worships, are essential to any proper reverence for man, for government, and for the best interests of humanity. The most humble church edifice in the land stands for this idea. Every spire and tower uplift it before the people. Whatever tends even indirectly to lessen or spoil or break down that profound sentiment and all pervading habit, is just so much done to destroy the principles upon which free government is founded, and by which society is held together. A nation that has lost its reverence for holy things has lost character and power for good among the nations, and is far on the way to its own destruction.

Those churches and the ministers of our times, and of our own land, who have deliberately and habitually lowered the standard, and have introduced sensational and irreverent novelties into their methods of church work, and into their pulpits, have set bad examples and done irreparable mischief. Unless the old connection between cause and effect no longer exists, they will in due time reap what they have sown. Whatever shocks the devotional feelings, and introduces ludicrous or painful and unpleasant associations with the place and the worship, and the purpose of the house of God, is inexcusable. It were better to carry the sentiment of veneration even to a ritualistic extreme than to desecrate the sanctuary by the opposite extravagances.

Not less unscriptural, and scarcely less hurtful in their tendencies, are those very questionable "entertainments," "exhibitions," "sociables," and dramatic and other indiscretions which are fast turning some church edifices into show rooms and society halls. The principle is wrong, and its manifestations are unwholesome to piety and worship. The world itself laughs in its sleeve at them while it helps them on, and they who insist upon the divine principle of reverence are flouted at as antiquated and "puritanical." But time will show which is right.—Christian Intelligencer.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately, give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss" etc. are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS R. M. BENNETT died, of consumption, in Madison county, near Madison Station, Miss., November 19, 1878.

Sister Bennett was born in Washington county, Miss., August 6, 1816. Her father, Enoch Rose, moved to Madison county in the year 1829, and settled near Pearl River Church. His house was the stopping-place for the itinerant preacher. He was a leading Methodist, and dedicated his children to God. Sister Bennett, at the age of fifteen years embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. She told the writer that her conversion was very bright and satisfactory, and after forty-seven years had passed she remembered the time and place. She was married to H. C. Bennett, December 4, 1834, and moved to Weaverville, Simpson county, and lived there nearly eight years, when they removed back to Madison county, and settled near her father's old homestead, where she lived a faithful Christian until her death. The writer of this knew her intimately for two years, and had many conversations with her, during her last illness, upon the subject of religion, and her experience was always clear and distinct. She manifested great resignation to the will of God, and expressed the most perfect assurance of her acceptance with Him. She said on one occasion that she had not prayed once for recovery of health, and would not. She only wanted the Lord's will done in her. Just thirteen months before her death she lost one of her daughters. This was a sad affliction for one in her feeble health, but she made it the occasion for a special blessing. The Lord heard her cry, and on the day her daughter was buried she entered into perfect love. The fullness of blessing. Her illness was long and painful, but she never complained. When the subject of the probable near approach of death was mentioned she manifested no trepidation or alarm, but calmly said she was prepared and waiting the solemn hour. She looked forward with joy to death as the time when she would begin a better and more perfect existence. When death came she was not dismayed, but calmly fell asleep in Jesus.

D. C. LANGFORD.

MR. ABSOLOM GRANT died at his residence in Warren county, Miss., on the fourteenth of October, 1878, of yellow fever, aged about seventy-nine years.

Of Mr. Grant's early life we know but little. He was a native of North Carolina, where he spent the early part of his life; but being possessed of a great spirit of energy and enterprise, he gave up his early home and ties and moved West in search of a new home and friends, yet never losing a fondness for those of his old.

Mr. Grant came to this county a member of the Methodist Church, and was until his death a staunch pillar of the church at Oak Ridge. He was firm in his dealings toward his fellowman, always governed by what was right and just. He was a faithful and jealous husband, a good, kind father, and a most excellent and devoted husband. When we realize that we can no more grasp his social hand, hear his venerable voice, nor more hear his fervent and Christian prayers, we must mourn for such a loss. We cannot wish his return to this world of pain and sorrow, but quietly submit to the will of God, who doeth all things well. We know that "our loss is his eternal gain." Truly "in the midst of life we are in death." Our country has been clouded with gloom and sadness. The smiles of cheerfulness have been turned to tears of weeping and mourning, the songs of mirth have been supplanted by the funeral dirge; all seems sadness and sorrow; but we must think God does it as well with us as it is. Many good and useful men have been taken away, the young as well as the old, among them our aged Christian and respected friend. He leaves an excellent wife, a large family of children, relatives and friends to mourn his loss. We sincerely sympathize with his family in their bereavement. Some were absent and could not be with him in his last illness, but we know their sorrow. If present they would have been but so many victims to the sad scourge; they have the sympathies of many sorrowing friends. May God in His mercy ever guide and protect them through life.

MISS EMMA LILLIAN BROWN died, of typhoid fever, at the residence of her parents, in the town of Mansfield, La., September 30, 1878, in the twenty-second year of her age.

The deceased was the embodiment of womanly virtues and of the noblest characteristics of a lovable person. She was kind and obedient to her parents, devoted to her brothers and sisters, and true to every friend and to every vow. She had decided views of propriety, of right and wrong, and what conscience dictated to be done, that she did without regard to consequences. The impromptus of the light-minded and the gay never swerved her from the paths of duty; but she moved steadily onward and upward in the line of right.

In the fall of 1877, under the ministry of Bro. J. E. Bradley, she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and lived and died a consistent member. Often after she had joined the church she was invited and even urged to attend dancing parties, but always firmly but respectfully declined, saying that such amusements had lost their charm.

She is greatly missed in the social circles of our society, but more at the fireside of her own sweet home, where her sunny face and busy hand gave many a joy, and gladdened many a loving heart.

She was a member of our Sunday-school, and as we are told, often alluded in pathetic and tender eloquence to the angel-like song of childhood as it died away upon the wings of the morning. On Sabbath evening before she died on Monday morning she sang in a soft, sweet voice the stanza beginning:

"Gracious Saviour can it be,
There awaits a crown for me?"

She died with the armor on, in the triumphs of a living faith, and stands to-day with the loved of God around His throne in heaven, waiting to welcome her aged father and mother, brothers and sisters and many dear friends, all of whom must follow soon.

A FRIEND.

PHILIP PRITCHITT died, at his residence near Mount Hilliard, Bullock county, Ala., January 1, 1879. For forty years he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a class-leader during most of that time. He loved the church of his choice, her doctrines, her usages and her peculiar institutions. His place was always filled at church, unless Providentially hindered. He loved the class-meeting; it was a great means of grace to him. He was a man of prayer. Often has he been seen in the secret grove pouring out his soul to God in prayer, and often has he been heard rejoicing in the love of God when he thought no one saw him but God alone.

When the summons came he was ready. Though he was speechless, and could not express his feelings, yet a few weeks only had passed when asked by his pastor what he would take for his hopes of heaven. He answered emphatically: "I would not take ten thousand such worlds as this for my hope of heaven." Thus lived and died Father Pritchitt. In his death the church has lost one of its oldest and most useful members.

J. W. HEDRICK.

BRO. W. B. JONES was born in Christian county, Ky., May 15, 1815, and died at his home in Smith county, Miss., January 1, 1879. He died of typhoid fever after twenty four days sickness. He was a member of the Methodist Church, and was well and favorably known as a Christian and prosperous citizen of the county. A widow and six children are left to emulate his virtues, and strive for the inheritance of the saints in light.

C. MCDONALD.

ELIAS FORT CONNELL

Mr. Editor: It is with a sad heart that I write of the death of our departed brother. He was sick when I left home to attend the late session of our Conference at New Orleans, and I expected then that his end was near. When I returned I found him in a semi-conscious state, and he lingered but a few days.

In some respects Bro. Connell was a remarkable man. His religion was not of the emotional kind, but he acted upon principle. He was constant and unyielding in his habits. He was a man of great force of character. He would have been recognized as a man of note anywhere. His native ability, large experience and liberality of soul made him a useful man both to his neighborhood and church. The large number of all classes of society who attended his funeral attested the high sense of his character. His neighborhood will miss him, for in it he was the leading spirit of enterprise, the one most sought after for advice, and the benefactor of the poor and needy. His church will miss him, for he gave it financial support and wise leadership in all temporalities. His family will miss him, for he provided for them liberally, gave them respectability in society, and was true to all his obligations. His wife is broken-hearted. May God recompense her for her sorrow, and prove a father to the orphans. Our loss is great, but it is his eternal gain.

He was born in Robinson county, Tenn., March 7, 1812, and died in his home in Fillmore, Bossier parish, La., January 27, 1879. He had been a member of the church about twenty-five years.

J. W. MEDLOCK.

EUGENIA, only daughter of Wiley A. and Ann Tooner, and wife of Mr. Isaac Graves, was born near Hamboro, Miss., July 27, 1857, and died of pneumonia, in Pearlington, Miss., January 26, 1879. In early life this estimable young lady was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the preaching of Rev. Theophilus Moody, and so far as we are able to judge from our limited standpoint, she lived a consistent life. She was married about two years ago to Bro. Isaac Graves, and it was when her own sweet Lily had only bloomed a few months upon her bosom the fairest flower in all the realm of nature to her that she was called away. She seemed to have premises to her last sickness, a presentiment of her early death, and often talked freely with her mother about it, and her constant testimony was: "I am not afraid to die." She was for the most part unconscious during her last sickness. Occasionally, however, she would have a lucid moment. At one time she said to her husband: "I must leave you." At another time she spoke to her mother: "I must leave this world." At another time she gave expressions of joy, and at another time she tried to sing a hymn. She leaves one little infant four months old, husband, father, mother, and an only brother to mourn her loss. May the Lord comfort them.

W.

OUR friend, JENNIE PRACY MILLS, was a member of the Methodist Church, and a zealous teacher in our Sunday-school at Osyville, Miss., her grandmother, under whose guidance she was brought up, has the burden and grief to bear, though she has the hearty sympathy of all. Our Sunday-school will miss her bright presence for a long time. It is when we involuntarily turn to her old station that we realize how great a place she filled in our hearts. She died during the epidemic last fall, in her thirteenth year, and at a time when many of her old friends were away. All here felt the loss so much that we had no heart for the usual celebrations during Christmas. We know she is now gone. While we commend her spirit to God, who gave it, and resign her body to its last sleep, we will cherish her memory here in our hearts.

THE SHADOW OF THE ROCK.

BY RAY PALMER.

A hiding place from the wind and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place; as the shadow of a great Rock in a weary land.—Isaiah xxxii, 2.

In the shadow of the Rock
Let me rest,
When I feel the tempest's shock
Thrill my breast;
All in vain the storm shall sweep,
While I hide,
And my tranquil station keep
By Thy side.

On the parched and desert way
Where I tread,
With the scorching noon-tide ray
O'er my head;
Let me find the welcome shade,
Cool and still,
And my weary steps be stayed
While I will.

I in peace will rest me there
Till I see
That the skies again are fair
Over me;
That the burning hearts are past,
And the day
Bids the traveler at last
Go his way.

Then my pilgrim staff I'll take,
And once more
I'll my onward journey make,
As before;
And with joyous heart and strong
I will raise
Unto Thee, O Rock, a song
Glad with praise!

—Sunday Afternoon.

Folks that Have Been Hung.

A little garden separated our house, in the days of my early childhood, from our nearest neighbor. A walk reached from door to door, so that the families had easy intercourse without going into the street. A middle-aged woman, of the working class—and we were all of that class in that region—was there as a temporary nurse, and of a summer Sunday afternoon she stepped across into our house, and said:

"Have you got something good to read, Sunday, about folks that have been hung, or that kind?"

We hunted up a book for her, but I do not remember that we found just what her appetite most craved, as suitable for Sunday reading of a summer day. She wanted something serious as became the Sabbath and edifying; the trial, dying confession and execution of a murderer or two promised to be the entertainment adapted to her taste and wants.

She was not peculiar in this respect. An illiterate woman, she was a fair example of millions who, having little information from books, delight in narratives that have tragedy, crime and blood as their raw material. In England, when Newgate was flourishing, its calendar of crime, especially the confession of murderers, was more popular than any reading which the masses enjoyed. "Broadsides," or handbills, were circulated in myriads, with pictures of the gallows and coffins, and with the last words of the condemned. Some of these are now preserved in collections, and much of the same sort has doubtless been published within a month, in our own country.

This taste of the "common people" for the tragic scenes of the scaffold is largely addressed by public speakers, preachers often using illustrations from similar scenes. One of these I heard:

A preacher was expatiating on the blessedness of pardon; and he described a prisoner as brought from his dungeon to the place of execution; the scene was graphically portrayed; the spectators, among them friends in frantic grief; the man is pinioned for the sacrifice; the drop is about to fall; when lo! a messenger comes with a pardon in his hand.

"Pardon?" exclaimed the preacher, "Pardon, Pardon! Oh, it is the sweetest word, the sweetest word, in—in—in all the diction—ary!"

He struggled hard for a climax, and exhausted himself on the book that had all the words. It was on a similar theme, and with very nearly the same purpose, that the Rev. Dr. Talmadge, president of a college in Georgia, and an excellent man whom I had the pleasure of knowing, was discoursing before a very remarkable audience. His hearers were the inmates of a lunatic asylum. Even to them the gospel is preached with comforting power. Minds in ruin may be rebuilt and established; and to them the sweet words of eternal life and love come as music full of peace. All sinners have madness in their hearts, and many outside of the asylum are more desperate and hopeless than some who are in.

Dr. Talmadge was addressing the insane, and to illustrate the duty of immediate repentance and the danger of delay for one moment, he described the execution of a criminal as imminent; he is on the scaffold; the fatal moment is at hand; when afar in the distance is seen a man riding in hot haste; there is but an instant or two before the drop will fall; if the rider is one minute behind the time, he will be eternally too late; the speaker dallied in his description, whetting the anxiety of his hearers, whose impatience increased rapidly, till one of the lunatics, more excitable than the rest, leaped from his seat and cried out:

"I say, doctor, couldn't you hurry up a little; they'll hang that man if you don't."

It is not true that the taste for reading "about folks that have been hung" has grown of late years, except as a bad taste grows by what it feeds on, and the supply has been vastly increased. The newspapers now give far more space to the details of crime and its consequences, and the more the people read the more they crave. It is quite usual to censure the secular press for dealing so extensively in reports of vice, but we forget that the paper is made for those who want it, not for those who prefer something else. If a Christian render meets with a passage in his religious paper that offends him, he punishes himself by taking another that is not half so good on the whole. But he frets and scolds every day because his secular journal has so many crimes and scandals; still, he reads them attentively, and waits for more in the next. It is evil; and evil with a slight transposition is vile and with one letter prefixed is devil; who is evil and vile. And so like begets like. By that weird fascination which tempts a man to throw himself from a precipice, these details of vice and crime beguile the young and weak into the current, to their danger and often to their ruin. Even suicide has been caused by reading of it. Children have been seduced into murder by hearing recitals of crime.

We cannot expect the makers of books and papers to publish what the people will not buy. Even some of our societies, with funds given by charity to provide pure literature for the million, must print what people will read, or the depository becomes a drug store. Hence they produce thousands of books, not "bad," but so "popular" as to be in the judgment of many mere pious novels, without point or power.

And so we come back to the woman who wanted "something good to read Sundays, about folks that have been hung, or that kind."

That kind! Yes, the press teems with it. Until our executions have come to be spectacles to be seen and reproduced in the newspaper. We had a few days ago the report of one where the condemned man gave out the hymn that was sung as he was swung off, and I thought that scenic effect could no further go.—Irenæus, in New York Observer.

The Pew Rebuking the Pulpit.

There were two Talmages in the Brooklyn Tabernacle. The one in the pulpit when the effort was making to raise the debt sent the following telegram to an absent member:

"BROOKLYN, Jan. 30, 1878.

"John F. Talmage, Eutaw House, Baltimore: Will you and Mr. Hobbs allow me to pledge you each for $5 000 provided I make up to each of you privately the difference between your subscriptions and $5,000? Telegraph immediately.

"T. DE WITT TALMAGE."

The one in the pew sent the following answer:

"BALTIMORE, Jan. 30, 1878.

"The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage: Cannot permit course suggested. Frankness, earnestness and faith without deception, will command success. Do not telegraph again, as Hobbs and self are used up now thinking and talking over it.

"JOHN F. TALMAGE."

The proposition made by the clergyman was that the layman should publicly pledge a large sum to the debt, while it was understood between the parties that he should really pay only a small part of the sum. The answer of the layman was that he would not consent to tell a lie. For once, at least, the lay Talmage might well have taken the pulpit, while the clerical Talmage should have taken his seat in the pews to learn the foundations of Christian doctrine.

If one could take out of sensationalism the element of dishonesty, there would be little left in it to complain of. It is the exaggeration of rant which is its vice; and of this vice Dr. Talmage is the American master. It colors things brighter or darker than they actually are. It states, for effect, what is not true. "In the days of Solomon silver was so plenty in Jerusalem," said Dr Talmage, in one of his sermons, "that I don't suppose that if a man saw in the streets a piece of silver as big as his fist he would stoop to pick it up." Now Dr. Talmage did not believe any such thing; or, at least, having a vague notion of the meaning of a passage of Scripture, did not care enough about being truthful to find out what it meant. Still further, this rant pretends to a depth of feeling which it does not possess. This is the ruling characteristic of such preaching as Dr. Talmage's. It is very sound—indeed, as the Scotchman said of a sermon, "It is a' sound;" but it impresses one as strained, hollow, dishonest. We do not like to speak in such terms of a popular preacher; but we were compelled to some months ago, when, in his later utterances on prevailing vice, we saw that his sensationalism was likely to bring serious dishonor on the cause of Christianity.

This constant and long pursued effort after sensational effect is a threatening danger of the American pulpit; and we wish we were not compelled to believe that it must produce a serious influence on the preacher's notions as to the claims of truth and honest dealing out of the pulpit. We do not like to recall Dr. Talmage's very equivocal conduct, which at the time appeared to us far from honorable, in the matter of his withdrawal from the editorship of the Christian at Work and his assumption of that of the Advance. Here we see a similar evidence of lack of good faith and apprehension of the claims of "frankness, earnestness and faith without deception" in the effort to raise the amount required to pay off the debt of the church. The pastor's own subscription was an equivocal one, and there appears to have been other crookedness besides this, which was attempted in the case of Mr. John E. Talmage. In the trial last week of the case between Mr. Gelston and the trustees, who tried to compel him to pay his subscription, although no decision was rendered by the jury, it was made evident that those who subscribed were not frankly dealt with. We do not mean to say that Dr. Talmage has been, even in this telegram to his namesake, nor in his difficulty with the Christian at Work, consciously and wilfully dishonest; but there is a deeper truth than that uttered by the Presbyterian, when speaking of his preaching, it says:

"We represent the feelings of a large majority of the ministers of Christ, and especially of Presbyterian ministers, when we say that the reports which are read on every Monday morning of things said and done in the Brooklyn Tabernacle on the Lord's Day are simply matters for inexpressible humiliation. Dr. Talmage has a right to preach the gospel after the method which he may think best adapted to reach the end—the salvation of men; but he is also a member of a Christian brotherhood, and he has no right to put them to shame by inexcusable eccentricities."

The deeper truth is that the evil essence in these eccentricities is the untruth of their rant, and that untruth must find its cause or its effect in the character. There is a moral incapacity in some men, which is different from a moral perversity. Dr. Talmage, like Dr. Fulton, does not impress us as a man who sees the offense of his language and acts, or who would perceive any moral impropriety in the telegram which he sent to Baltimore. But, if the pulpit cannot be utterly honest and true; above all, if it reaches "deception," it is time for the pews to rebuke it.—Independent.

Dr. Pressensé, of Paris, writes very hopefully to the Family Treasury in regard to the "Religious State of France." He declares that movements toward Protestantism are to be seen in many parts of the country and among all classes. He says: "A movement of much interest has begun in the ranks of those who were formerly free thinkers. They have come to understand that pure negations are without power, that they cannot get the better even of a false religion. Besides, free thinkers have seen not a few of their own class act with extraordinary inconsistency in the prospect of death. While in health they held aloft, with wonderful boldness the flag of unbelief; but toward the end their courage failed them—they sent for the priests and died in the open profession of the faith they had sought to destroy. In view of these things, many have come to be persuaded that a purely abstract philosophy must always be beaten by the Capuchins and the Jesuits, and that to overcome one religion which is defective, you must have another and a better to put in its place. This is what has led to the formation of a new party." In others increasing dissatisfaction with the doctrines of Rome is impelling them to Protestant teachers. These indications lead such cautious observers as Dr. Pressensé to say, "We have a firm hope that we are approaching a new period in the religious history of France." He closes his articles with these words: "To sum up: France at this moment sees opening before her, in connection with the work of God, more beautiful prospects than she has had for three centuries. Evil still prevails. Superstition spreads its darkness over thousands of souls, and infidelity is misleading victims who are almost as numerous. But still, on these troubled and sombre waters, the Spirit of God is moving as over another Chaos, and by and by we shall see emerging a new and most attractive of life."—Christian Intelligencer.

—The oldest Bishop in the Church of England is Rev. Alfred Ollivant, Bishop of Llandaff, aged 81; the youngest is Right Rev. Rowley Hill, Bishop of Sodor and Man, aged 41. The oldest prelate of the Irish Episcopal Church is Right Rev. John Robert Darley, Bishop of Kilmore, aged 79; the youngest, Right Rev. Robert Samuel Gregg, Bishop of Cork, aged 45.

—The Church of England Bishop of Gibraltar recently visited Cyprus and spent some time in conversation with the Greek Archbishop. Dr. Sandford stated that the special object he had in traveling from Malta to Cyprus was to place in the hands of His Holiness a letter which the Archbishop of Canterbury had commissioned him to deliver. The Greek Archbishop assured Dr. Sandford that he would render all the help in his power to any Anglican congregations that might be formed in Cyprus. Then they had coffee and sweetmeats, pledged brotherly love, promised each other their prayers and parted.

—Don Francisco de Paula Ruet, the "dean of the Spanish pastors," the first Spanish Protestant who in our days suffered imprisonment and exile for the Gospel's sake, died at Madrid on the 18th of November last. He was born in Barcelona in 1826, was converted at Turin, when nineteen years old; returning to his home to preach the pure word of God, he was condemned to perpetual banishment. He then became pastor at Gibraltar, but returned to Madrid after the revolution of 1868, where he preached to Geon Chapel.

—Methodist itineracy is receiving copyists. Thus we read in an English newspaper that "since disestablishment the changes in the appointments of the Episcopal clergy have been very numerous, and in some dioceses quite exceed, on the average, the moves of the Methodist ministers," and that "within the last few days the Roman Catholic Bishop of Meath has made some thirty clerical changes in his diocese, and the policy of the Irish Roman Catholic hierarchy of late years has been directed toward keeping the priesthood frequently moving.

—Last June a party of Indians from Fort Simpson, British Columbia, arrived at Wrangel, and instituted a series of meetings for divine worship. The Stickeens and other tribes here really knew nothing about Christianity. They soon became greatly interested in the proceedings of their Christian visitors, and a few, after many inquiries, concluded to try the "new life" of which they had heard. Since then the few have become a hundred, and the tribe are asking for a Christian teacher—for some one to explain to them the way.

—Mr Hermes takes the place of Dr. Herrmann as president of the Supreme Consistory of the Church of Prussia. He is said to be even more decidedly orthodox in his religious views than his predecessor.

—The English Church Union claims a membership of 17,750, including 10 bishops, 2,500 clergymen, the remainder being laymen. During the past ten years the Union has spent nearly $200,000 in defensive litigation.

—The Baptist Hand Book for 1879 shows that the denomination now has in Great Britain 2 587 churches, 3 451 chapels, 276,348 members, 1 879 pastors, 2 652 evangelists, 40,216 Sunday-school teachers and 399 317 Sunday-school scholars. During the past year about $95,000 has been raised for evangelistic work, being an increase of nearly 6 500 upon 1877—an encouraging feature considering the depression of trade and other tendencies having a similar direction. Seventeen new churches—eight of them within metropolitan boundaries—have been established; 63 new chapels have been erected—14 in Wales and 6 in Scotland—at a total cost of about $540,000, providing accommodation for about 20,000 persons; 28 new school-rooms have within the same period come into existence, providing for over 4 000 children, at a cost of nearly $65,000. Existing chapels have also been enlarged and improved, at an aggregate cost of about $110,000, while chapel debts have been diminished to the extent of about $480 000.

—The London Christian World publishes the following: "Notwithstanding all the protests that have been uplifted against it, there can be little doubt that the next few days will see the lottery scheme for the relief of the City of Glasgow Bank shareholders fairly floated. The Rev. G. Robson, Inverness, hopes that the scheme "will be publicly reprobated by the Church of God in the land," and a Free Churchman unknown has strongly advocated the exercise of church discipline on all those who countenance the nefarious plan. Rather awkward results would ensue from the adoption of the Free Churchman's suggestion, for among the chief promoters of the lottery are to be found Sir James Watson, Dr. Anderson Kirkwood, and Sir Peter Coats who may be regarded as fairly representing the lay element in Established, Free, and United Presbyterian Churches respectively."

—The Testimonial Fund now being raised in commemoration of the close of the twenty-fifth year of Rev. Mr. Spurgeon's pastorate, at last report reached about $32 000. Mr. Spurgeon is still ill and has gone to France for a three months' vacation.

—The American Israelite scouts the notion that the Jews are negotiating for Palestine, or have any desire or intention of buying it, calling it a "wild goose speculation." It says Jewish millionaries are not famous for the kind of liberality that would be required for such an enterprise. But if the purchase were made, what reason is there to believe the Jews would sunder their present national ties for a by-no means desirable condition. The Jew no longer feels any necessity or inclination to return to the home of the patriarchs. And it must not be forgotten that after Mecca, Jerusalem is the most holy city of Islamism, as precious to the Mussulman as to the Jew. The Sultan would no more sell the Mosque of Omar than the shrine at Mecca, or the Pope would sell the Cathedral of St. Peter's, at Rome. The Jew flourishes better in the heart of Christendom than anywhere else.

—Mr. Sankey was at Newcastle, England, in the first and second weeks of January. He sang, sermons were preached by resident ministers of various denominations, and the buildings, not simply the room in which Mr. Sankey was, were crowded. The Circus-building was opened on Sabbath for services, and every available room was filled, about 4,000 persons being present, mainly young men and workingmen. The rooms were filled some time before the hour of service. In the evening hundreds were compelled to turn away, for there was not even standing-room for them. Frequently during the week over 2,000 were in attendance, and overflow meetings were constantly necessary.—Christian Intelligencer.

—The Catholic press is publishing a letter from Bishop Meurin, of India, asserting that the body of St. Francis Xavier, who died in 1552, on being exhumed recently at Goa, was found uncorrupted and unchanged. The Bishop says he examined the body thoroughly. "I was allowed to lift up the right foot, and, being by no means of an enthusiastic frame of mind, to inspect it leisurely from all sides. The same I did with the hand and the head. The right foot was quite complete and intact; the heel, the sole, the toes, the nails, the muscles and tendons beneath the skin, everything in perfect order and well preserved, though hardened, shrivelled, and of a brownish color." The eyes were not sunken, says the Bishop, and there were no signs of decay. Yet the body was never embalmed.

—The value of system in missionary efforts has a good illustration in a report from a Baptist chapel in Liverpool, England. While taking simply an annual collection, the congregation raised for foreign missions from £70 to £100 a year ($350 to $500). They then, last year apparently, tried the plan of monthly contributions by means of envelopes furnished by lady collectors, and raised the first year £1050 ($5,300.)

—When the handsome new building of the Second Baptist Church in St. Louis burned down the other day, the Jews did a generous thing in offering the use of their synagogue free of charge; and the Baptists showed their appreciation by accepting it.

ROBIN'S OPINION.

Said the boy, "I'll climb that tree,
And bring down a nest I know."
Quoth the girl, "I will not see
Little birds defrauded so,
Cowardly their nest to take,
And their little hearts to break.
Leave them happy for my sake—
Surely little birds can feel."

And the little robin bird
(Nice brown back and crimson breast)
All the conversation heard,
Sitting, trembling in his nest.
"What a world" he cried, "of bliss,
Full of birds and girls, were this!
Blithe we'd answer to their call;
But a great mistake it is
Boys were ever made at all."

"THE BIBLE."—What a little girl eleven years of age wrote about the Bible.

"The word Bible means book, and is used only for the sacred Scriptures. It is the revealed word of God. It is also divided into two parts—the Old and New Testaments. The Old Testament contains thirty-nine books, and the New twenty-seven. In the Bible great and precious promises we find; that if we sin and will come to God confessing our faults he will forgive us, and if we love, serve and obey him, he will give us a happy home beyond the skies, where all is light and life and love. We learn from the Bible that God is the Creator and preserver of all things, and that He is the rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. 'God is a Spirit; and they that worship Him must worship Him in Spirit and in truth.' We learn from the Bible that God is omnipresent. If we had wings to fly to the ends of the earth, he would be there and know all we think or do. If we were to ascend into heaven, behold! he would be there surrounded with angels. I love to read the Bible, because it tells us how to do and be good, that we may inherit eternal life. It tells us of a Friend who died for our redemption, and is now in heaven interceding for us. Oh! what a sad thought to think of being as some people are, without the Bible, the holy and divine word of God. Then, as we are blessed with this great gift, let us study it and perform our duty as therein recorded, that we may enjoy the blessings of that home prepared for us from the foundation of the world."

WATKINS-VILLE, Miss., Nov. 30, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I read your excellent paper, and I like it very much, especially the little folks' column. Our preacher is Rev. N. B Young. We all love him so much. Joshua commanded the sun to stand still. Samson composed the riddle: "Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness." Your little friend,

Two Little Words.

"Don't know what is the reason, but I cannot help liking Tommy Williams. He's the best boy in the whole school," said Willie Gardner as he sat at the fire one evening after supper.

"Did you ever try to think what is the reason that your love him?" asked his mother, who sat near him. "There must be something good in the boy, for we always love what is good."

"Well, there may be something about him that other boys have not got; but it is not his clothes, nor his appearance, nor his readiness at his lessons; for there are several boys ahead of him in all those things. And all the boys like him as well as I do," said Willie.

"Yes, and it is the same with his sister Maggie," broke in Willie's sister Jennie, who had been listening to the conversation, as if waiting her time to speak. "All the children say she is the nicest girl in the school."

The mother appeared to be almost as much interested as her children in trying to find out what it was that made the two they spoke of such favorites.

But I think she did it to see what her girl or boy would say. Again she put the question: "Can you not tell me something in which they differ from the other children of the school? Think a minute."

"Well, let me see," said Willie, thoughtfully, "He don't get angry and quarrel, that's sure; and he don't say words he should not; and he don't get out of patience when I ask him sometimes to help me find hard map questions. He don't say, 'go away and do it yourself' as some of the boys do. And when I help him at his arithmetic he always looks so pleased and says, 'Thank you, Willie.' I did'nt use to say, 'Thank you,' always when boys did anything for me; but now I have learned to say it, and it sounds well. I like to hear a boy say it."

"And his sister is just like him," said Maggie, quickly, as if she were afraid her brother would get ahead of her in talking.

"Might it not be," asked their mother, "that it is this kindness of manner, this little 'Thank you,' that makes these children so agreeable?"

A ray of light seemed to strike Willie with those words of his mother; and he answered somewhat slowly, as if half in doubt, "Yes, I think it is. It must be."

Their mother, wishing to draw their attention still more to the magic power of these two words, and the good habit of which they were a sign, inquired further: "Did you notice whether there are any other children who say, 'Thank you?'"

Willie was thoughtful for a moment, and in the meantime his sister remembered a little incident which had happened that day on their way home from school, and replied, "Yes, there is Susie Blake. She is just such a girl as Maggie, and the children like her just as much. And I remember how she always says, 'Thank you,' when you do anything for her."

"You see now, dear children," added their mother, "how much there is in the habit of being always thankful. Then, if you are thankful, you must also be kind; for both go together, and we cannot have the one without the other. It pleases me very much, Willie, to see that you have learned to say these two little words from hearing Tommy Williams use them. Good boys and girls always try to practice the virtue they see others practice. Besides, it is only right that we should feel grateful to others for the favor they do us. And it is easy, it costs no time nor trouble. It may be that you will forget it sometimes, but do not lose courage. Try, try again. Be determined, and keep up your good resolution till you have succeeded in acquiring the habit, then it will become natural. But you should try to feel thankful, not merely to say the words with your lips. And you should be thankful not only to grown up people, but to every one, even to little children."

The Young Merchants.

Two country lads came, at an early hour to a market town; and, arranging their little stands, sat down to wait for customers. One was furnished with fruits and vegetables of the boys' own cultivation, and the other supplied with lobsters and fish. The market hours passed along, and each little merchant saw with pleasure his stores steadily decreasing, and an equivalent in silver shining in his little money cup. The last melon lay on Harry's stand, when a gentleman came by, and placing his hand upon it, said—

"What a fine large melon! What do you ask for it, my boy?"

"The melon is the last I have, sir; and though it looks very fair, there is an unsound spot in it," said the boy, turning it over.

"So there is," said the man; "I think I will not take it. But," he added, looking into the boy's fine open countenance, "is it very business-like to point out the defects of your fruit to the customers?"

"It is better than being dishonest," said the boy, modestly.

"You are right, little fellow; always remember that principle and you will find favor with God and man also. I shall remember your little stand in the future."

"Are those lobsters fresh?" he continued, turning to Ben Williams.

"Yes, sir, fresh this morning; I caught them myself," was the reply, and a purchase being made, the gentleman went away.

"Harry, what a fool you were to show the gentleman that spot in the melon. Now you can take it home for your pains, or throw it away. How much wiser is he about those lobsters? I caught yesterday? Sold them for the same price I did the fresh ones. He would never have looked at the melon until he had gone away."

"Ben, I would not tell a lie, or act one either, for twice what I have earned this morning. Besides, I shall be better off in the end, for I have gained a customer, and you have lost one."

A man who, by lying and cheating, drives away one customer a day, will in a little while have very few left, and they will soon find him out and leave him.—Little Christian.

The Motherless.

Sitting in the school-room, I overheard a conversation between a sister and brother. The little boy complained of insults or wrongs received from another little boy. His face was flushed with anger. The sister listened awhile, and then she answered, "I do not want to hear another word: Willie has no mother!" The brother's lips were silent, the rebuke came home to him, and stealing away, he muttered, "I never thought of that." He thought of his own mother, and the loneliness of Willie compared with his own happy lot. "He has no mother."

Do we think of it when want comes to the orphan, and rude words assail him? Has the little wanderer no mother to listen to his little sorrows? Speak gently to him; then.—Good News.

After all, it matters less how long we live than how we live. It is better to live to a great purpose than to live to a great age. The poorest way of spending a life is in efforts to prolong life. A short life well used is more to be desired than a long life misused, or unused. It is better for a young man to die in his struggle to rescue a drowning child than to live through neglecting an opportunity of such a struggle. No life is worth saving at the cost of a duty shirked. There is no more cowardly maxim for any man than "I must live." There is more of history as there is more of heroism in the few brief years of one of the child-martyrs of the Scottish church than in the whole story of the longest life the world ever saw—of which the record stands: "And all the days of Methuselah were nine hundred sixty and nine years; and he died," died in the year of the flood, swept away after nine hundred sixty and nine uneventful if not useless years. Dying and dying are a great deal better business than living and living in this world. Let every man bear that in mind.—Sunday-School Times.

Rising Up Against the Evil-Doers.

One way is to be careful how we patronize them. Newspapers that advocate things wicked and sinful may be excluded from our homes. There is abundance of room for discrimination here. It may be hard to find a secular paper free from all contaminating influences—one that practically regards the sanctity of the Sabbath, that discountenances the liquor traffic, gambling, immoral amusements, and other things objectionable to religious people. But it is worth while to try, and to discriminate against papers and periodicals whose tendency is to antagonize public virtue. Many a Christian man laments over the corruptions of society, and at the same time readily supports a press that does not protest against the vices of the day.

In our trading have we usually any reference to the character of those with whom we deal? Here is a dealer who sells no whisky, and who is careful to close up on Sunday. We have known such men to fail in a Christian community, because the custom went to those who sold wine and brandy, as well as flour and meat. We may have to buy under protest or starve, but when the chance offers of patronizing a temperance house good people ought not to be indifferent to it.

It has been said that city theaters are largely supported by visitors, who, at home, pass for religious people, and that our city churches are often numerously represented in those places. These theaters are usually open on Sunday; many of their performances are as shocking to modesty and decency as they are repulsive to good taste. Everything connected with them is promotive of intemperance and licentiousness. And yet the money of our church members—more than enough of it to support many a mission Sunday-school—goes into the treasuries of these institutions. Manifestly the first and the least thing that Christians can do is to keep away from these resorts themselves. The devil is specially loosed for a season here just before Lent. Such riot and debauchery is scarcely credible. Such madness and frantic excesses are hardly to be described. Christian men and women can at least keep themselves unspotted from the world. But do they?

The voter has a responsibility in the repression of vice. The devil objects to Sabbath laws, and to laws against the dram-shops. The Christian voter is not careful. He helps elect men as legislators who are for sale to the highest bidder—men who care nothing for the moral welfare, and who are, therefore, the willing instruments of those who grow rich on the vices of society. Good men, if not in the majority, may hold the balance of power. They can do much to purify the politics of the country, and to promote healthy and wise legislation. Politics do not belong to the churches, nor are they to be made the subject of ecclesiastical deliverances. But every Christian citizen is bound to act in a Christian way, and to be dominated by Christian principles in the discharge of his political duties. The religious element in the State is not felt as it ought to be. Party hacks and rings have their own way, and religious men tamely submit to their dictation, or are circumvented by their trickery.

A very important part of opposition to evil-doers is to define who they are. Successful villainy is apt to have a certain respect accorded to it. Money coined out of the miseries of drunkard's, and drunkard's families, raises men to positions of influence. Murderers, adulterers and burglars are evil doers. But the most pernicious of all evil-doers are the respectable and the prosperous—those who by example trample upon the Sabbath, and encourage everything that lures the young into the whirlpools of vice.

Besides the preaching and the professing, there are practical ways of rising up against evil-doers. It takes courage, self denial and vigilance to do it. It is this kind of testimony that is needed. Let the people of God smite them in all ways—by the word of reproof, by the sword of the Spirit, by expostulations, and by the power of love. Let them plant churches, foster Sunday-schools, expose bribery, rebuke the man of sin. But let them stand out and apart from the evil, and have no part or lot with the doers of it. The thing to be studied is how to make themselves felt as Christians in stemming the torrent of vice, and in repressing the rampant diabolism of the times.

Are there no means by which evil-doers shall be compelled to respect the convictions and principles of Christians? Must our Sabbaths be turned into brawls and holiday exhibitions? Must the fountains of death be kept wide open at every street corner in the cities, and at every cross road in the country? Must our children be exposed to these currents of hell, and nothing done to arrest the deadly flow? Are Christian citizens to be no better than so many cattle in the hands of the politicians, to be led or driven whither they will?

It is an old question, born of such outrages as these: "Who will rise up with me against the evil doers?" It stirred the heart of David, and of Wesley, and it may well stir ours.

Prog Versus Tramp.

BY DOUBLE U.

"What's in a name? A rose would smell as sweet by any other." This famous irony upon naming things has had many common-sense answers returned. Yet it occupies still its menacing attitude, and the question may recur in this choice: Why prog in preference to tramp. The answer is ready; the moral sense requires it. Tramp is a verb, and means to travel, to wander or stroll; but prog is a noun, and designates one that seeks his victuals by wandering and begging. The verb is also prog, and means to shift meanly for provisions; to wander about and seek provisions where they are to be found; to live by beggarly tricks. See Webster's Dictionary. The definition sets before the Christian conscience the moral aspects of the case whenever the application of so-called tramps is made for cold bread and meat. A tramper might be a worthy person in pursuit of employment in his particular trade, which must be sought after. It would be culpable neglect of duty to a neighbor if one should show indifference to hunger's needs in the event of such a man applying for relief, and charity would lose its sweetness if it hesitated to give, or even substituted cold for warm bread. But it is altogether otherwise with the prog. No one need hesitate to turn away from his application, or repel his importunities. He simply brings his calling to you for endorsement; by your recognition of his claims to obtain his living in that way. Call him by his right name, and the moral sense adjusts itself at once to his case.

He is not an object of pity in any sense that a deliberate act of self-degradation places any other class or individual in. His destitution is the needful economy of his calling, and not the result of misfortune or neglect. He aims to escape the universal requirement of self-support through industry and soberness, and taxes the public with his maintenance. He is not an object of charity, his poverty is not the result of inability, infirmity or helplessness, he has no right to seek exemption from the common lot of humanity, the necessity of labor for bread; nor has any one, or the community in general, any more right than he has to constitute his corps an exemption through the misapplication of charity. The prog in most instances is, in appearance, on presenting himself, a younger, stronger and more vigorous man than yourself, and the only feeling he consciously excites in you is shame for such a low spirit in a man. To give him bread in that case is to degrade the food of the family to a like low use—to prog—another noun signifying victuals or provisions sought by begging, or found by wandering about. The same creature repelled from the yard of a man, shorn of the manly sense, will appropriate the scanty resources of a helpless woman in care of a household, that taxes her energy in constant labor, used for their support. Let the people go to the dictionary to find the definition, and the day of doom will have come for the pseudo tramp, without the firing of a shot, or the raising an alarm.

To deny the hungry dread may insinuate a doubt of humanity where Christianity assumes to decide; but the other side stated to support the idle in vagrancy may relieve the act of suspicion, and throws additional light upon that mendacity that seeks the subversion of Christian circumspection under a selfish plea for liberality contrary to the explicit instruction of law and gospel. The prog should be dealt with in the discussion: How to treat his case, and not the imperishable sentiment of Christian charity.

Woman's Work.

Bishop Wightman, writing in the Southern Christian Advocate of Woman's Work in the Church, says:

Of late years there has been a considerably increased interest on the part of Christian women, in respect to the work of foreign missions. It is the pronounced opinion of missionaries who have been laboring for many years in China, that of all the signs of the times, looking over the whole line of missionary progress, nothing is so full of the promise of rapid future extension, and of the permanency of the results of missionary labors, as the great increase of women laborers during the last ten years. Within this period nearly all the Christian churches who support missions among the hundreds of millions in the celestial empire have organized women's societies or boards in connection with the regular Church Board of Missions. This remarkable increase of interest on the part of Christian ladies may be accounted for on several grounds.

It may naturally be supposed that the necessity for woman's work has been made plainer by the clearer and ampler knowledge now in the possession of the civilized world, of the real condition of the women of heathen countries. Steam communication with Japan, China India, and the transit through the Suez canal, brings the great and populous nations of idolatry within five or six weeks of us, instead of being, as in former years, four or five months off. We are becoming familiar with the customs of society prevailing among them. We see more clearly than ever before how next to impossible it is for men to have access, in their Christianizing efforts, to the female population of heathen countries, and how strong is the necessity that Christian women should go. The mother wields a controlling influence over her children in the early periods of mental development. Where her judgment and conscience are held fast under the teachings of a system so superstitious and debasing idolatry which contains no hope of any possible change for the better, her own children will be reared in the same deplorable views, and so the system, as it has come down from time immemorial, will continue indefinitely for the future, unless remedial, uplifting influences of the gospel from without reach them. Then the ignorant and narrow-minded mothers would grow into thoughtful, educated and Christian women; and their sons into good men. The testimony of Christian ladies, who have had opportunity to observe and know, is that Chinese women, by their mental constitution and general character, are capable of becoming upright and religious; faithful mothers and zealous Christian laborers as Bible women.

It is also now a well-known fact that instead of the indifference and opposition formerly shown by the native women to the visits of Christian women to their houses, of late there is a general readiness to receive such visits. In most parts of the country home-life is very secluded; its monotony is broken up by the coming in of a foreign visitor, and the lady is welcomed instead of being repulsed. This might seem a small thing; in reality it is a peculiarly impressive sign of the times. Intelligent talk about foreign manners and customs, about foreign religious views, about the Bible and Christ, must have an awakening influence upon the feminine mind, accustomed to nothing better than the silly fictions tales, the vapid frivolities, the superstitious idolatries taught these women by their mothers. The process is necessarily a slow one. Nevertheless, the work has begun—woman's work. The mothers of China are the great teachers of idolatry, of belief in demons, fairies and charms. They are the upholders of the prejudices of centuries. How can they be more readily affected than by the quiet but earnest talk of the foreign ladies? by the Scripture readings and prayers of the Bible women?

The comparative ease and security with which the voyage can now be made to the great fields of missionary labor by ladies is a remarkable indication of God's providence opening the way and removing obstructions. The facilities of travel now offered by railroads and steamships; the rapidity with which the journey and voyage can be made; the great diminution of cost; the increased security and comfort—all this seems a special encouragement to woman's work for the Lord in "the regions beyond."

Shams and Masks.

Under this head Prof. J. P. Lacroix, D. D., writes in the Pittsburg Christian Advocate. He says:

The poison has infected our whole social fabric. It is sadly affecting our schools, our government, our churches. How few of our students are inspired with a simple desire for real advancement in solid scholarship! I recently heard the estimate—one in ten. Doubtless this is too strong. But the manifest fact is that it is only too near the truth. Who does not see the instances of this sad fact? How few of our students study the classics without a "pony?" How many of them regard each additional study to be mastered as a task, rather than a privilege? How many are more intent on winning the worthless bauble of a diploma than on acquiring the mental maturity which the diploma ought to represent? But why seek such a bauble at all? Because it forms a presumption in the eyes of the innocent public that the possessor is a man of solid acquirements. It serves him, therefore, as a prop, a crutch. It is an artificial help to get him into a public position of honor and trust. And whether he has the ability well to fill the place is too often but a secondary consideration.

But our colleges themselves are infected with the same spirit. Too often they make more effort to increase the number of their students than to instruct those they already have. And why? In order to seem to surpass their sister colleges. Shame on such a motive. But it exists. And what boasting tricks of advertising they practice! How they deluge the rural neighborhoods with dashing circulars! How they let down the bars of examination, that the feebler sheep may succeed in hobbling out! Numbers! numbers! all depends on numbers! Suppose the possible number of graduates, in some particular year, to be fifty. What a pity to spoil that number by weeding out six or seven feeble ones to whom diplomas can be awarded only as a grace! Look over the advertisements of tenant colleges and note how many of them have "unparalleled" accommodations, or are the "cheapest" colleges in this country. And many teachers depend for their positions more on wire-working and small cunning than on their actual success as teachers. They are more anxious to get into higher places than to do solid work in those which they have. How shall I best be able to fawn and flatter influential persons into subserviency to my selfish ambition?

But shams are found not merely in colleges. They are ubiquitous. The corrupt proceedings of our politicians need no allusion to them. They advertise themselves. We pass them by, therefore, in silence, and come to the ministry. We mean the official ministry. There is a real and unspotted ministry. But they are scattered abroad among the mass of mere perfunctory men. And they are themselves, many of them, half one thing and half the other—half perfunctory and half genuine. How many of this middle-class have half an eye for honest doing-good, and the other half for getting a better appointment or a higher salary, or for preaching merely popular sermons! How many are feverishly anxious about the applause they get! How many have a really unctious relish for flattery! How many resort to the clap-trap of sensational, or at least queer, themes in order to allure a congregation! How many are chagrined like a petted child at a less flashy newspaper report of some special effort than they had expected! And, for shame! do not some of the most praised men actually inspire, if not personally write the puffs of their own efforts? It is sad to have to imply that a minister of the gospel ever stooped so low; but a sad duty is sometimes a healthy one.

Our Paper.

We need hardly say to the members of our patronizing Conferences, and to our friends and subscribers generally, that the ADVOCATE is in the hands, and under the exclusive control, of the Publishing Committee. Mr. G. T. Lathrop, the present contractor, is a gentleman of excellent business capacity, and an accurate and careful accountant. He has been long known to us, and is most favorably known and commended by the former publisher. The Publishing Committee, in securing his services, felt that they were putting the business management in good hands, and that a more competent person could not be found to undertake it.

The prospects for the future are auspicious, but we need the hearty co-operation of all in keeping up and extending our circulation. Everything depends upon this. The paper will be printed and mailed punctually, so that it will reach the most of our subscribers before Sunday. By prompt attention to every detail of the business we hope to correct all errors, and, as far as possible, to avoid mistakes in the accounts. The expenses, however, are heavy, and have to be met weekly. We shall soon be at the expense of putting the paper in a new dress, as it is our purpose to make it neat and attractive. We shall use a fine quality of paper, and spare no pains in the typography and general make up. Nothing is needed to insure improvement and prosperity but the earnest support of the agents and subscribers. Our pastors can aid much by representing the paper in their church and District Conferences, in their pastoral visiting, and occasionally from the pulpit. Certainly every Methodist family should take at least one church paper. No pastor should rest until this point is reached.

We have subscribers who belong to other churches, and some who belong to no church. Some take our paper because, in addition to the literary and religious matter, they have full market reports, and a weekly digest of the press dispatches, giving the latest news from all parts of the world. Our aim is to make a useful family paper, containing something for all classes of readers, and one that will be helpful to the churches and to the spiritual life of the people.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was started nearly thirty years ago. Almost a generation has passed, and it is still going out to its mission of peace and grace. It goes now to some who were among its first subscribers, and to the children of many whose names have been removed by death. It is a necessity in thousands of homes, and its influence for good has been multiplied by many hallowed and precious memories. As time goes on, we hope to see the paper spreading more and more, until its weekly visits shall be welcomed by at least every Methodist family in our bounds.

The following, from a contributor to the New York Independent, makes a bad showing for Northern politicians and voters. The amount of bribery throughout the land is fearful. We quote:

The writer once asked an intelligent official in that region what proportion of the voters in his county habitually gave or received money for votes; and his prompt reply was: "Nine tenths." On a doubt being expressed that the proportion could possibly be so large, he reflected a moment, and then said: "Well, that may possibly be an overestimate; but two-thirds would certainly be within bounds." "The extent to which bribery is openly carried on," he added, "is simply horrible; and if you were to sit in my office and let me point out men as they passed by who engage in this business you would be amazed. They would include men of good standing in business, in society, and in the churches." This was a wealthy rural county.

A more specific estimate was made for the writer by an experienced "poll-worker" in one of the wards of a city not far from the county above mentioned. He kept a careful tally of the votes purchased by both parties, and afterward furnished a statement of the total number, and the number bought by each party. This showed that precisely fifty-eight out of every hundred votes were bought—about thirty-eight per cent. by one party and twenty per cent. by the other. His previous estimate had been that the proportion would equal two-thirds of the whole number. In this same city, at the last congressional election, there was spent at the polls, on the day of election, according to trustworthy estimates, at least one dollar for every man, woman and child in the city—in other words, an average of four or five dollars for every voter on the city polls; and among the men directly or indirectly engaged in paying out the money, to say nothing of those who received it, were members and officers of churches in good nominal standing.

Our quarterly Sunday school gathering last week was a very interesting occasion. We were greatly gratified with everything about it, except the part assigned to the editor. The audience was large, composed of our best Methodist people, among them the most of the officers, superintendents and teachers of our Methodist schools. The hymns sung were all from our hymn-book, and the addresses, with the exception noted above, were lively and edifying. It was a most enjoyable and profitable meeting, and one that, we trust, will be long kept up. The topic, "Books and Papers of the Day," is one that the Sunday-schools do well to consider. There is need of care and discrimination in the selection of libraries, and in the papers used. But beyond the immediate pale of the school the literature of the day and its influences are subjects in which all religious workers are deeply interested. An enemy is sowing tares. The dime novel, the sporting gazettes, and the journals devoted to exciting tales are competing with the Sunday-schools, and doing much to corrupt the young people, and to alienate them from Christ and the church. A good and attractive literature must be supplied for the Sunday-schools, and for the homes of our people. Parents must guard this matter with a vigilant eye, and see to it that their children do not lack books and papers that are wholesome and entertaining.

Rev. W. Cowell Brown, a minister of the British Conference, and stationed in London, sailed on the steamship Eumore for Liverpool on the twenty-fourth instant. We have very much enjoyed Bro. Brown's visit to New Orleans, and we hope the trip hither and homeward will be the means of restoring him to perfect health. We were also gratified to make the acquaintance of the captain of the Enmore, Capt. F. B Hopkins, a Christian gentleman, who let's his light shine on board of ship, and in the performance of all his duties. In company with a small party of friends we took tea on board of the Enmore one evening. There was a cabinet organ in the cabin, and we had some of our familiar sacred songs. A safe and prosperous voyage to our good friends! We shall be glad to meet them again here in the Crescent City; but, if that may not be, then in the city above.

> "There all the ship's company meet,
> Who sailed with the Saviour beneath;
> With shouting each other they greet,
> And triumph o'er sorrow and death:
> The voyage of life's at an end;
> The mortal affliction is past;
> The age that in heaven they spend
> Forever and ever shall last."

Richard Fitzgerald, father of the editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, died in Rockingham county, North Carolina, February 4, 1879, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. Dr. Fitzgerald says of him:

To all who knew him his name was the synonym of truth and honor. He was an open hearted, brave man. In prosperity he was generous, in adversity manly and unselfish. His last days were brightened by Christian hope. He said to me when it was my privilege to visit him last June, "I am preparing for my exit, which cannot be far off; once a day I visit the little church near by to pray alone, and I hope to be ready". The last month of his life was painless, and he died as one going to sleep. His body rests by that of my dear mother at the Peniel Church. They have met again in a glad and eternal reunion.

The postoffices of all the preachers of the patronizing Conferences, and the places at which they will represent the interests of this paper, are desired the earliest day possible, to enable the publisher to send forward the lists of subscribers for correction and collection.

The publisher also wishes to be notified of any change in postoffices, failures to receive the paper promptly, or other matters of interest that have not received prompt attention. It is his wish to correct all errors in accounts, and that every agent and subscriber shall be satisfied.

In ordering changes be sure and give the place from as well as that to which the paper is changed. Attention to this is of the very highest importance.

The State Sunday-School Convention was in session in this city during Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week. The representatives from the State at large were not numerous, the most of the delegates being from the city churches. The proceedings were of an interesting character, and the attendance, especially at night, was good. Among the distinguished visitors were Rev. George A. Peltz, of Philadelphia, E. Payson Porter, of Illinois, Ralph Wells, of New York, B. F. Jacobs, of Illinois. The results of the meeting were the permanent organization of a State Sunday-School Association, composed of the different denominations, and a decided increase of interest among our people in the cause of Sunday-schools. There were several addresses of great ability and interest, and the occasion, as a whole, was most gratifying and profitable. It was the beginning of a movement which, we trust, may widen and increase in power until the churches shall all come to appreciate the importance of Sunday-school work.

That is Right.

President Adkisson has a communication on the first page concerning the school under his care. We hope to hear from all of our colleges and schools from time to time. It is an important part of the mission of this paper to promote the cause of education, and especially to aid the institutions under the control of our patronizing Conferences. Short reports should be sent us at least annually. We would also gladly welcome brief and crisp articles from our educators on the subject of education, its philosophy and methods, and our needs as a church in reference to these questions. Our professors and presidents are more competent than the editor to handle these subjects, and we most earnestly invite them to take their pens in hand. Our educational enterprises must be kept prominently before the church, and our people must be educated to educate.

We had the pleasure of a call this week from Rev. James A. Lewis, pastor of Cadiz and Bethel, Louisville Conference. Bro. Lewis is on a health furlough, and, we are glad to say, has much improved during his brief sojourn in New Orleans.

The anniversary exercises of the Southwestern Bible Society, at the First Presbyterian Church in New Orleans, Sunday night, February 23, were highly interesting. There was a full house, and Dr. Thompson's address was admirable.

Dr. Young has, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, February 22, returned from a second visit to the friends of our Publishing House in New Orleans. They have increased the subscription for four per cent. bonds in that city to twenty thousand five hundred and fifty dollars. On the way home he stopped in Mobile, and spent several days with his old friend, the Rev. Felix R. Hill, pastor of St. Francis Street Church. He reports Brother Hill as master of the situation, and a valuable ally in the sale of our bonds. The people of Montgomery also must have treated Dr. Young remarkably well.

OUR WORK IN BRAZIL.—The Rev. J. J. Ransom, of our Brazil mission, is getting out, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, an edition of the Wesleyan Prayer Book, published at the Southern Methodist Publishing House, for use in that field. Bro. Ransom says: "You must not think that I am turning ritualist because my first book is the Prayer-Book and Ritual. I hope to make the little book supply the place of many preachers in the infancy of our work here."

We trust the helpers needed will soon be sent to reinforce our work in Brazil. Let Bro Ransom communicate with the church through this Advocate. The people will feel a deeper interest in our mission work when they are better informed concerning it.

Mr. Moody has closed his work in the Northwestern section of Baltimore. After preaching daily for several consecutive weeks at the Eutaw Place Baptist Church in the afternoon, and at Grace Methodist Episcopal Church at night, he has transferred his labors to the northeastern portion of the city.

Books and Periodicals.

CORONATION HYMNS AND SONGS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER MEETINGS, HOME AND SOCIAL SINGING. Charles F. Deems, D. D., LL. D., Theodore E. Perkins, editors. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, Chicago and New Orleans, 1879.

The editors say in the preface: "In this little book, we believe, will be found more hymns that the world will not suffer to die, and more new hymns that deserve trial than in any other book extant." And again: "In our opinion, therefore, it is the best book of the kind now for sale in Christendom." High praise this! We are not prepared to say so much, because we have not seen all the books of the kind. But we can say that it is a collection of hymns and tunes of very great merit, and the best of the kind that we know of. Get it and use it, and judge for yourselves. It contains a great number of our old and most loved hymns. For sale by G. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

—His Dear Little Wife is the title of a story published by J. M. Stoddart & Co., Philadelphia. We know nothing of its merits beyond some commendatory notices by a few of the newspapers.

—From the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, we have received the following tracts: The Worship of God, by Dr. William S. Plumer; Christ in Front, by Rev. Andrew F. Dickson; Christ is Head of the Church, by Dr. Plumer; None but Jesus, by Rev. T. W. Hooper, D. D.

—Sunday Afternoon for March has: One of the Congregation; The Two Methods of Changing Creeds; Calvin the Sinner; Befriended; Our Debt to Socrates; An Hour With Gwendolyn; A Working Woman's Bureau; Infanticide in China; A Flower for the Dead; Our Peculiar Sunday School Teacher; A Just and Faithful Knight of God; Taking a Mean Advantage; Ministerial Backsheesh; Dominus Regit; The Still Hour; Editor's Table.

—St. Nicholas for March, besides the usual fine illustrations, has among its varied and attractive articles: An Adventure on An Iceberg; A Wonderful Candle; The Obstinate Weather-Cock; Oriental Bottles and Wells, And How They Are Made; The American Mardi Gras; Pets From Persia; The Plaything Sky.

—The North-American Review for March has for its first topics: Ought the Negro to be Disfranchised? Ought He to Have Been Enfranchised? These questions are treated by nine of the distinguished men of the country, to wit: Senator Blaine, Senator Lamar, Gov. Wade Hampton, James A. Garfield, Alexander H. Stephens, Wendell Phillips, Montgomery Blair, Thomas A. Hendricks. 2. The Philosophy of Jonathan Edwards. 3. The Indian Problem. 4. Cryptography in Politics. 5. Russian Novels and Novelists of the Day.

—Scribner's Monthly for March has: A College Camp at Lake George, Illustrated; The Passes of the Sierra, Illustrated; Theocritus; Modjeska, Illustrated; The Commercial Crisis of 1837; Pomona's Bridal Trip; The Late George Rapp and the Harmonists; A Buffalo Hunt in Northern Mexico, Illustrated; Lawn Planting for Small Places, Illustrated; Bayard Taylor; Some Western Schoolmasters, and other articles.

—Wide Awake for March is a wide awake number of this always entertaining and beautiful magazine for the young. Here are the titles of some of the articles: Why Didn't He Catch a Fox? Perkin's Institution, and Massachusetts School for the Blind; Our American Artists; How Elsie Hurried the Spring; Shetland Women; Dan Quixote, Jr., chapter 3; Motherly Duties.

—Lippincott's Magazine for March has: A Day With Hudson's Bay Dog Sledges, Illustrated; Hungarian Types and Austrian Pictures concluding, paper, Illustrated; Richard Reif, Illustrated; Women's Husbands, concluded; Pottery and Porcelain at the Paris Exposition, Illustrated; Monsieur Pamphlen's Repentance; Yesterday; My Village in the South; Through Winding Ways; Live Wood in Our Whipping Post; If This Is Love; Joseph's Adventure; Our Monthly Gossip; Literature of the Day.

—The National Repository for March has: Cyprus, Illustrated; New Amsterdam, Illustrated; Response; A Song in the Night; John Clare, the Peasant Poet; The Fatal Mistletoe; Old Virginia; The Language of Flowers; Among the Thorns; Coming and Going; An Advent Song; Editorial Miscellany.

"I don't see how you can have been working all day like a horse," explained the wife of a lawyer, her husband having declared that he had been thus working. "Well, my dear," he replied, "I've been drawing a conveyance all day, anyhow."

G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

WE REFER parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 12 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular home offers an opportunity seldom found at so first-class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3 50 per day.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—Lamps with Bronze feet, $1 75, $2 00, $2 50; Student $6 00; Lanterns, 75 cents, $1 00 to $6 00. One of the most reliable crockery stores in the South.

LEIGHTON'S SHIRTS.—The advertisement of this reliable old house is on this page. Those of our readers desiring the most perfect-fitting shirts and best class of goods of this character that they can possibly secure, will find it to their interest to deal with this gentleman. We have known him for years, and our readers can rely on all his assurances concerning the merits, etc., of his goods. Mr. Tom. Moody, his gentlemanly and accommodating assistant, will be ready to measure those who cannot find a good-fitting shirt.

MARSDEN'S PECTORAL BALM.—This great remedy is a home product, and for coughs, colds and consumption has no superior. That extensive and reliable concern, G. R. Finlay & Co., is the sole agent. Patronize home manufactures.

PIANOS AND ORGANS.—Louis Grunewald, 14 to 22 Baronne street, is one of the most reliable men to do business with in the piano line. His prices are reasonable. Attention is directed to his advertisement.

TRUNKS.—Our readers who are interested in securing fine, substantial, well-made and handsome trunks, will find it to their advantage to examine the facilities, prices, etc., of S. Baum. He is thoroughly posted as to the character of material necessary to make up at short notice the very best articles of this class that his patrons may desire. Those wishing fine trunks will be served promptly and judiciously, and precisely according to specifications in their orders. If they favor this gentleman with their patronage, he is one of our most reliable merchants in the city. Try him.

NATIONAL SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—The above institute was organized in 1858, and is the largest in the world devoted entirely to the scientific treatment of deformities and surgical diseases. More than 6,000 cases are treated annually, and over half a million dollars have been expended in inventing and perfecting machinery and apparatus. There is no doubt that great good to suffering humanity has been accomplished through the instrumentality of the National Surgical Institute. Some of the physicians connected with the Institute will visit New Orleans some time in March, when those who are unfortunate to be troubled with deformities, paralysis, etc., should consult these eminent and accomplished gentlemen. The Institute under their charge merits, in an official degree, public confidence.

DRY GOODS.—That reliable house of E. H. Adams & Bro. have always on hand the largest variety of fresh dry goods, comprising every quality that may be called for. See advertisement, and give them a call.

NICHOLL'S LUNCH HOUSE.—This celebrated restaurant has become a household name among the people of New Orleans, not only for the tasty way in which the meals are served up, but for its being the most economical in its prices of any house of its kind in the city. You can get as fine a meal as at any of the leading restaurants in New Orleans for one-half of the price charged elsewhere. The important feature in the management of this house is its department for ladies, which has recently been fitted up and furnished in elegant style, with a view to the comfort of families. For strangers coming into the city, we would suggest to them to try a square meal at this favorite eating house.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—Elegant styles, and perfect fits of the boots and shoes manufactured by J. D. Chassons, have always maintained for him a reputation of being first-class in every respect, and he enjoys the custom of the most fashionable people of this city. He employs none but first-class workmen. His materials are of the best quality, and his prices more reasonable than any house in New Orleans. To those who have never tried him, give him a trial, and you will be perfectly satisfied.

FURNITURE.—The advertisement of our old friend, H. N. Siebrecht, will be seen on this page. His stock of general furniture is constantly renewed by being replenished from the best of American and European manufactures, and are of the latest design. From our knowledge of this gentleman, who has been known to us for a great many years, we can recommend him to our numerous readers as a person entitled to confidence. See advertisement on this page, and call and see him.

PHOTOGRAPHER AND ARTIST.—We had the pleasure, a few days since, of visiting the art parlors of the well known establishment of P. Lilienthal, No. 14 Canal street. This gentleman is a thorough artist, takes pride in his profession and is careful that no order leaves his studio that is not finished in the highest style of art, as well as giving entire satisfaction to his patrons. Mr. Lilienthal has, a few days since, secured quite an acquisition to his corps of artists in the person of Mr. V. Gentile, President of the Lambert process, this gentleman is not excelled in this country as a poser, and has samples of his work which are marvels of beauty. We understand that he will, in a few days, take a picture of the Crescent Rifles in full uniform. We would say in conclusion that Mr. Lilienthal will be pleased to receive all who may call, either from curiosity or to have their likeness taken.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

National Surgical Institute.

The annual visit of an examining surgeon from this well known institution will be made to New Orleans on March 15th. He will bring with him skilled assistants and workmen from the Home Institute, and will remain until April 15th. The preparations now making for this visit are extensive and elaborate, and, when completed, will be simply sufficient to meet increased demands.

In its chosen specialities, paralysis and its results, deformities, diseases of joints, plastic surgery, hemorrhoids fistula, etc., this institution is unexcelled.

Refers, by permission, to the many well known citizens of New Orleans, who are its patrons. For further information write to National Surgical Institute, Indianapolis, Ind., Philadelphia, Pa., or Atlanta, Ga. Headquarters 164 St. Charles street. 4

Hearing Restored. Great invention by one who was deaf for twenty years. Send stamp for particulars. JOHN GARMORE, Lock Box, 95, Covington, Ky. 2

Coughs and Colds are often overlooked. A continuance for any length of time causes irritation of the Lungs or some chronic Throat Disease. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are an effectual Cough Remedy.

Wilbor's Cod Liver Oil and Lime.—Persons who have been taking Cod Liver Oil will be pleased to learn that Dr. Wilbor has succeeded, from directions of several professional gentlemen, in combining the pure Oil of Liver in such a manner that it is pleasant to the taste, and its effects in Lung complaints are truly wonderful. Very many persons whose cases were pronounced hopeless, and who had taken the clear Oil for a long time without marked effect, have been entirely cured by using this preparation. Be sure and get the genuine. Manufactured only by A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

The very interesting work on Diamonds, (their origin and value) as published by the American Jewelry Company, Cincinnati, O., and mailed free to any address on request, is indeed full of pithy information, as the history connected with most all the celebrated Diamonds known to the human family are in possession of the Imperial families of Europe, whose fabulous values create one of the bulwarks of royalty.

St. Louis Universally.

Good Cheer for Consumptives.

There is a form of consumption which was better indicated by the old-fashioned name of "decline." It is the dreaded scourge of some parts of the Southern States claiming more victims every year than are swept away by the most terrible visitations of the yellow fever. The malady arises from the inability of the patient's system, to take up and assimilate the nourishing ingredients of the food that is eaten. Some years ago the medical profession, with remarkable unanimity, agreed that Cod Liver Oil contained the most concentrated and easily absorbed elements of nutrition. If the nauseous taste and smell of the oil could be avoided it would unquestionably be the most sovereign remedy that ever stood a healing blessing on the human race. And these repulsive properties are successfully removed by the union of pure Cod Liver Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda in Scott's Emulsion. The combination is a most elegant one. Pleasant as sweet milk in flavor, congenial to the stomach, and acting directly as a powerful yet gentle tonic of the brain and nervous system.

POZZONI'S MEDIATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, chap, blister, or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a sense of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, Magenta and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

DOMESTIC FOWLS.—At this season of the year, when chickens are so liable to disease, a few simple remedies for general ailment may not be amiss. As cold weather advances, give extra feed, particularly a warm feed in the morning, to which add a little Cayenne pepper as a tonic. If some fowls are kept in their water dish, that, too, will be beneficial. If fowls have the "snuffles," be sure to have them kept in a warm, dry place, and add a little spirits of camphor to their water. If their heads begin to swell, eyes to run, and nostrils to be closed up, it is evident that the incipient stages of croup have shown themselves; so proceed at once to wash the head with vinegar; give several white pepper corns morning and night, and a small dose of castor oil at night. If the fowls do not eat these readily, mix some cooked meat, camphor and sulphur into pellets and feed to them. If your pet gets a bad case, or grown worse under treatment, the hatchet is a sure remedy, easily applied and always efficacious in eradicating the disease. If you kill two or three, or even a dozen, it may be the cheapest way to save the lives of a large portion of your flock.

I am not much of a believer in doctoring fowls, or of giving them much medicine, any more than we do to human beings. We know that the simple remedies used for human colds, headaches, disordered stomachs, etc., often prove equally efficacious in the treatment of fowls. We know that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure, and it applies just as truly to fowls as to humanity. Prevent disease by giving proper care to your fowls, and be sure their winter home contains those comforts to which a good, full-fledged chicken is rightfully entitled. Take care of the chickens, and you will largely avoid thinking of the "country doctor."

ASHES.—We are frequently asked if ashes are good for light soils, and we as often answer yes, without hesitation. We think ashes can hardly be misapplied, but we believe in applying them to light, dry lands. We do not use them enough, or think enough of them. It will be said in reply that they cannot be obtained as freely as formerly, and that is true; but it is equally true that they can be obtained in considerable quantities by those who seek them.

We refer to wood ashes, for we do not value coal ashes except for use as an absorbent or for their mechanical effect upon soils. Many soils lack just what is so freely supplied in wood ashes, potash, and if it is not furnished certain crops cannot be obtained. We have seen most surprising results from the use of ashes. Spread on sod for almost any crop. Have had the best success when applied to grass under cultivation. Corn, spread broadcast on fields where potatoes were grown in the vineyard, under pods, etc. Let every farmer use ashes as a part of the excellent fertilizer.—Cincinnati Gazette.

SWEET CAKE.—Roast a pound and put into cold water for fifteen minutes, change to more water and boil fifteen minutes longer; when perfectly dry, put them in a chopping-pan, and, after beating well, pour on water and boil them to brown. Then wilt flour enough for an ordinary cake, and one egg beaten to a froth, and return to the fire for ten minutes longer, tasting meat-water twice with melted butter. Keep hot in a dish set over hot water in the chopping-bowl. Put a cup of water, some chopped parsley, a teaspoonful of browned flour and the yolk of an egg in a saucepan. Pour over the sweetbreads and serve at once.

[illegible] Book.—The only Book of the kind published. Contains the best practical information on Cooking, Serving, Carving, Etiquette, Health, Dress, Home Adornment, Flowers, Pets, Amusements, Hints, Facts, Figures, Tables, Recipes, etc., etc., ever published. Agents wanted. Send for circulars. Address, J. C. McCURDY & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

SOFT SOAP.—Take one can full of the grease and put into a kettle with one can full of water; let it come to a boil, then add one can full of ley, and boil for twenty minutes, stirring all the time. Take off the fire and let it cool, stirring it all the time, until the paste becomes thick and glossy. Do not let it become stiff, but of the consistency of paste. Add a few drops of the oil of cloves, pour it into your bottle and it is ready for use, and will not grow sour or mouldy.

All over the country nothing is more common than to see unpruned trees on almost every farm. Big limbs, often near the body, and of course rotting to the heart. This is a sin against nature. The very limbs necessary to protect the tree from wind-sucking and just where limbs are most needed, are cut away. But the greatest folly is the cutting that always takes place when a big limb is sawed off. Too big to heal over, of course, rot, and being kept moist by the growing tree, is in the right condition to rot, and bring on the body, the rotting goes to the heart and kills the whole tree.—Gardener's Monthly.

WHITEWASH THAT WILL STICK.—The Annapolis Gazette gives the following as a whitewash that will "stick," indoors and out, and changes any to beautiful white: Slake, say one peck of lime, and while hot and at the thickness of cream, add a quart of linseed oil and a quarter pound of glue. Let stand a half day before using. Rains will not wash it off, nor will it prove such a nuisance on interior walls as common whitewash. It should, of course, be thinned with water, while using as ordinarily.

BREAKFAST CAKES.—Two eggs well beaten, one large tablespoonful of white sugar, one pint of sweet milk, a pinch of salt. When these are mixed, add slowly while stirring, one small quart of fine, white corn meal. Stir in with the last of it two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Grease a spider, pour in and pour the mixture in, and bake in a steady oven.

CONSERVATION OF FEED.—Where will consume eighteen pounds of hay and twelve quarts of mixed oats and corn, ground into coarse meal, per day. A cow will need eighteen pounds of hay and six quarts of meal at the beginning. Half a quart three-quarters of meal may be profitably fed per day. One hundred tons will require one hundred bushels of corn in a year. In addition to what they can pick up on their range. They will need very little corn in the summer, but at least a quarter of a pint a day in winter. The quality of corn needed by a hog depends much upon its size, breed and appetite, as all of which logs differ very much. I would be sure to allow half a bushel of corn, coming into ears, a week for a hog of [illegible] pounds, and more in proportion for larger ones. At fattening time there can be no limit given to the hog, should have all it can be induced to eat made into pigets.

EGGS.—Eggs [illegible] if the holes are made by placing a small pin, and well-dried ashes in the box or basket, and on this a little short straw. Small straws are best. In this way a number of dozen eggs can be packed, and proven fresh eggs coming out from under the settling hen. In cool weather the eggs are kept in much better condition if not in contact with straw, which is apt to cause mould.

MOTH IN CARPETS.—Moths will work in cellars, if [illegible] are kept warm. In winter, use one lb. of sulphur. A safe method of removing the pests is to put a thick layer of wet paper on the floor in the room infested by moths, and sprinkle the paper before laying the carpet. Then lay down the carpet, beginning at the wall opposite the window. Sprinkle dry sand over the carpet before sweeping. Sheets do not fit the wall, and will adhere better carpet to prevent them attaching upon it.—The Cabinet Maker's Magazine.

SOAP-SUDS.—Save soft washing suds for garden. If they are poured from the slops of the plum trees, they will destroy the insects that are destructive to the roots of [illegible] roses, etc. They will encourage them to [illegible] tech food.

NIGHT SIDE
—OF—
CITY LIFE!
Contains the discourses delivered at the Brooklyn Tabernacle by Dr. Talmage, giving his personal experience as recently sent by him to a company with three high officials and two elders of his church during their midnight explorations in the haunts and vices of New York City. They have been revised for this work, and are written in Dr. Talmage's strongest descriptive powers, terrible in his earnestness, nine unpraunting in his denunciation of sin and wickedness, sparing neither friend nor foe, rich or poor. Every page of intense, absorbing interest.

1879 - SHADINES - 1879
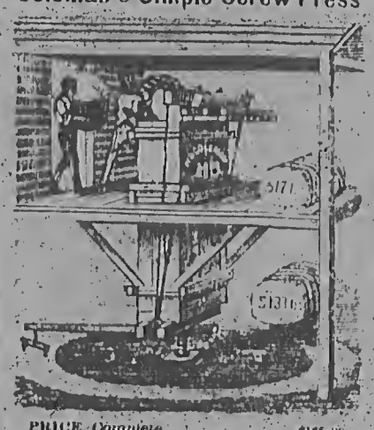
NINTH SEASON.



Our this season's catch now ready is the finest we have ever produced. Years of trial have proved their unquestioned superiority. Purity and Economy, and being unexcelled as a Preserved Fish they are now a recognized favorite in the world's market.
The unparalled success in former seasons induced the packing of imitation goods by other parties, which were bought by some dealers through ignorance or for their cheapness. Such purchases were attended with the usual results.
The celerity with which a luncheon or meal can be obtained (as they require no cooking or preparation being always ready) renders them peculiarly acceptable to travelers, picnic and excursion parties, or for general use; their delicious, piquante flavor satisfies the palate of the most fastidious, while their cheapness, (being now a half one half of the original price), meets the requirements of the economical.
SHADINES
are packed in hermetically sealed tins, essentially for class, in oil, pleasing appetizing sauce, palatable to all, free from the oily properties of the Sardine, retaining only the natural of the Shad, and ready for the table at all times, for dinner, lunch or evening meal, by merely opening the box.
We are the only packers of the GENUINE SHADINES. They are our Trade Mark.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE HUMAN AND EQUINE POPULATION OF THE GLOBE.—A recent number of Petermann's "Mittheilungen" contains fresh information regarding the population of the globe. According to these new researches the globe has now about 1 439 145 300 inhabitants. Europe contains 310 398,480; Asia, 831 000,000; Africa, 205 210 500; Australia and Polynesia, 4,413 000; America, 86 116 000. This gives an average of 500 inhabitants per square mile of the surface of the globe. After calculating the number of human beings on the globe the German statisticians turn their attention to the number of horses. This is estimated at about 58,000 000; of which number the contingent of Russia is about 21 750 000; that of the United States, 6,501 000; the Argentine Republic, 1 000 000; Germany, 3,352 000; Canada, 2 264 000; Great Britain, 2,255,000; Hungary, 2,179 000; Austria, 1 367 000; Turkey, 1,100 000; France, nearly 3,000 000, etc.

MILLSTONES MADE OF GLASS.—The Manufacturer and Builder calls the attention of manufacturers who can cast heavy pieces of glass, and also of millers, to a recent German discovery, that the finest flour is produced by those millstones which have the most glassy texture and composition, and the consequent discovery that pieces of glass combined in the same way as the French burr, and similarly grooved on their surfaces will grind better than the burr millstones. The consequence of this discovery has been the invention of the glass millstones now made by Messrs Thom, and used in Germany and in Borkendorf with great satisfaction, as it is found that they grind more easily and do not heat the flour as much as is the case with the French burr stone. In grinding grist they run perfectly cold. In order to make such stones, blocks of glass of from six to twelve inches wide are cast in a shape similar to the French burrs, but more regular and uniform; they are connected with cement in the same way, and dressed and furrow cut with picks and pointed hammers; but it is believed that diamond dressing machines might be profitably applied. It is said that these millstones, made of lumps of hard glass, do not wear away faster than the burr stones. Stones of four and one-half feet in diameter, driven by six horse-power, ground two hundred and twenty pounds of flour per hour, and did it while remaining cold. The grist is drier, looser, and the hull more thoroughly separated from the kernel than is the case with other stones.

VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

The countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks, the eyes become dull; the pupil dilates, an azure semicircle runs along the lower eyelid, the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing in the ears; an unusual secretion of mucus; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive, stools slimy; sometimes tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY or any other mineral, but is an innocent preparation, capable of giving the slightest infant the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

Prepared by

DR. C. McLANE'S

LIVER PILLS

are recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," being alterative, and in all Bilious Complaints, Fever and Sick Headache, or diseases of the digestive organs, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

A better cathartic can be used preparatory to taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated. Each box has a red wax seal on the lid with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, and a wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Upon having the genuine Dr. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros. of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

EDUCATIONAL.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

ORGANIZED in 1849. Now under control of the Holston Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Good climate; cheap; abundant provisions; experienced faculty; thorough instruction; good morals. Just the place for the young men and boys of the Southwestern States. Address, as above,

J. H. BRUNNER, D. D., Pres't, or
F. M. GRACE, A. M., Secretary.

Woodville Female Seminary.

A NON-SECTARIAN ACADEMY, UNDER the supervision of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Mississippi Conference; Hon. E. McGehee, President of Board of Trustees. For Thoroughness of instruction, healthfulness, cheapness, and many other advantages is not surpassed. We invite those interested to examine our credentials, and to obtain circulars, by calling upon Mr. Philip Werlein, New Orleans, La., or address the Principal,

A. J. WRIGHT,
Woodville, Miss.

The Loquet-LeRoy Institute

AND KINDERGARDEN DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street.—This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses MOISE, Cecelia W., Sallie L., and Corinne, the latter relict of the late R. G. Raon, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Loquet LeRoy, who so cordially and right to endear the School under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the routine and management of the School. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge.

C. W. MOISE, Principal.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE MADAME LOQUET LEROY announces to her friends and former patrons the entire confidence she has in her successors, being in every way suited to the high trust they have assumed. She bespeaks for them a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded her, and that she will still be actively connected with the institution. For terms and particulars apply to the principal.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEART BURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by debility of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The combination of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop magnified 225 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates in the first presently stagnated.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

VOLUNTARY TESTIMONY.

[Extract from the Baltimore "American," December 4, 1878.]

"The Pulvermacher Electric Belt is recommended to general use for the following reasons: First, for its wonderful properties for the cure of diseases of the kidneys, stomach, liver, and blood generally. Its extreme simplicity, and the fact of its being applied outside, precludes all possibility of any injury being done to the patient, as an external remedy is universally acknowledged to be safe. Another advantage is the facility with which the progress of the electric fluid cure can be watched, and when the belt is not quite in the right place, or not exactly adjusted to the parts affected. The many imitations of electric belt, and deceptions practiced by charlatans, only go to prove the superiority of the genuine article, which is now in the hands of the public, and which has restored health, comfort and happiness to thousands through its instrumentality, and is endorsed by the medical profession, who frequently prescribe its use in their practice."

PULVERMACHER'S

are indorsed and approved by the most eminent members and scientific authorities to the world, by the Faculties of France, England, Austria, Prussia, Belgium, and America, to be the best known curative agent to the extraordinary effects of the PULVERMACHER Electric Belts and Bands, as thousands of unsolicited testimonials in our possession will attest.

How deep is God's yearning over rebellious man! When the sinner flees from Him, God pursues him; and not till he has long and deliberately rejected the divine entreaties, refusing to listen to the voice of the heavenly charmer charming never so wisely,—not till then does God cease His pursuit. And when He does cease it, He turns away more in sorrow than in wrath, saying, "O, that my people had hearkened unto me!"

It is estimated that of the 60,000 students in the 350 colleges in the United States and Canada, 25,000 are professing Christians.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—Farmers, Families and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. TOBIAS' VENETIAN LINIMENT, for the cure of Cholera Diarrhea, Dysentery, Croup, Colic and Sea-Sickness taken internally (it is perfectly harmless: see each accompanying each bottle) and externally for Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cuts, Burns, Swellings, Bruises, Mosquito Bites, Old Sores, Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest. The VENETIAN LINIMENT was introduced in 1-47, and no one who has used it but continues to do so, many stating if it was ten dollars a bottle they would not be without it. Thousands of certificates can be seen at the depot, speaking of its wonderful curative properties. Sold by the druggists at 40 cents. Depot, 42 Murray street, New York. 8p

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest head. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5; $2 to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

A Woman Ahead of Edison.

One day last June, just after the newspapers had announced that Professor Edison would take a vacation before completing the task of discovering an antidote for the elevated-railway racket, a pleasant-looking gray-haired woman boarded a train at Fifty-Ninth Street, and made her way to the rear platform of the last car. There she stood while the train was rattling along, until a conductor came out and said that he was sorry to interfere with her enjoyment, but he should be compelled to request madam to step inside because passengers were not allowed to ride on the platforms. The woman expressed herself as being inclined to give him any trouble, but said that she was riding there for a purpose, and that she should remain there unless he choose to carry her in. The young man in blue cloth and gold braid looked at the smiling face and ample form, and retreated to the other end of the car. On the previous day Edison had ridden on the road with a stick in his mouth, trying to learn where the sound came from, and how it could be stopped; and a man, who sat just inside the open door, facetiously remarked that perhaps the woman on the rear platform was the Menlo Park wizard in disguise. She replied that she was not Edison, only his substitute while he was taking his vacation.

After riding the length of the Metropolitan elevated railway, the smiling, gray-haired woman returned to her house at 63 West Twelfth Street, and began whittling out with a pen-knife a model of the structure on which the tracks are laid. Two shingles, for which she had paid four cents, furnished the timber, and a paper of pins furnished the necessary bolts. In the cellar of her house she set up her model, and experimented in secret, behind bolted doors, with a device for absorbing the sound produced by the elevated-railway trains. Late in June she notified the patent office of her intention to apply for letters patent on a device of that kind, and on the 31st of July a caveat was duly filed. After doing this, she went to Mr. Beard with her plan, and arrangements were made to have the device tested on the Metropolitan line. The result of the test was so favorable that the company bought the invention for $10 000, and agreed to pay her a liberal royalty on sales of rights to other companies. The invention consists simply in boxing the rails with sand and cotton, covered with asphalt. At all times, except in very cold weather, the sound is very much deadened by this device, but when it is very cold the effect is not nearly so favorable. The woman who thus got ahead of Edison while he was taking a vacation is Mrs. Walton, of 63 West Twelfth Street. She has already received $1000 of the sum which the Metropolitan elevated-railway Company will pay her for her patent. She has also made other valuable inventions.—New York Sun.

Successful Business Men the Least Hurried.

When all the rich men have set up statues everywhere in honor of the industrious, I mean to beg money enough to persuade some clever artist to execute a statue of the Dustrious man to be set up in the market place. It makes me laugh and cry by turns to go into one of our money streets and see the anxious men and boys hurrying up and down. One would think that business and hurry were partners, but they are really enemies to each other. The most successful men of business are the least hurried. What would not men give, Arkwright, if they could get rid of this perpetual hurry and drive, this galloping to the end of a journey only to mount a fresh steed and gallop on to the next stage, the clatter of the horse's hoofs an accompaniment to all their thoughts. There is certainly something ignominious in the confession which people are constantly making, that they have no time to do this or that needful thing, and that they shall breathe freely if they can once clear their desk or finish this job or wipe out this obligation. One comes to feel that time has been borrowed from, and that one's notes are perpetually maturing, while one makes a vain effort to cancel them by giving fresh notes. We turn round in a sort of fashion and berate the age we live in with its whizzing locomotives and its clicking telegraphs, as if the punctuality of railway trains and the instantaneousness of dispatches were not the very friends and servants of honest leisure.—Sunday Afternoon.

The Purchase of Palestine.

The project proposed some time since in Great Britain by leading Jews of the country to buy Palestine is said to have been completed. The Rothschilds, Montefiores, and other prominent and wealthy financiers have entire confidence, it is reported, in the success of the undertaking, and are moving energetically toward its early achievement. The secretary of the association formed for the purpose, who is, by the by, a Christian in creed, says that the Jews of the whole world seem to be in sympathy with the plan, and will do their utmost individually and collectively to further it. Those familiar with Palestine will not regard it as specially desirable, for its human features are not attractive. It is not an extensive country—not more than one hundred and forty-five miles long and forty-five miles broad, on an average—and ought to be bought cheap. The plain of Philistia is its best part, the soil being of rich brown loam, without a stone. It is now, as it has always been, a vast grain field—an ocean of wheat without a break or fence. Its extraordinary fertility is shown by the fact that it has produced the same succession of crops year after year for forty centuries without artificial aid. Many tourists have such numberless associations with Palestine that they have idealized it prodigiously; but to a man who views it without bias, it is a dreary, disagreeable land, its undulating surface, rounded hills, separated by narrow glens, and its crevasses striking the eye monotonously and unpleasantly. So much has been said for generations of the Jews regaining possession of Jerusalem, that it is age able to think that they are likely to do so at last. They certainly deserve Jerusalem.—New York Times.

Gov Nicholls of Louisiana, has issued his proclamation calling for an election on Tuesday, March 18 of delegates to the Constitutional Convention provided for by the recent act of the Legislature. The Convention is to meet in New Orleans, April 21.

DEAR SIR: The No. 7 Diebold Safe purchased some time since went through the large conflagration and remained forty-eight hours in the burning ruins. The iron on the sides and front was very much bulged out. Considering the extreme heat to which it had been subjected, we feared greatly for the contents; but judge of our joy and surprise when, on opening it, we found all our books and papers in good condition.

THE TRANSFIGURATION.

LUKE IX. 28.

In greater Hermon's hoary height,
The blessed Lord of Holy light,
In prayer is found:
There soon the wealth of Heaven lay,
As bright as Eden's Sabbath day,
Empurpled round.

Three favored men, too worn to pray,
In that aureate circle stay;
Asleep near heav'n:
A sacred tent of opal threads,
And tints of heaven rose o'er their heads;
In glory woven.

Lo! sparkling with celestial morn,
Its steeds and ruby rims unworn,
Elijah's car!
And stepping from its golden seat,
Two noble forms, their Lord to greet;
They come from far.

Since Sinai's fires and Horeb's storms,
A thousand years have swept these forms;
Immortal still.
Dearly realize they quit to see,
Their lowly Lord's high majesty;
On Zion's hill.

To see upon his shoulders laid,
That priestly T be by angels made,
Ever to be;
Melchizedek's, of Salem's line,
Who Abram blest, with bread and wine,
In victory.

To see the form of Him who spoke,
The Law, with awful thunder stroke,
When rocks were riv'n;
When Sinai's top was all aflame,
And trumpet sounding loud his fame,
Was blown by Heav'n.

His sacrificial vest to see,
Love's oldest, deepest mystery—
The Love impaled:
To see that Form will clothe as glow,
Whiter than Hermon's virgin snow—
Soon to be nailed.

All lordoms, with changeful ray
Of glory lands far, far away,
Each noble one;
But presently they pale before
Eternal morn in seven fold power—
The Flat-born Son.

O noblest Son of Adam's race!
First-born of Love! before Thy face,
All silent as pale,
O Lord of lords, Thou beauteous King!
My lads of greetings now we bring—
O Christ, all hail!"

"Will those glad lords Thee soon shall be;
Lean o'er those battlements, and see—
The gates of Hell."
Reverse flash of things to be,
Behold! a darkened mystery,
No tongue can tell:

They hear the cry, "My God, my God,"
They see the nail, the spear, the blood—
Hide, conceal!
"O blessed Lord is this for me?"
"My Father's friends, for these—for thee—
One must have died."

And now the Cross its sunset threw
O'er all the mount: the crimson hue
Of dying Love;
Once more its ruddy shelter thrown—
The nearer glory sitting down
From God above.

No! A gets mingle in that scene,
But God with men, O God and man between—
Is dressed in tent;
They walked as in the holy place!
For, ev'n near, they see his face—
He's veil has rent!

On the clear pavement where he stood,
When Israel's nobles ate with God,
A sapphire blue;
His hair, the purest glory white;
His hands and feet of solid light,
A rose at hue.

Two witnesses, of Law of Faith,
In death or height, by life or death,
Stand next the King;
For them its hosts in column wait,
To pass with it on the lifted gate—
His might to sing.

His Father speaks—hold speaker he;
His thought is lost in ecstasy—
Bid near the throne:
A God in a Voice! the abyss of Love!
To shroud not ages while above,
"Thou art my Son."

This voice of Majesty they fear;
Prophets have come the mountain's drear—
The Lord's alone!
Jesus transfigured look to earth,
Supplies the need of Kingly Earth—
He stays a stone.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 26.—Mr. Cahill, Mexican Consul in this city, has received a telegram from the city of Mexico, stating that the minister of Public Works, Gen. Vicente Rivas Palasio, has given orders for the erection of the building for the International Exposition, which is to take place there in 1880. Work is progressing rapidly.

All the material for the construction of the building will be purchased in the United States. While this exposition will be international in character, exhibits from this country are specially invited, and it is expected citizens of the United States will make numerous and fine displays of their various goods, wares, machinery, etc.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb 28.—A telegram was sent to the president last night, signed by the ministers of the various religious denominations, earnestly entreating the president to sign the bill restricting Chinese immigration.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—The cabinet session to-day was mainly devoted to the Chines question. It is announced authoritatively the president will veto the pending bill, and in this will be supported by the entire cabinet. The veto message will be sent to congress Saturday or Monday.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—The House at 10,50 proceeded to the business on the speaker's table.

The speaker presented the president's veto to the anti-Chinese bill. At the conclusion of its reading the previous question was moved, which was, shall the bill pass, the objection of the president to the contrary notwithstanding. The vote resulted: Yeas, 109; nays, 95; not two thirds, and the bill was rejected.

LITTLE ROCK, March 1.—The senate passed Representatives Fishback's resolution for a constitutional amendment repudiating certain bonded debts of the State, with the proviso that nothing herein contained shall be construed as a prohibition against paying such part of the Halford bonds as the course of the State may decide just and legal.

FOREIGN.

PRESTON, ENG., Feb. 25.—The depression in the cotton trade has increased. Healy & Co., have given notice that they must stop their 680 looms within a fortnight unless trade improves. This involves the discharge of from 200 to 300 hands.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 25.—The committee appointed to superintend the burning of infected houses in plague districts has commenced operations.

LONDON, Feb. 26.—Prince Louis Napoleon and retinue will sail in the steamer Danube from Southampton to morrow for the Cape to join the British military forces as a volunteer.

The government has chartered the steamer Auden to carry a portion of the artillery to the Cape. This is the sixteenth steamer chartered by the government to carry troops and war material to South Africa.

LEMBERG, Feb. 26.—The Official Gazette announced that prevalence of epidemic spotted typhus in Eastern Galacia.

LONDON, Feb. 28.—A dispatch from Vienna states that an avalanche, near Marburg, killed twenty-one persons and destroyed nine houses.

LONDON, March 1.—The Daily Telegraph's correspondent at Paris says: Queen Victoria will leave London at the end of March. She will rest one night in the British embassy in Paris, and proceed thence to the Italian lakes, where she will be met by the duke and duchess of Counaugh, who will then be on their wedding tour. Then she goes to Germany.

BERLIN, March 2.—A debate in the reichstag, on the parliamentary disciplne bill will commence on Tuesday. The sanitary committee are discussing proposals of the minister of commerce, relative to the establishment of a guaranting on German harbors, which would effect eighteen ports on the North Sea and thirty on the Baltic.

LONDON, March 2.—The viceroy of India telegraphs that he has received the following letter from Yakoob Khan, son of Shere Ali, ameer of Afghanistan, dated February 26: "News has been received here of the death of my father on the twenty-first. As my father was an old friend of the British government, I send this information out of friendship."

LONDON, March 3.—The British bark Corron, Capt. Ward, previously reported as having arrived at Queenstown from New Orleans, and having sustained serious damages in a hurricane on January 4, was sunk by a collision off South Foreland. The crew were saved.

LONDON, March 3.—A dispatch from Madrid to the London Daily News says: "It is reported General Martinez Campos and the members of the cabinet not having arrived at an agreement on Cuban affairs, the ministers will advise the king to dissolve the cortes this week, consult the leading statesmen of the several parties, and then call to office either the present administration or any cabinet that will consent to undertake the administration, or any that will consent to undertake simultaneously home elections and colonial reform—the policy advocated by Martinez Campos. The greatest animation prevails in political circles."

MADRID, March 3.—The resignation of the cabinet is considered inevitable. It is stated that the king agrees with General Martinez Campos that a change is necessary.

BERLIN, March 3.—The Berlin Post concludes from the recent speeches of the Pope to journalists and to cardinals, that there is but slight prospect of peace between the vatican and the European States, especially Germany, unless the Pope considerably modifies his sentiments.

LONDON, March 3.—The viceory of India telegraphs as follows: General Stewart reports that General Biddulph's rear guard was attacked at Kushkie Nokhud by 2000 Afizai Duranes. The enemy was repulsed with a loss of 150, and pursued till nightfall. The British lost a major and five natives killed, and a colonel and eleven natives wounded.

Mexican War Veterans.

SPEECH OF GENERAL SHIELDS IN THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

One day last week, Mr. Shields, Democrat, of Missouri, said he thanked the senate for giving him an opportunity to speak a few words of his old comrades of the Mexican war. He hoped congress would pass the proposed bill and do generous justice to the Mexican veterans. The soldiers of the last war had been treated with just and very commendable liberality. The reason why the bill granting pensions to Mexican soldiers had not been passed was on account of calculations of the pension bureau. That bureau had reported to congress a larger army of Mexican veterans alive to-day than ever stood on Mexican soil at one time with arms in their hands. The wonder was that any intelligent congress could place confidence in such a report. Throughout the whole Union to-day there were not over 11,000 Mexican veterans alive. Scott, Taylor, Pillow and Cushing were all gone—all dead; and he, the humblest of them all, was left to make this appearance to congress to do something, and do it speedily. If action should be deferred a few more sessions it would be too late to pass the bill. There was one regiment from South Carolina which reached Mexico with 1 100 men. At the close of the war it numbered 220 men, and there were but eight members of that regiment living today. He referred to the victories of our army in Mexico, and said it had been said they had nothing but Mexicans to fight. That was true, but there were plenty of them. "Ask the soldiers of France, as brave men as ever lived, and they would tell you that no men were less afraid of death than the Mexicans. If this government should ever undertake to walk over Mexico again with the same expectations of the same results as before it would be disappointed. He argued that Mexican property and Mexican honor was as well protected during the occupation of Mexico by the American army as they ever had been before or since. He spoke of the bravery of the American army in Mexico and gave personal reminiscences of that war. He did not believe a single soldier who served in the Mexican war could be found in the penitentiary. He spoke of the value of the territory acquired by the Mexican war, the rich gold and silver mines found therein, and, in conclusion, appealed to congress to the Mexican survivors the pittance they asked for to help them on the downhill of life. Give them the pittance to help them on that last march to that field from which no warrior ever returns.

IMPORTANT SUIT ON A CHURCH SUBSCRIPTION.—An important case against the Brooklyn Tabernacle (Rev. Mr. Talmage's) has been on trial in Brooklyn a second time. In the first instance the jury failed to agree. In the second the judge ordered a verdict on legal grounds in favor of the plaintiff. Mr William J. Gelston prosecuted to recover the amount of his subscription to pay off the debt of the Tabernacle, made on condition that none of the subscriptions for that purpose were binding unless the whole amount should be raised. It was shown on the trial that many of the subscriptions were made by married women and minors, many in behalf of persons who were not present, and who had not formally authorized the subscriptions, and it was attempted to be shown that different and false statements of the amount of the debt were made. An effort was made to introduce the telegrams that passed between the pastor and two gentlemen in Baltimore, in regard to subscriptions, but this was ruled out. The case came to a rather sudden ending on Thursday last, Judge Reynolds directing the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount. The court said that putting out of the question the claim of the plaintiff that the whole amount of the debt was to have been paid within six months, in order to render his pledge valid, the defendant was bound by the terms stated by Mr. Kimball, that the whole amount of the debt should be provided for before pledges were binding, and that defendant had not shown that they had complied with that condition. The court also held that the subscriptions by married women and minors were not legally binding. The amount of the claim was $1 413 48.—New York Observer.

In Parentheses.

"The Christian will find his parentheses for prayer even in the busiest hours of life."—Cecil.

Alas! for Christian life, that its duties are mainly placed in parentheses! The day, the week, the year is as a desert with here and there a green spot, where the busy disciple found time to dispense some charity, or spend a few moments in communion with his God. How forcibly was the supposed and real Christian life illustrated in the person of the two Bethany sisters! The one was "careful and troubled about many things," and placed her religious duties in parentheses; the other looked well to the "one thing needful," and put her secular duties in parentheses.

And why not? The lawyer, the doctor, the farmer and the merchant give day and night to thoughts and deeds connected with their respective vocations. Even the pleasures of home are placed in parentheses. Otherwise they would fail in business, and the whole of life would be a blank. If Christianity is the "one thing needful," will it do for us to give up our hearts and time to something else, and enclose our duties to God in parentheses? Not if we would follow the injunctions of the Scriptures, and, therefore, be successful.

We are commanded to "pray without ceasing." The Christian may do this and yet "find his parentheses for the busiest hours of life." Neither should this doctrine nor its practice subject the man of God to the appellation of a religious fanatic. We do not thus think and speak of those who make all else subservient to their business. We praise them as men of large capacities, and present them as model examples for our youth. Why, then, is it thought a strange thing that we are commanded to "pray without ceasing?"

Nor is it an impossible thing for us thus to live and put other duties in parentheses. Of this Luther the great apostle of the sixteenth century, thus speaks: "The whole life of a genuine Christian goes on continually in prayer. For, though he is not constantly moving the lips or multiplying words, yet his heart, like the artery, and hear in the body, goes on beating in ceaselessly with sighs; and the more that throws, vexation and distress become severely afflictive and urgent, with so much the greater force does this sighing and praying proceed even orally, so that you can as little find a Christian without prayer as a living man without a pulse which stands never still, though the man is sleeping or doing something else, and he is not aware of it."

Reader, see to it that your secular and not your religious duties stand in parentheses.

Louisiana Conference Minutes.

MR EDITOR: The Minutes are at last published and the preachers of the Louisiana Conference may be looking for them at an early date, as our ADVOCATE publisher Mr. G. T. Lathrop, has kindly consented to do the mailing.

There are some typographical mistakes [illegible] as I could not stay in New Orleans long enough to do the proof reading, these mistakes I suppose, were unavoidable. The best that could be done under the circumstances has been done.

Mr. Ruskin's Bible Lessons.

The Monthly Record of the Free Church of Scotland publishes the following extract from Mr. Ruskin's works:

How much I owe to my mother for having so exercised me in the Scriptures as to make me grasp them, and, above all, taught me to reverence them as transcending all thought, and adorning all conduct! This she effected, not by her own sayings or personal authority, but simply by compelling me to read the book thoroughly for myself. As soon as I was able to read with fluency she began a course of Bible work with me, which never ceased till I went to Oxford. She read alternate verses with me, watching at first every intonation of my voice, and correcting the false ones, till she made me understand the verse. It might be beyond me altogether; that she did not care about, but she made sure that as soon as I got hold of it at all I should get hold of it by the right end. In this way she began with the first verse of Genesis, and went straight through to the last verse of the Apocalypse—hard names, numbers, Levitical law, and all; and began again at Genesis next day. If a name were hard, the better the exercise in pronunciation; if a chapter were tiresome, the better the lesson in patience; if distasteful, the better the lesson in faith that there was some use in its being so butapoken. After our chapters (from two to three a day, according to their length, the first thing after breakfast, and no interruption from servants allowed—none from any visitors, who either joined in the reading or had to stay up stairs—and none from any visitings or excursions, except real traveling,) I had to learn a few verses by heart, or repeat, to make sure I had not lost something of what was already known; and with the chapters above enumerated I had to learn the whole body of the fine old Scottish Paraphrases, which are good, melodious and forceful verse, and to which, together with the Bible itself, I owe the first cultivation of my ear in sound.

It is strange that of all the pieces of the Bible which my mother thus taught me, that which cost me most to learn, and which was, to my child's mind, chiefly repulsive—the one hundred and nineteenth Psalm—has now become of all the most precious to me in its overflowing and glorious passion of love for the law of God.

Alaska.

What is the moral condition of Alaska? Its religious wants were not neglected by Russia; how have they been met by the United States? The Russian Greek Church had a chapel, several schools, a seminary, seven missionary districts, eleven priests and sixteen deacons in Alaska. The American Church finds it hard to raise the pittance needed to maintain two or three teachers there at this hour. Not long ago, out of a school managed by an American lady in Alaska, a white man captured a girl and when the mother of the girl exhibited her willingness to sell her for twenty blankets the teacher interfered, but the parents insisted on removing the pupil from school and dragged her down to the river, and told her she must take her place in the canoe. The girl drew back and said: "You may kill me, I shall not leave my teacher." And ye you leave that teacher in want of food and shelter, and thus leave hundreds of these pupils—they number nearly hundreds now—to be drawn back into paganism, and drawn down from paganism into something yet more horrible!

The Russian Fur Company spent $6,000 a year to support Christian missions in Alaska, and there were other sources of income there, such that $10,000 a year came from Russia and the Greek Church into this territory for educational and religious enterprises. After Russia left the territory the benevolent schemes of the Greek Church came into our hands as a sacred trust. Gen Howard, sent by our government to investigate the religious condition of this territory, made a powerful appeal to the nation to send teachers and missionaries to Alaska. Roman Catholics have endeavored to take possession of the territory. I believe, however, that all told, there is not more than the sum of $3 000 in all going to Alaska now to promote the religious interests of the territory. We are three times more penurious toward Alaska than Russia was under the Greek Church. (See documents by Rev. Sheldon Jackson, D. D., missionary in Alaska, and editor of the Rocky Mountain Presbyterian, Denver, Col.) The worst tribe in the territory is made up of unprincipled white men among the miners. There are about 70 000 Indians in Alaska, and about 30 000 whites and half breeds. We are not increasing the numbers of the schools, but we are of the population—and of the half breeds!

Charles Sumner's ghost stands on the Pacific coast, and from under the shadows of Mount St Elias points out to us that in Alaska we have the key to the northern Pacific. Seward's spirit hovers along the Aleutian Islands, looking upon us through the smoke of the ten volcanoes that there belch their fire and ashes toward the sky. John Elliot, through the clear northern azure, spreads his hands above the men of the Yukon. When I turn that way I see behind these historic spirits the angel that appeared to one of old, and said: "Come over to Macedonia and help us."—Rev. Joseph Cook, in Daily Advertiser.

War and the Gospel.

Bishop Ellicott, in answer to a letter from the Liverpool Peace Society, defends his vote in favor of the Afghan War. His lordship says that he believes "war to be an element in the Divine government of this present world."

The massacre of the Cheyenne Indians, the massacre of the British officers by the Zulus, and the invasion of Afghanistan, with its attendant sufferings by the natives and the invaders, ought to arrest the attention of the Christian world. If Christianity has no right to speak to governments, civilization might surely be permitted to put in a word.

Our own treatment of the Indians is the root of all the trouble we have with these savage tribes. When God makes a requisition for blood, He will require theirs at our hands, and if nations meet their penalties for wrong, as they must, in this world, we have a terrible reckoning to pay. So when we criticise the British for their disregard of the rights of savages, let us remember that we are as deep in that sort of sin as any people are. We may not claim the right of superior virtue as a title to be censors of others.

We have read the full statement of the grounds on which the British troops were marched into the Zulu territory. The reasons are no justification of war. They would not justify the execution of one human being. It is awful to think of five hundred British officers and soldiers, leaving friends and families at home, going into the interior of Africa, and there to be butchered by savages. But it was war. And these victims of war, for whom and for whose friends we feel such sympathy, were where they had no right, no call to be, and their blood is on the hands of those who sent them into that Aceldama.

Bishop Ellicott may truly say that war is an "element in the Divine government," but that truth is no justification of war waged for conquest by Christian governments against savage tribes. Because we are civilized and Christian and enlightened, and superior to our enemies in knowledge and power, it is our duty to be forbearing and long-suffering and easy to be entreated. We would exhaust all the arts of negotiation before we made war on each other; we ought to be more patient and persuasive when dealing with the unenlightened and barbarous.

It is true that God uses the wrath of man to work his will in the affairs of men. War is one of His engines. But a Bishop cannot show that the invasion of Afghanistan or of Zululand had a particle of Divine wisdom or love in it. Both are human inventions to extend British power in the earth. Good may come out of it. It may be a great good to have the British Empire stretched over every acre of Africa and India. So it might be a good result if the United States government had the sovereignty of every acre in North America. But this will not justify us in driving the savages into the Pacific, and picking a quarrel with the Marquis of Lorne.

Christians in America and British Christians are not doing their whole duty in these things. Governments are so thoroughly under the power of politics and human ambitions that they need to be spoken to by a Christian voice. If Bishops and priests urge them to war, let the church of God speak out bravely against the unrighteous policy. War is always wicked on one side, usually on both. New York Observer.

Dr. Abel Stevens and his Work.

The Central Christian Advocate contains a letter from Bishop Bowman, in which, referring to the incidents of his visit to Geneva, he says:

"On the Sabbath morning after our arrival, late Saturday evening, we were fortunate in finding the American Chapel, and in hearing an excellent sermon from Dr. Abel Stevens. The chapel is simply a hired room capable of accomodating about one hundred and fifty hearers. On this occasion it was a little more than half full of a fine class of people. An interesting Sabbath School preceded the sermon, and at night a crowd was present to enjoy a service of song. We are very happy, after long years of separation, to see and hear Dr. Stevens again. We remember him when, as "the boy preacher," he used to charm and astonish the students and citizens of Wilbraham, and its vicinity. He was then not seventeen years of ago, and this writer a lad of fourteen. Soon after this (1831) young Stevens was a missionary in Texas. In our recent visit to that State, we heard some of the old people relating incidents of his career among them. Then, in a few years he was editor; then author of the famous histories of Methodism and of the Methodist Episcopal Church; then editor again, and then, as a consequence, perhaps, of too protracted labor, an invalid. Now, after many years of searching, he has found a clime congenial to his health, and, in comparative comfort, he is eagerly prosecuting his literary and theological studies and labor, and, at the same time, serving the American Chapel. We are glad to hear him say that a plan had been inaugurated for the erection of a chapel for the use of Americans, similar to the one in Paris. The Doctor seemed to be hopeful of the success of the scheme, and we hope he may not be disappointed. In almost every city in Europe, England provides for its people who may visit them or reside in them. Much good would follow similar provision for our people—good not only to them, but good to the communities where such churches may be planted.

Are we satisfied that Jesus has rent the veil that kept us as sinners from entering the holiest? Then let us go in. Are we satisfied that Jesus has provided a mercy-seat, and by sprinkling it with his own blood, made it a safe and "meeting-place between us and God?" Then let us draw near; "let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Let us come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need."—Dr. H. Bonar, in the Christian Treasury.

THE POET.

One who has a fact for thinking
Poets thought has for verses thinking,
With the light of genius through it
Such a one we call a poet.

With nature's spirit he communes,
And thence imbibes the life that tunes
His power to construe in measures
Nature's charming store of treasures.

If to have some virtues chance be,
They are used in feeding fancy;
And he vies e'en the same,
Work, and yet adds to his fame.

Fancy is the poet's mission;
And upon her airy pinion,
With no reason of her own,
Flies to distant realms unknown

And she, with her fiery eyes
Scanning closely earth and skies,
Sees the beauty they contain
And copies in the poet's brain.

Thus his fancy in confusion,
Gathers it in the sweet conclusion,
Within Nature's happy border,
What his reason sets to order.

G. D. PICKLE.

Stop and Think.

Mr Editor: Can we, as Methodists, allow our schools to sink into ruins? We cannot, if we wish to be true to our vows. Let us read one of them: Will you be subject to the discipline of the church, attend upon its ordinances, and "support its institutions?" Now can any one who wishes to keep this vow made in the sight of God, the angels and men, afford to send their children to a Catholic school, while our own are left without a support? Let every man answer for himself. But, leaving our honor out of the question, can we afford to risk our children in the hands of a church which is bound to use every means within her reach, if happily she may there by lead some poor "dark-minded Protestant" into the marvelous light of "the papacy?" But, you may answer, their catalogues promise that they will not interfere with the religious belief of the pupil. Indeed, but can you believe it? Can a church who claims to be the church, and "the only church that leads to heaven," keep such a promise? Let common sense answer this question. Yea, let every-day history answer, and what does it say? Here in our free country she cries out with a loud voice for liberty of conscience, but in countries where she possesses power she will not permit a Protestant Church to be erected. Is this principle? If so, it is a principle made for the promotion of an interest. It is a principle worked by the "rules of elasticity." He who expects the Church of Rome to keep its promise with a Protestant heretic must have great faith. But you may think me unjust. Well, let her own oracles speak. It is but a few years since when one of their authorized priests declared from the altar, in the town of Franklin, that it would be better if Catholic parents could not send their children to their own schools, to allow them to grow up in ignorance rather than send them to Protestant schools. Shall we blame him for using this language? If so, we blame his church, for he was only carrying out the vows which he took before ordination.

"Heretics, schismatics, and rebels to our said Lord, the Pope, I will, to my power, persecute and oppose. The rights, privileges and authority of our Lord, the Pope, and his successors, I will endeavor to preserve, defend, and increase and advance. I do declare from my heart, and without reservation, that his holiness hath power to depose heretical kings, princes, 'States,' commonwealths and governments, 'all being illegal without his sacred confirmation,' and that they may safely be destroyed. Therefore, I will defend his holiness' rights against 'all usurpers of the heretical or Protestant authority whatsoever.' I do renounce and disown any allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince or 'State' named Protestant, or their inferior magistrates or officers. I do declare the 'doctrines of the name of Protestant to be damnable,' and they are damned and to be damned; and I will do my utmost to 'extirpate the heretical Protestant's doctrine,' and to destroy all their pretended powers, either regal or otherwise." Barrow's Supremacy of the Pope, pp. 42 44 ? Foxes and Fire Brands, by Usher. Baronius, Cat. C'neil, Tom. 10 P 1501 Tom. 11 P. 1566. Now is it reasonable to suppose that the church who requires these promises from her priests will keep her word made to one upon whom the curse of heresy rests? Can she ever be liberal enough to adopt for her motto: Live, and let live? Never!

But I hear some over-charitable brother exclaiming: Do good unto those who hate you! Pray, what do you call doing good? Is helping wicked men to trample out of existence all purity, honesty and truth, doing good? To do good, must we help a few men to take God's word from the many? To do good, must I give my money to men, who with it will break in pieces the scepter of liberty, and erect the ecclesiastical throne of the Pope? To do good, must we send our young men and women out upon the Roman sea of superstition? Oh, that our people were wise. When we throw a straw upon the bosom of the waters we expect it to go with the tide. Yet we send our children into the very hotbeds of Romanism, and expect them to come back to our altars robed in the faith of their fathers. Alas, for our hopes! Some who entered the convent, despising the confessional, are now its most faithful visitors, and hating the faith of their father and mother with a perfect hatred. While still others come home first-class skeptics or infidels, who have made the strongest infidels—men and women who have become disgusted with the foolish legends and arrogant claims of the said church. They measure all other churches by her acts. Then in conclusion, as we cannot send our children to Roman Catholic colleges and convents, and keep our vows made at God's altar, and seeing that the said church can keep inviolate no promise made to a Protestant, and be true to herself, and seeing that the sending of our children to Catholic colleges and convents is detrimental to the soundness of that faith for which so many of our forefathers suffered and bled, and which was preached with such happy results by John Wesley, and handed down to us in trust for those who shall come after, let us resolve that, God being our helper, we will do all in our power to turn the tide of America's youth to those schools where they will hear Christ's doctrines taught in their purity. Oh, Mr. Editor, what an army of faithful Christians we might send out to fight for Jesus, if our people would only do their duty! Lord, help the parents to prepare their children for the fight of faith. Amen.

Yours in Christ,

P. Galvin.

Simsport, La., Feb. 21, 1879.

An Allegory.

I dreamed I stood upon an eminence, which gave me a view of mountains and tree tops in the Eastern horizon; and it was midnight, and as I looked I beheld a sight most beautiful to the eye, which caused, as I thought then, to swell up in my soul a never-failing spring of water, pure, clear and sparkling bright, as the dewdrop on the leaflet, but soft and soothing in its radiance and luster, for it was but the trembling rays of the silvery queen of night, as she first touched with her fairy fingers the topmost peaks of those ice-clad mountains and giants of the forest.

These were beautiful to behold, but became cold and chilly to the senses, compared to the great fountain overflowing with effulgence, when a few hours later the king of day began to rise, in all his splendor, majesty and magnificence, before whose face the cheek of our once loved queen turned pale, and refused to shine.

When these grand panoramic views began to burst upon my astonished vision, then it was that the birds even began to sing for joy, and the whole face of nature seemed to warm itself as it silently, though truthfully, spoke forth the praises of God. It was then my heart, awe struck by the majesty of the scene, touched by these thoughts and visions, and filled to overflowing with gratitude, mutely spoke these words: Praise God! praise God!

Interpretation.—The moon, compared to the sun, is as the friendship which this world bestows, compared to that deeper mysterious friendship or love which the soul enlightened by the spirit of the living God, and filled to overflowing with the "joy which is unspeakable and full of glory," and illumined by the beatific rays of the glorious Sun of Righteousness, experiences, on meeting with those whose every pulse beats in unison with ours, and whose soul communes with our souls.

Query.—If the imperfect communion of soul with soul upon the earth is so far beyond our expectation or ability to explain, or make known, and which sometimes makes us feel as if we were in heaven already, what will it be when the soul, with its celestial body, shall be reunited with those with whom we communed here upon the earth, with the capacity to enjoy that which the Father hath in store for those who love him and do his holy will! What more glorious occupation than basking in the sunlight of the Father's smiles, and enjoying that heaven which costs us so many tears while upon the earth; and having that unbroken communion with our blessed Saviour, and all we love in the glory land, we shall be permitted to sing praises forever more to Him who redeemed us and bought us with his blood. Then throughout all the endless ages of eternity we will be constrained to sing: Praise God! praise God!

From the Work.

CAMDEN, MISSISSIPPI.

Rev. W. D. Dominick, writing February 19, says:

"I am delighted with my new field of labor, Camden, Miss. My people received me with open arms and glad hearts. My stewards will provide liberal things for the pastor, and pay to me that I may enter heartily upon my work, and give myself no concern about temporal things; they will see to that. So I have entered with hearty good will upon my work, and hope to do them good service. May God bless you in your many arduous labors, is my prayer!

MOUNT CARMEL, MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Brethren: We are comfortably situated in our new house to-night. Just four weeks since we resolved to build a parsonage. Where there is a will there is a way. Thanks to the brethren of Mount Carmel and others for their untiring efforts to secure a parsonage for Buffalo circuit.

Family Prayers.

Father, do you pray with your family? Do you every morning and evening collect around you the precious gems of your household? Do you read with them the Word of Life, and, "lifting up holy hands" do you offer up prayer and supplication to God? If you do not, fearful is the responsibility you assume.

It is a lamentable fact that many professing Christians entirely neglect this solemn and imperative duty. They never mention the subject of religion to their children; never thank God for the many inestimable blessings they enjoy; never ask for guidance and direction from on high, to aid them in the fulfillment of the great and important responsibilities involved in the parental relation.

How can you pass along through life professing the religion of Jesus Christ, and never thank God for the blessings bestowed upon you by His bountiful hand? How can you assume responsibilities which run on through eternity in their consequences—responsibilities that involve the dearest and most sacred interests of the souls of your children—and never ask for the grace of God to rest upon them, and for strength and wisdom to guide you in the discharge of your duties?

Very few are aware of the great influence exerted by family worship—by the prayers, earnest and heartfelt prayers, of father and mother. It associates with religion all the sweet memories of childhood, and all the endearments of home. It gives to parental counsel and advice the sanction of religion, and restrains the wayward passions of the soul by the remembrance of a father's care and of a mother's tenderness. It teaches, by example, dependance and reliance upon God, and inspires the soul with longings for a blissful immortality.

"All things whatsoever ye ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive." Blessed, glorious promise! Ask that your family may be an honor and a blessing to society; that they may be loving, faithful and devoted followers of Christ, and believing it shall be granted. Before you go to the labors of the day—to its cares, temptations and anxieties—ask for God's power to uphold you, His counsel to direct you, His Spirit to sanctify you, and His presence to cheer you. And when the shades of evening gather round, when the toils and cares of the day are over, pour out your souls in earnest prayer that God may forgive you, and that He may give you strength for the morrow. Commit your precious charges to Him who is too good to do you wrong, and too wise to err.

Ask that you and your family may be shielded from temptation, and purified in heart, trained for usefulness, enlarged in feeling, holy in aim, contented in circumstances, peaceful in death, and glorified in immortality.—Rev. Walter Fry, in Christian at Work.

For the Journey of Life.

The following rules from the papers of Dr. West, according to this memorandum, are thrown together as general waymarks in the journey of life:

Never ridicule sacred things, or what others may esteem as such, however absurd they may appear to you.

Never show levity when people are engaged in worship.

Never resent a supposed injury, till you know the views and motives of the author of it.

Always take the part of an absent person who may be censured in company, so far as truth and propriety will allow.

Never think worse of another on his differing from you in political and religious subjects.

Never dispute with a man who is more than seventy years of age, nor with a woman, nor any sort of enthusiast.

Never affect to be witty, or to jest so as to hurt the feelings of another.

Say as little as possible of yourself and those who are near you.

Act with cheerfulness without levity.

Never to court the favor of the rich by flattering their vanities or their riches.

Speak with calmness and deliberation on all occasions, especially of those circumstances which tender to irritate.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

Dr Hartwell Vick Smith was born in Greenville county, Va., August 3, 1806. He moved to Alabama when a young man, and settled in Lowndesboro, Lowndes county, where he entered upon, and very successfully prosecuted for many years, the practice of medicine.

On the twenty-eighth of August, 1834, he was married to Caroline E. Lewis—his peer in excellence, and who still survives him—daughter of Francis Lewis, and sister of Hon. Dixon H. Lewis, ex Congressman from this district. From this union sprang a large and interesting family, only two sons and two daughters, however, survive their lamented father. One son, H. L. Smith, is at present a member of the Legislature of this State, now in session.

Dr Smith possessed a very strong native mind, of the old Virginia type, and, in addition to this, he was a man of considerable culture, extensive information and large experience.

As a member of society he occupied a very commanding position. A clear perception, combined with a superior judgment, rendered him a chief counselor in all enterprises pertaining to the financial and moral welfare of the community. His opinion in regard to all intricate and perplexing questions, involving the general interest of either Church or State, was largely sought and very highly esteemed. Well posted in the political as well as religious history of the country, he rarely, if ever, failed to perceive the results and consequences of every movement affecting the country at large long before its culmination.

He was for many years, exactly how long I am unable to state, a professor of religion, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. And no man, with whom it has been my good fortune to be acquainted, ever loved his church more, or took a deeper interest in its welfare. Whatever affected it materially affected him, and at every call he was ready to assist in building up the walls of Zion, and in extending her borders. Although for years he was not permitted, on account of protracted sickness, to attend to the public ministrations of the word, yet in spite of the affliction to which he was subjected, and the attractions of his own beautiful home, he would long in spirit for the house of the Lord, and frequently there would go forth from his inmost soul the exclamation: "How lovely Thy sanctuary, the place where Thine honor dwelleth."

As a steward in the church, he was zealous, effective, and unfaltering in the discharge of all the duties incumbent upon him in that responsible position. For years he was not permitted to meet with the Official Board in person. Never the less, he was deeply interested in all their deliberations, and watched with peculiar interest their every movement. Whenever obstacles, seemingly insurmountable, would arise, and clouds of darkness and gloom brood over the future of the church, a meeting at the residence of Dr. Smith, where his superior judgment and wise counsel could be brought to bear directly upon the problem to be solved, was all that was necessary to overcome all difficulties and secure success. He was always revolving some scheme or enterprise in his mind whereby the financial obligations of his church might be the more easily liquidated. Indeed, he was a model steward.

Religion, as exemplified in his life, was not of a spasmodic, sensational character, but a principle that pervaded his entire being, running through and mellowing down all his thoughts, words and actions. In his conversation he was deeply spiritual, and in his daily walk he evinced much of the power and beauty that exists in the religion of the Lord Jesus.

As his pastor, I visited him frequently, and always felt strengthened and encouraged for having been associated with him in the sacred precincts of his own home; yes, an evening spent in conversation with him has broken many a gloomy spell, and lifted many clouds of despondency. Upon hearing of his feeble physical condition, soon after my arrival here as pastor of this charge, I called to see him, and if I had been a son, instead of a stranger, he could not possibly have thrown his house and heart wider open, and have given me a more cordial greeting. And, from that day until his death, he anticipated my wants, and generously administered to my necessities. Indeed, there are many preachers in this Conference, and some in the regions beyond, who will ever gratefully remember the many acts of kindness and words of good cheer received from our dearly beloved, now sainted brother, Dr. H. V. Smith.

His sickness was protracted through a number of years, and at times he was a great sufferer, but in and through it all he evinced a Christian fortitude seldom equaled. He quietly submitted with Christian resignation to his affliction, and realized much of the comforting influences of the Holy Spirit. Occasionally he would have hours of darkness and despondency, but it would only be for a season, when the sun would burst forth in greater effulgence, and he would be enabled, with greater confidence, to exclaim: "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

Being assured that his end was near, I took advantage of a quiet moment, and intimated to him that, in all probability, he would not recover from his present attack. He remarked that he was fully aware of his condition, and understood his case equally as well, if not better, than did his attending physicians, and that he was satisfied he would not recover. I then asked him if he had any business he would like to arrange. He replied very clearly: "No, I have made all my arrangements, and am ready to live and ready to die." Soon after this he commenced sinking very rapidly, lingered all night, and on the morning of the twenty first of October, 1878, he calmly and peacefully passed away, safely pillowed upon the bosom of Jesus.

Mrs. Ann T Christopher, wife of the Rev. R. G. Christopher, of the Alabama Conference, was born in North Carolina, February 3, 1800. In 1801 her parents moved to Abbeville district, S. C., where she was reared and educated. Early in life she was converted to the Christian religion, and joined the Methodist Church, of which she lived a consistent member until the day of her death. Soon after her marriage to Dr. Christopher, which was in 1822, they moved to Green county, Ala., where they lived for several years; they then moved to Sumter county, Ala. (now Choctaw), where she buried her husband and two children, leaving her four children to rear and educate, to whose interest she devoted the remainder of her life. In December, 1874, she left Alabama and went to LaFayette county, Miss., to spend her last days with her only surviving daughter, Mrs. C. E. Nelson, with whom she had spent nearly her entire widowed life.

She died at the residence of her grandson, Mr. J. C. DeLoach, near Abbeville, Miss., October 21, 1878. Her pilgrimage reached nearly fourscore years, which were devoted to the interest of her church and the moral and intellectual culture of her children. She understood religion theoretically, as well as experimentally and practically. She was not only a student of the Bible, but a student of theology in general. With Wesley, Watson, Clark, Chalmers, she was perfectly familiar, as well as with the modern literature of the age. Being endowed with such a fund of knowledge, her society was sought and appreciated by ministers of all grades. Many of the preachers of the original Alabama Conference, whose eye may chance to fall upon this humble tribute, will recollect their associations with her with great satisfaction. In her religious feelings, she was purely catholic, brought up under the influence of the Baptist Church. While she dissented from many of their views, she always entertained the warmest feelings for that denomination. In her religious life she demonstrated the purity and divinity of the religion of Jesus. She was a "living epistle, known and read of all men." Such a life could not have been otherwise than useful; therefore, her influence was felt upon every grade of society, but nowhere did it yield so much rich fruit as in her own family. Early in life her children were brought into the fold of Christ, and became useful members of society, as well as true church of God. One of them, Mrs. Mary C. Thomson, of precious memory, preceded her to the better land; and, on the tenth of January, 1879, her youngest son, Thomas N. Christopher, joined his sainted mother in the realms of bliss. Though having passed away, she is not lost to society, the church nor her family. "She being dead yet speaketh." It was beautiful indeed to see her mourning the tomb, with her brow wreathed with the rich foliage of a green old age. She never complained, and not a murmur ever fell from her devoted lips.

Mrs. Belle W. Stanard was born in Fayette, Jefferson county, Miss., April 22, 1842. In August of 1850 her parents moved to Baton Rouge, where she was educated, graduating in 1858. In the summer of 1867, under the pastorate of Rev. C. W. Carter, she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was a consistent member up to the time of her death, which occurred at four o'clock in the morning of January 30, 1879. Sister Stanard was a born teacher; and she worked hard as such from 1861 to 1878, or to within eight months of her death, being confined to her bed during those months, suffering intensely all the while, yet invariably patient and uncomplaining.

Sister Stanard was a woman of singularly strong character. Possessed of rare natural abilities of head and heart, she was also a highly cultivated and thoroughly accomplished lady.

Her place as an educator cannot easily be filled, and the community has sustained a heavy loss in the death of one so splendidly endowed and wonderfully useful.

Sister Stanard was warm hearted, generous, gentle, refined and pleasing in her manners. Her friends were of all classes, and every one seemed to love her. She wielded a wide social influence, and did so for that which was right, true and ennobling.

In her home she was the center of attraction and love, and she seemed to live more for her husband, children and sister, than for herself. Thoroughly brave and of unyielding will, she lived on, in their behalf rather than her own, through pain and agony of body, that would have quickly destroyed one of less resolute purpose.

As a Christian, she had a lively interest at all times in the house of God and the prosperity of Zion. Reticent and retiring, she told little as to her own religious state and hopes. She said enough, however, to show beyond doubt that she had made her peace with God, and was well prepared for death. She was visited by Rev. Christian Keener a day or two before she passed home, and also received a letter from Bro. Carter, cheering and comforting and helping her amid her last, trying hours.

Her pastor, who was detained in New Orleans for some time after Conference, arrived in Baton Rouge just in time to perform the last sad rites, amidst the tears and lamentations of loved ones, neighbors, and the entire community. In the cemetery, after it was lowered into the ground, her pupils literally covered her coffin with flowers.

Mrs. Ellen E. Tooke, consort of Thomas B. Tooke, died on the morning of a bright and beautiful Sabbath day, November 24, 1878, at her home near Port Bolivar, La., at the age of fifty-six years, one month and twenty-nine days. Mrs. Tooke was born in Bowling Green, Oglethorpe county, Ga., September 25, 1822, and married November 24, 1839.

Early in life, in the first flush of womanhood, ere the enchantments of giddy pleasure had entangled her affections in the meshes of sin, she sought God, and found his pardoning love in a happy conversion, and at the age of twenty joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. Till death released her soul from its tenement of clay she lived a devoted Christian life, ever setting forth in her example and teachings the principles of our blessed Saviour. When the summons of death came it found her calm and undismayed, though racked by pain and disease. She expressed a happy assurance of her acceptance at God's rich throne of mercy, and at her almost last dying moment said she was not afraid to die, that she was ready and willing to go and be with her Saviour, and those of her loved ones gone before, and that there was no feeling to bind her to earth save the desire to yet be with her family, and especially to live to raise and educate the youngest children. She leaves four tender children, with the grief-stricken father, to mourn her absence from their once happy circle, and four other children, grown and married, who, while they feel the most poignant grief at the loss of a sweet mother, do not miss her loving kindness, a mother's gentle acts of attention and words of devotion, as those do who have been continually about her, every day looking to her for advice or command.

It was the privilege of the writer of this feeble tribute to the memory of one long loved and respected to have known Mrs. Tooke some years since, when she was yet beautiful in maturity dignity. She was gentle and affable in bright sparkling wit, very interestingly brilliant in conversation, that bespoke early culture of heart and mind. Blending with her true refinement and polished manner, was an unmistakable purity of soul, evincing in word and act that devotional piety which so beautifully harmonized with her natural disposition and true womanly principles.

God is just and good. Dear children and sorrowing husband, mourn not as those without hope. There is yet a day in the unfruition of God's wondrous plans, if you live up to those principles of religion, and accept those means of grace which ever lifted the departed one above the stormy trials of life's billowy tide, and at last fitted her for the joys of Heaven.

Mrs E. C Odom, wife of H. P. Odom and daughter of Joseph and A. P. Simms, was born September 17, A. D. 1825, and departed this life at the residence of her son in-law, W. H. Stevenson, January 12, A. D. 1879, aged fifty-three years, four months and one day. She had been for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She gave her heart, with all of its warmest, fondest, tenderest, emotions, to Him who gave Himself for her. She died just as we would expect to see a veteran die—on the battle-ground, with her face toward Jerusalem. Her life was one of marked devotion to the interest of her husband and children, who sadly miss her. Now we miss her busy hands about the household duties of each day, and we miss her in all the relations of life. As an instructor she was guided by the principles of a pure Christian, and in her life she cultivated and practiced all those virtues which ennoble and adorn the female character. Her religion was not of a speculative sentiment, but of a profound moral principle embodied in action. Her faith shone with a mild and steady luster, corresponding with the purity of her life. Our mother desired but little of what are called the pleasures of this world, and we, her children, censure ourselves now that we did not strive harder to gather one garland of cool repose for the tired brow that watched and waited and labored to the end. Her son,

Whereas, The Lord has seen it meet in His inscrutable wisdom and infinite mercy to remove from us our friends, sisters and co-workers, Lena and Lonie; be it

Resolved, That it is with profound sorrow, and with a deep feeling of our loss, that we, the Sunday-school and Missionary Society of Pearlington, offer these resolutions:

Resolved, That their death closes earthly lives of rare purity and usefulness, bringing grief to many, links lost from the circle. They loved the Sunday-school, were prompt in attendance, loving to study from the word of their Heavenly Father—consistent, young disciples of our Lord.

Resolved, That while we mourn our loss we are thankful for the comforting faith to firmly believe they have gone from us to receive the reward that awaiteth all who give their hearts to Jesus while young.

Resolved, That in the death of our young and beloved sisters we truly see how blessed it is to die in the Lord. The force of our Saviour's words: Father, I will, that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me. They have gone to be with Jesus—called from a mortal life to a glorious eternity.

Syrena Leech was born in York district, S. C., March 10, 1803. She professed religion at the age of seventeen, and joined the Presbyterian Church. She was married to Bro. Boyd December 27, 1825. In 1831 she connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1851 she moved with her family to Louisiana. She died suddenly, December 13, 1878. Her end, no doubt, was full of peace, as she had been for many years getting ready for it. She leaves a devoted husband, children and grandchildren to weep over her departure and to bless her memory. Many hearts on this circuit say God bless the bereaved ones.

THE BROWN, BLUE AND GRAY.

BY H. C. PARSONS.

The watchers were weary, and train thoe was nigh,
There was protest and pleading, and tearful good-bye.
We laid the three gently upon the white bed,
And tenderly pillowed each sorrowful head.
The lips were all silent, and soft were the sighs;
The lashes were hiding the beautiful eyes;
On the right lay the dark waves, that rippled with gold,
On the left flowed the silver that never was told;
And the wing of the raven between

The brown eyes said, closing—"I hope you'll be late;"
The blue eyes yet trembled—"How long can you wait?"
The gray, dark with pleading, were closing in prayer;
The hush of His angel was stilling the air.
The brown hands lay crossed and pressed to their place;
The white hands lay lost in the fold of the lace;
In velvet and dimples, the hand that was stirred;
The breath of the sleepers was all that I heard,
And the shriek of the incoming train.

I twice kissed the proud lips—the ruby lips twice
The lips that were pouting I turned to them thrice,
Then hurried forth blind in the pitiless rain,
And into the night on the outgoing train—
But I think when I beat over tresses and bands
All my heart strings were caught by the motionless hands;
For whenever I wait and wherever I roam
They are driving me on, they are drawing me home,
While I dream of the brown, blue and gray.

Solar and Lunar Myths in Mother Goose.

BY JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE, D. D.

A myth has been defined as a thought or feeling or idea turned into history. All human interests, all which moves the soul, or bears on human life has had its apotheosis somewhere and passed into the heavens. Every race has had its gods and its stories about them. Some myths have been derived from Nature—from sun, moon and stars; some from human nature and human life; some from the industries of man. If Phœbus represents the sun, and Artemis the moon, it is evident that Pallas is the apotheosis of wisdom, Eros of love, Aphrodite of beauty, Vulcan of labor, Pluto of the underworld. But of late a school of mythologists has arisen, who wish to derive all the gods in all the religions only from the sun and moon and other celestial phenomena.

Of this school the most conspicuous writer is, perhaps, the Rev. Geo. W. Cox. All the gods, demi-gods, heroes and great men of Greece, India, Egypt are merely personifications of sun, moon and other heavenly bodies. Instead of Hercules, Theseus, Perseus, Achilles, Bellerophon being men, whose legends have been changed to myths, they were nothing but names for the sun. Athene is not wisdom; but the dawn. So is Aphrodite. Hermes means the morning breeze. Hercules and his labors represent the yearly course of the sun. In short, Mr. Cox says that "Perseus, Bellerophon, Heracles, Theseus, Achilles, Apollo, Odysseus, Ligus, Rustem, and a host of others are only different forms of one and the same person, and that the idea of this person has grown out of phrases which described originally the course of the sun in its daily or yearly round."

According to Mr. Cox, the whole story of the Siege of Troy, as told in the "Iliad," is a solar myth. It represents "the daily siege of the east by the solar powers; that are robbed of their brightest treasures, every evening, in the west." "Helen means the dawn." "Paris and the Trojans represent the dark powers of night, who steal the beautiful twilight from the western sky." That Achilles vows not to help the Greeks means that the sun sometimes is concealed behind a cloud. The Myrmidons are the sun's rays. Patroclus is a reflection of the sun. The vengeance of Achilles is the victory of the sun over the clouds. Ulysses means the sun journeying to the west. Thus Achilles is the same as Ulysses. In fact, pretty much everything means the sun, and is the same as everything else. All the events and persons of Greek story are labumder stood phrases, which meant the sun and moon, day and night—the stock of ideas in early times being therefore very limited. The ancestors of the Greeks had, apparently, never seen anything but the sun and moon; indeed, hardly anything except the sun. A very unobserving people, according to Mr. Cox. But, by way of compensation, they had many phrases. If their knowledge was small, their language was abundant. We have only one name for the sun. They called it, says Mr. Cox "Phœbus, Perseus, Theseus, Bellerophon, Heracles, Philoctetes, Achilles, Odysseus, Meleagros, Sigurd, Rustem, and many other names." It has been hitherto thought that language is the child of thought; that, having seen something new, men find a new name for it. By the new mythology thought becomes the child of language. Men have first accumulated a stock of words, out of which they construct Iliads and Odysseys, Greek histories, stories of gods and demi gods, heroes and half heroes. With us, poetry is apt to degenerate into phrases; with them, phrases became glorified into immortal poems. Let us believe this—if we can.

Of course an ingenious person can always find some resemblances in support of sunk theories. Other writers have, in the same way, turned all the history of the Old and New Testament into myths. Abraham is the sun, and Sarah the moon. The twelve patriarchs and the twelve apostles are the twelve signs of the zodiac. David is the rising sun, who kills Goliath, the darkness, though so much larger than himself. A vast deal of ingenuity has been wasted in thus resolving history into mythology.

But these writers, having gone so far, ought to have gone further. They seem to have neglected a very important field. They have left unnoticed the solar and lunar myths which have been embodied in that archaic literature, the songs of Mother Goose. We are sure that it is only necessary to call their attention to this vast domain to arouse all their interest. Therefore, we will merely suggest at present a few striking parallels—far more so, we are bold to say, than those by which Mr. Cox has resolved Achilles and Hector into the sunlight and the shadows.

Let us take the first of these legends which occurs to us:

"Dickory, dickory dock,
The mouse ran up the clock;
The clock struck one, and down she run;
Dickory, dickory dock."

The sun is here compared to a mouse, on account of its silent and quiet motion. Its running up the clock is its ascent in the firmament to the meridian. About one o'clock, and not sooner, you begin to perceive the descent of the sun toward the west, which makes the meaning very obvious. The word "dickory" is probably derived from the Sanskrit darck, to shine; or else from the Sanskrit descnduf, twelve—the ground-form of which is dakan, meaning the twelve hours of the day. (See August Schleicher.)

Take another popular ditty:

"Little boy blue, come blow your horn:
The cows are in the meadow, the sheep in the corn.
Is this the way you tend your sheep,
Under the haystack, fast asleep?"

The "little boy blue" is the small piece of blue sky visible in the west after a storm. The "cows" (according to the well known custom of the Vedas) stand for the clouds, and the sheep for white mists. The meadow is the vast expanse of the heavens. The "blowing the horn" implies the wind coming from the blue sky in the west, to collect the clouds and drive them away. "Haystack" is a common name for mountains of certain shape. The "little boy blue" asleep under the haystack means, of course, the little bit of blue sky just visible at the base of the mountain.

"High diddle, diddle, the cat's in the fiddle;
The cow jumped over the moon.
The little dog laughed to see such sport,
And the dish ran away with the spoon."

This, which is mere nonsense when taken literally, becomes full of meaning when looked at as a picture of the night sky. "The cat" stands for discordant sounds; "the fiddle" for harmonious ones. "The cat in the fiddle" means, therefore, that the harsh sounds of day are swallowed up in the softer harmonies of the night. "The cow jumped over the moon" implies that the cloud (the Vedic cow) has gone above the moon. It is a picture of night like that of Milton, where, speaking of the moon, he says:

"On her face she bowed,
Stooping through many a wandering cloud."

In fact, the two figures are exactly the same. The "little dog" who laughed is, no doubt, "Canis Minor" or Procyon. The meaning of "the dish" running away "with the spoon" becomes apparent when you recollect that the Dipper or Spoon (in the Constellation of the Bear) seems to be continually carried away by the revolution of the hollow "dish" or bowl of the heavens.

The myth of "Jack and Jill" needs no explanation. They are, of course, the sun and the moon climbing the sky. The purpose of their going "to draw a pail of water" shows that the ancient races, among whom this legend originated, already knew that the heat of the sun, when high in the heavens, was the cause of aqueous evaporation; and they naturally supposed that the moon assisted in this operation. They had also observed that the powerful evaporation of a hot day was apt to produce clouds and rain in the afternoon. This they expressed by Jack's falling down (that is, descending toward the west) and losing his crown (crown of rays). Thus we have the picture of the sun shorn of his beams, as he falls among the clouds heaped up around the western horizon, into which clouds the moon (Jill) follows rapidly and also disappears.

The well-known legend "Sing a Song of Sixpence" is plainly both solar and lunar. The "Four and Twenty Blackbirds" are, of course, the twenty-four hours. The pie in which they are baked is the solar and lunar day. The opening of the pie, when "the birds began to sing," is the dawn of the morning. And what more gorgeous dish to set before the King (the sun) than the earth in its morning freshness and beauty? The King "in his parlor, counting out his money," is the sun beholding all the treasures of the earth, which he creates by his beams. "The parlor" is naturally the heavens where he sits. The kitchen where the Queen sits is the night-side of the earth, the Queen being "the Queen of night," or the moon. The "maid, hanging out clothes in the garden," represents the working forces of Nature, which hang leaves, blossoms and fruits on the trees, as their clothing. The little bird which snips off her nose is winter frost, which stops the vegetative process. Q. e. d.

"There was an old woman who lived in a shoe," etc.

"To live in a shoe" means to be perpetually walking or moving—as we now say, "To live in a trunk"—meaning to travel a great deal. The old woman is the earth—mother of all things—therefore, very ancient. Her numerous children are all the products of the earth—all the producers. To some she gives meat and bread; that is, there are summer regions of fertility where all plants find ample nourishment. But the children whom she whips soundly and sends to bed are the northern plants, which are pinched with cold and sent into a long winter's sleep. The perpetual motion of the earth and its great age, indicated by the first line, shows that the ancients had more science than we give them credit for.

These few specimens are probably enough to show the mythical character of Mother Goose as an epitome of Nature-worship. These are the hymns which our parents sang in Central Asia before the Vedic Age.

But, if there is any one who doubts that all the poetry of man consists in a few names of the sun and moon, he may find support in the words of an intelligent writer in a recent number of the Revue des Deux Mondes, who says:

"Shall we deny that there is some grain of truth in the legends concerning the Trojan War? This would be going too far. Thucydides regarded the expedition of the confederate Greeks against Priam as an historic fact. If we cannot wholly discover what historic facts are imbedded in these poetic fables, shall we therefore deny their existence? Besides, the solar and lunar myths offered us in place of the Homeric story are based on very fragile hypotheses and often on a mere verbal error. To believe in the existence and carrying away of Helen is not nearly as difficult as to believe that it means an eclipse of the moon, because the Greek name of the moon and that of Helen have some resemblance to each other. This mania for turning history into myths is in danger of giving us something very unlikely, instead of what is merely incapable of proof. This is not at all in the interest of truth. Better to repose on the soft pillow of uncertainty than to yield to such facile skepticism."

So, perhaps, after all we may have to relinquish the above-given explanations of Mother Goose; though we maintain that they are far more evident than those which Mr. Cox substitutes for Greek history and mythology.—Independent.

RELIGION AND WORKING MEN.—Christianity is the only system that cares for the poor. There are men sometimes who have control over masses of people, and tell them that Christianity is not the poor man's friend. I tell you that what religion has done to civilize this earth has been by being the poor man's friend. Jesus, the great Captain of our salvation, came from above and laid himself down beside us—His great heart of sympathy beside our heart. He came down, and you can not find a man on earth poorer than He was. He had not where to lay His head and from that platform of lowliness, down in the midst of that society, He lays the arms of His humanity beneath the lowest of the low, and the poorest of the poor, and then, rising in the majesty of dominion, He raises mankind up to the throne of God. Blessed be God for such a Saviour, for such a King of salvation, even Jesus Christ the Lord. Now that system cannot fail which omits itself to humanity.—Bishop Simpson.

—The good old Captain Davis, the celebrated navigator, once wrote to Secretary Walsinghom of the conversion of the Red Indians with an open-mindedness quite amusing. He says: "If these people (the Indians of America) were one brought over to the Christian faith, they might soon be brought to relish a more civilized kind of life, and be thereby induced to take off great quantities of our coarser woolen manufactures."

Religious Intelligence.

—The Lutherans of this country will hold a second free Diet this fall.

—The income of the Wesleyan Home Mission Society last year was £35,000, a decrease of £1,104 on the previous year.

—The Northern Presbyterian Church has 12 Synods, 65 Presbyteries, 1 117 ministers and licentiates, 1,873 churches, 114 578 communicants. There were added, last year, on examination 6 375 and on certificate 3,175. These figures show again, during the year, of 2 Presbyteries, 2 ministers, 43 churches and 2 028 members.

—The Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance has completed and published a scheme for the promotion of the study of Christian evidences and Protestant theology by offering facilities for the establishment of classes throughout the country, with examinations to be held in April, when prizes and certificates will be awarded.

—In obedience to the Bishop's order, the choir of the church of the Gesu at Montreal has been reorganized so as to exclude all female singers. The fine music at the late evening services, which begin just as the Protestant congregations are coming out, have always drawn great numbers of Protestants to the Gesu.

—The China Mission of the church of Scotland has, after much difficulty, been successfully launched, and five young men, of whom leave was taken in Glasgow a few days ago, will shortly set forth for that land. These are the first missionaries from the church of Scotland to China. The missionaries have, it is stated, been trained and educated for this work. The Foreign Missionary.

—"Indications," says the New York Evening Post, "multiply that France is inclining toward Protestantism. The latest is to be found in the announcement that the presses of the Imprenatie Nationale at Paris are printing a work in two volumes, edited by M. O Douen, entitled, "Clement Marot and the Huguenot Psalm Book." The editor has been five years in collecting material for this publication, and many persons in Paris are awaiting its appearance with eager interest."

—The Episcopalian, Statistics, as given in the "Church Almanac," are thus summed up: Dioceses, 48; missionary districts (including Africa, China and Japan,) 13; bishops, 63; priests and deacons, 3 207; whole number of clergy, 3,330; parishes, about 2 900; ordinations, 193; candidates for deacon's orders, 220; churches consecrated, 46; baptisms,—infants, 28,883; adults, 9 049; not specified, 6 085; total, 42,054; confirmations, 25,190; communicants, 312,718; marriages, 8,670; burials, 18 945; Sunday school teachers, 28,-362; scholars, 235,555; contributions, $5 788,266 28.

—A correspondent of the Christian Intelligencer writes: "In Milan, Turin, Pisa, Florence, and notably in Rome, I gleaned but one impression—that the Papal Church was fatally and irretrievably losing its hold upon the masses of Italy. An eminent man, who enjoys the friendship of the present Pope, remarks in an article furnished in a late number of the Contemporary Review, that 'if the word Protestant could be accepted as the synonym of anti-Papal, the people of Italy are at the present moment the most Protestant nation in the world.' Go from one cathedral to another, and while you witness the pageant of the ritual, or listen to the richest music, you look about you and wonder at the absence of worshipers. The splendid churches remain, but the spirit which once builded them is gone. They remain, but instead of being thronged with eager worshipers, they are only vast ecclesiastical show-shops, and shrines for the worshipers of art alone. Indeed, they seemed painfully like the mausoleums of a dead faith.

—A Geneva dispatch to the London Times says: "The prompt submission of the curés of Soleure to the law which makes the suffrages of their flocks an indispensable qualification for the holding of a benefice, together with the late elections in the Bernese Jura, is considered to mark the beginning of a new policy on the part of the Vatican, or, rather, the abandonment of the tactics so long persisted in by Pius IX. The Encyclical of November 21st, 1873, expressed disapproval of the election of priests by their congregation, and the faithful were strictly enjoined to take no part therein. So rigorously were these orders obeyed in Geneva that in several instances Liberal Catholic curés have been elected by five or six parishioners, all the others refusing to vote. I am not aware that even yet permission to vote in similar circumstances has been granted to the Catholics of this canton. The question will not arise until the occurrence of another vacancy; but it is not likely that the faithful of Geneva will be differently treated from those of Berne and Soleure, and to all appearance the Culturkampf in Switzerland is in a fair way of being speedily terminated."

—In connection with the testimonials which have been offered to Mr. Spurgeon on his having completed twenty five years of pastoral and public service, the Christian Signal remarks, as a fact significant of the acknowledged usefulness of his ministry, that such papers as the Times, the Daily Telegraph and the Era have published leaders reviewing it, and each has expressed appreciation of his personal fidelity and valuable work, "with the noblest yet not unmerited generosity of thought." Another remarkable fact, and one which is believed to be unprecedented in the history of preaching, is that on the 8th of January Mr Spurgeon published the first sermon of a twenty fifth volume, completing the number of 1 450 sermons, which, after having been preached to large, attentive congregations have gone out through the world to be read at the firesides of all denominations and cheer and instruct the common people wherever the English language is spoken. During the twenty-five years not a report has found currency to diminish the preacher's extended influence. The testimonial has yielded a total sum of $32 500, all of which Mr Spurgeon has given to the widows of the Tabernacle.

FRANCE.—Gospel Work at the Exposition.—Five hundred thousand tracts have been issued from from the windows of the kiosk at the Exposition since May 1, and as two readers may be estimated to each, the Gospel of Christ has been proclaimed to one million individuals, including a great multitude from almost every civilized country in the world. Some of the episodes are reported in the London "Christian" as follows:

"'I have walked some distance,' said a elderly woman, whose neat threadbare dress betokened good taste with slender means, and am tired. I come for a tract. I had one some time ago, and like it much; may I ask another? It was all about Le Bon Jesus. Thanks, thanks!' And she walked to the green bench in front of the Salle Evangelique, cleaned her spectacles, and was soon alone with her Bon Jesus.

"I am a Bulgarian Jew. My friends are Polish Jews. Why, this is Hebrew! and yours?" 'Polish!' they exclaimed, reading the title-page. 'Yes, we will read it.'

"We have had a good sprinkling of Scandinavians lately; they speak thankfully and encouragingly. Some thousands of Jews must be here from Algeria, and not a few from Gibraltar; most read Hebrew, but do not understand it: they prefer Spanish. On Sundays and fete days long files of boys and girls are brought by their teachers. Coachmen often pull up, jump down, and run to us. A French fireman: 'Have read two excellent.' A carriage and pair stopped in front of the kiosk. Two little French girls were brought by their maids. 'We were told to bring the young ladies, and their mamma requested they should each ask for a tract.' They skipped back so delighted. The coachman and footman were not forgotten. 'Ah, I do so love to read those,' an invalid French woman said as she was wheeled away; she coughed and looked so pale, but her lustrous eyes beamed with joy as she began to read. Military officers of high rank often call. 'Our people don't know anything of this,' observed a sunburnt Australian. 'I hope to tell them when I return.' Since my last tracts have been given to persons bound for Africa, Arequipa, Lima, Porto Rico, La Habanas, Angostura, Bogota, Blewfields, Brazil, Paraguay, and different towns on the Orinoco, Esequibo, the Amazon, and La Plata."

CALLING THE FLOWERS.

MARY MAPES DODGE.

The wind is shaking the old dried leaves
That will not quit their hold,
The sun slips under the withered grass
And drives away the cold.

And France says: "How the March wind blows!
Is it scolding? How mad it must be!
When, I blow my horn, I 'll be tender and sweet,
To show that I love them," says she.

"For the flowers and birds are dear little things,
And must not be frightened at all.
So pray, you be quiet, you noisy old wind!—
Perhaps they will come if I call.

"The bees on the hill want water, I know,
And soon I will carry them some;
But first I will blow just as kind as I can,
To tell the sweet flowers they can come."

"Blow low for the blossoms that live in the trees,
And low for the daisies and clover;
But as soft as I can for the violets sly,
Yes softly—and over and over."

—St. Nicholas.

From Our Little Friends.

GREENSBORO, ALA., Feb. 10, 1879.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to you before I thought I would write you a short letter. Mother takes your valuable paper, and I like it very much, especially the Child's Corner. I am twelve years old and go to school—to the Female College. I study dictionary, arithmetic, geography, grammar and Latin. We have a very good Sunday-school here. Mr. J. J. Garrett is our superintendent. We have preaching every Sunday in the Methodist Church. Dr. J. Lewis is our quistor, and we like him very much. We have had very cold weather this winter, but it is warm and pleasant now. I live in the beautiful little town of Greensboro. It contains a population of eighteen hundred inhabitants. There are five churches—the Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopal, also the Baptist and Methodist colored churches. There are four schools. The principal ones are the Southern University and the Female College. I wish often that I could have your paper to read every day, for it has such interesting stories in it. I hope you will publish this letter, as it is the first one I have ever written to the ADVOCATE. For fear this letter will be too long, I will close. Your little friend,

NANNIE L. DEBOIS.

OAK RIDGE, MISS., Jan. 11, 1879.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nearly twelve years old. My grandma takes the ADVOCATE. I love to read the Children's Corner. Mrs. Dove is my Sunday school teacher, and Mr. Dove is our superintendent. Mr. Williams is our pastor. My papa is a Sunday-school teacher.

From your little friend,

MARION HARRIS.

CLAYTON, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: I thought I would write you a letter. I am a little girl ten years old. I can't write much, yet I have been through the third reader six times, spelling-book four times, and can cipher a little. My parents are Methodists; my brothers and sisters are in the church; my father takes your paper, and we all love to read it.

M. C. MCCRANEY.

Letter from Mexico.

The following interesting letter was written to the editor of the Advocate of Missions, by a daughter of Bro. Patterson, Superintendent of our Mexican Mission. Our young friends will be glad to read it.
